During the last year the right hon. Lady has met every challenge by insulting all her allies simultaneously, which is a very odd way for the Prime Minister of a country that has been reduced to weakness to talk. She accused President Kohl and Mr. Genscher of "wriggling" after the last NATO summit. She insulted President Mitterrand repeatedly at some press conferences, as I see the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), recalls. Although she has not yet told us so, it is quite clear that she regards President Bush as an upper class wimp, so wet that one could shoot snipe off him. However, it has not helped Britain, or even the Prime Minister, to add the diplomacy of Alf Garnett to the economics of Arthur Daley. However, that is the twin blessing that she has showered on us in recent years.

As I pointed out in the House the other day, the Prime Minister instructed Mr. Bernard Ingham to tell The Daily Telegraph correspondent that she was going to help Kohl to screw Genscher. Instead, Kohl helped Genscher to screw her, and he did very successfully. I apologise for the word, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but it is Mr. Ingham's, not mine. I should have been infinitely more delicate in referring to the operation that was carried out.

The Prime Minister even rewrote the whole of British history by telling the French this week that they should not be so proud of liberty, equality and fraternity because we first introduced it in Magna Carta. I learnt some history when I was a little boy. My impression was that Magna Carta had been imposed on a wicked British King by the barons. It brought no freedom to the ordinary people of our country. If the ideals of liberty, equality and fraternity existed before the age of enlightenment in 18th century France, I suppose they existed among some members of the Roundhead group in the British civil war, notably among the Levellers.

That has not done the Prime Minister very much good, either. I read this morning, to my horror, that our Prime Minister was booed by the people of Paris when she appeared yesterday at a ceremony to commemorate the rights of man. I suggest that we all write a letter to her, offering our support, as she may find that essential. I understand that tonight the right hon. Lady will be accused by the French Prime Minister on Channel 4 television of what he calls her "social cruelty"—a nice phrase that will figure more often in our debates in the future.

The Prime Minister has isolated herself in Europe, in NATO and in the Commonwealth and has done so at a time of our greatest relative economic weakness. I should like to make a timid suggestion because I want to help the Prime Minister to overcome the problems created by what my Peruvian psychiatrist friend rightly described as—what was it? I have forgotten it, but it will come back in a moment. The Prime Minister would do well to confine her rottweiler politics to her Cabinet colleagues, who are now quite used to the virago intacta and who, in any case, never feel it possible to answer back.

Better still—I am being daring in making the suggestion in the presence of the right hon. Lady's two loyal advocates on the Government Front Bench—would it not be a good idea to let the Foreign Secretary run British foreign policy and to give the Foreign Office a look in? The Box is strangely depleted now and I suspect that that is because three of the civil servants have gone out to divide "Das Kapital" into sections and to find out which particular section justifies the Prime Minister in describing the European Community's social charter as a Marxist document.

What is odd and disturbing about the Prime Minister is her position on Europe and especially on the need for some institutional structure to underpin the open market which she wants and which the Minister of State has told us that she is working so hard to achieve. It is not a wild idea to say that, just as the horrors in Peking, which the House debated yesterday, came about because the freeing of the market was not accompanied by the creation of democratic institutions to regulate and control it, so the freeing of the European market could lead to appalling disturbances and disruptions, unless it is accompanied by institutions capable of regulating and controlling it, of which the proposals in the social charter can undoubtedly be one.

It is now clear that, if the Prime Minister is serious about environmental problems, she must agree that the rich countries should help the poor countries to adopt techniques for, for example, freezing food, which do not involve destroying the ozone layer. If she wants to deal with the drugs problem, the rich countries will have to help the poor countries, which depend on growing crops which produce drugs, to find alternative ways of making a living. There are many such countries in Latin America and in southern Asia.

Until the Prime Minister takes off the rusting and decrepit medieval armour which she loves so much and returns from her time-warp to join us all in the 20th century, Britain will remain, as she has alas become, an irritating irrelevance in world affairs whose importance does not even require a response.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind the House that speeches made between 11.30 and 1 o'clock must not exceed 10 minutes in length.

Mr. Edward Heath (Old Bexley and Sidcup): I was able to say a few words yesterday about the Chinese question, and I am grateful to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for calling me today. I will, indeed, be brief.

Before I leave the subject of China, I should like to refer to a statement made by the Under-Secretary of State who replied to yesterday's debate—that we must go slowly and find out the views of the people of Hong Hong. We are past that stage now. Nobody with any deep acquaintance of Hong Kong and nobody on the spot doubts for one moment that the people of Hong Kong want to move faster towards the democratisation of the colony. Clearly, saying that we must go slowly and find out their views does not answer our point.

I want to make two points on Europe, which are tied up with what the right hon. Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey) has been saying. I have had the opportunity in public in the past few weeks of making known my views on the European position, and I shall not follow the right hon. Gentleman in several of the points that he made. First, we are hearing a great deal about the Council of Europe at Strasbourg, which many of our colleagues in the Community treat as a further weakening of our attitude towards the Community. Perhaps that is because this is the Council's 40th anniversary. It achieved useful work, especially in relation to human rights, during its early years, but it was formed as a forum for discussion and nothing more. It has never been able to fulfil any other purpose than being a useful forum for discussion. We used it when we discussed the future membership of the Community.

The Prime Minister has praised the Council continuously in her answers to questions. Again, that raises doubt in people's minds about whether the British Government want to weaken the Community rather than to strengthen it. I want to make it absolutely plain from my point of view—and, I think, from that of many people in the country—that the Council of Europe is no substitute in any way for anything which the European Council does——

Mrs. Chalker indicated assent.

Mr. Heath: I am glad to have the endorsement of the Minister of State. I know that my right hon. Friend strongly supports the development of the Community. I am pointing out the reaction in the Community, with which I am always in touch, to what is said when my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister warmly welcomes the Council at Strasbourg in three successive weeks and, in answers to questions here from Labour Members, says, "Yes, of course, it is a splendid organisation, doing much better work." I want to make that point clear, in view of our relations with our Community colleagues.

My second point relates to the development of Europe. Looking back on the past two years, one sees that it has changed with bewildering rapidity. As the right hon. Member for Leeds, East has said, many of the questions are open ones. At the moment we can give answers to some of them, and I should like to try to do so briefly.

The first question relates to our attitude towards Austria—and, as the right hon. Member for Leeds, East mentioned, to Sweden and Finland also. My view is that, until the end of 1992, the Community has all that it can manage to handle when dealing with achieving the open market by 1992. I have spent five years in negotiations in the Community and I know the burden that that places on everybody, from Foreign Office Ministers downwards, when trying to reach agreement about a future member of the Community. Therefore, it is not practically possible for the Community also to handle questions such as the admission of Austria, Finland or Sweden.

Secondly, Austria is bound by the treaty of 1955. I know of no indication from Mr. Gorbachev that he is prepared to waive that treaty and to allow Austria to become a member of the European Community.

Thirdly, I do not believe that, from the point of view of the Community after 1992, we can admit neutral members. Therefore, we must ask whether Austria is prepared to give up neutrality to come into the Community, even if the Soviet Union would allow it? Having been in close touch with those in authority in Austria, I must report that I have had no indication that Austria is prepared to give up neutrality.

The same thing applies to Sweden and Finland. When the right hon. Member for Leeds, East asked whether the solution was the Finlandisation of eastern Europe, I must reply that Finland has existed, under skilful political manoeuvring, in its present position because it has acted without upsetting the Soviet Union and without becoming fully tied into the European Community.

Mr. Healey: Ireland is a neutral country by its own choice, and that has not prevented it from joining the Community, being welcomed there or taking part in all its discussions.

Mr. Heath: Of course, it was part of our negotiations. Ireland is the exception that proves the rule. Most of us hoped that, when we became a member of the Community with Northern Ireland, like the Republic of Ireland, the Republic's attitude towards the common defence of Europe would change. I still believe that there is a possibility of that happening, but it has not happened so far.

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Heath: I am sorry, but I shall not give way because I must be brief. If it were not for that, I would gladly give way, because the hon. Gentleman used to be a very strong supporter of European policy.

Looking still further east, I do not believe that there is evidence to make us work on the basis that Poland or Hungary, let alone Czechoslovakia, is in a position to seek membership of the European Community. For all Mr. Gorbachev's policies, is he prepared to see the break-up of the Soviet empire? I do not think so for one moment. Of course, I am strongly in favour of having a proper working relationship between East and West—we did a great deal to achieve that, from the first test ban treaty in 1963 onwards. I do not believe that Mr. Gorbachev is prepared to see the break-up of the Soviet empire, with those countries becoming members of the European Community when the Soviet Union is not.

It is becoming fashionable to say that Europe should go as far as the Urals. That raises an additional problem: what happens east of the Urals? Will that be the remaining Soviet Union? Will the Soviet Union break from east of the Urals? These are hard, practical questions. The idea is completely unrealistic. It gives everyone the impression that we want to abandon the treaties that we have signed and weaken the Community. Anyone who looks at a map knows that this is the utmost nonsense from beginning to end.

Our task is to make a success of 1992; then other countries that are prepared to become full members of the Community can do so. So long as the Soviet Union exists, I do not believe that Sweden, Finland or Switzerland will regard themselves as able to join—Austria may want the best of both worlds,b but I do not believe that it is possible for it to have it.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of State used a word with which I am not familiar and which I cannot pronounce, but she said that it meant that we will go on doing everything we can. I am afraid that my view differs. A deep difference of philosophy exists. Our attitude in other aspects of international relations is that if we can do anything together, it is better to do it together. This is why the public have lost confidence in us, as evidenced in the Euro-elections. They ask, "Why be in a minority of one?"

For example, why be in a minority about the notices setting out the dangers of smoking? Common notices would simplify the manufacturers' job, and that fits in with the rest of our philosophy. Why should they not be allowed to have such notices, or be told to have them? Public opinion is increasingly in favour of persuading people not to smoke. There is a big lobby, about which I am getting many letters, saying that smoking should be forbidden in Whitehall offices and that people should be able to work without being interfered with by smoking. We can take a legal view—even if it is not justifiable—that this action cannot be taken by the Community, but if it is a benefit to everyone, why not take it?

Exactly the same thing applies to languages. Our children desperately need more languages. Why do we say that this cannot be done by the Community but not do it ourselves? This is an extraordinarily extreme, legalistic bureaucratic approach. We are the bureaucrats, not the Community which is trying to achieve this aim. The same thing applies to cards for pensioners so that they can get their benefits wherever they go in Europe. That is what ordinary people want. They want to be able to get the benefits of Community life. Why should we stop it? The public do not understand why, as emerged clearly in the Euro-elections. The Government were obstructive, bureaucratic, rigid and dogmatic and we were not getting the benefits offered to us. The general public could not see anything more foolish than that.

There is a difference of philosophy. I hope that my right hon. Friend the Minister of State will pursue her real belief that we should work together inside the Community to the utmost extent and not take a dogmatic line that makes us say that, if something does not happen to fit in with one or two views in Government, we should not follow it. We should be clear what our scope can be in the future, certainly until 1992, and by then, no doubt, the international picture of what will happen between East and West will be clearer.

11.35 am

Sir Russell Johnston (Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber): Yesterday's debate on Hong Kong and China was rather sad—perhaps it would be better to say that it was "realistic", because that it the fashionable word to use. It harshly displayed where we now stand—something on which the right hon. Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey) touched. It showed that our country, which recently—certainly within the memory of most hon. Members in the Chamber—dominated the world, is largely impotent and notably lacking in generosity. The rising sap of Empire has become like a dribble of spittle from the corner of an old man's mouth.

Even little poverty-stricken Portugal demonstrates greater responsibility towards its citizens in Macao, yet, after listening to the Minister of State, I believe that we still seem capable of remarkable self-deceit. The picture that she painted—she does it so well, persuasively and nicely—of a progressive, forward-looking Britain, leading policy in the European Community and in the world at large and widely admired by everyone, is one that I fail to recognise.

In the short time that I have to speak, I should like to touch on a few matters to which we could, in co-operation, make a more positive contribution.

I must point out that, although appeals were made to the Front Benchers as well as to ordinary mortals, the Minister took 34 minutes and the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) took 35. It seems a bit hard for the rest of us, even if we speak for a party, to get 10 minutes.

I should like to say a last word on Hong Kong. Yesterday, the debate did not address the question of what we will do if, at the agreed time of handover in 1997, events similar to, or worse than, the massacres in Peking are taking place. If contingencies are to be discussed with other Ministers in the Council of Ministers, they should consider what we would do if it were unthinkable that the handover should take place when it was supposed to take place.

I should like to refer also to our position in the European Community. It is difficult to add much to what was said so effectively by the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) and the hon. Member for Hamilton. It is certainly a travesty of the truth to suggest that the United Kingdom is taking a lead. We are following in economic respects, kicking and struggling against Delors, who is backed by the French and Germans, in our response to the social charter, and in our ideas on regional and social policy. We are isolated and we are not being terribly diplomatic. I shall not go over again the remarks that the Prime Minister has made about the French revolution, but they were hardly diplomatic.

The hon. Member for Hamilton mentioned President Gorbachev's speech in Strasbourg a week ago yesterday. I heard that exciting speech. Having heard the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup, I should like the Minister to say something about what the Government think the Council of Europe should do. It is a perfectly fair question. Apart from its work in human rights, which is largely the work of the court, there is its work in culture, which is useful. It also appears to be now developing a role in making a bridge across the iron curtain. It is possible for Hungary to become a member of the Council of Europe. It will not be possible for a long time yet for Hungary to become a member of the European Community or to leave the Warsaw pact, but it is possible for Hungary, Poland and others and, if the process accelerates, even the Soviet Union itself, to join the Council of Europe, as Mr. Gorbachev said. That is a role that the Council of Europe may fulfil and I would like to know the Government's view. If the Council of Europe is to have such a role, it will need a higher profile and more money, as it has none at present.

Mr. Gorbachev's speech was less encouraging in one respect, which was that it emphasised the limitations of interference in state powers and the fact that a limitation of state powers was inadmissible. In other words, he was against interference in domestic affairs. However, with human rights, there is no such thing as other people's business. The fate of the Turks in Bulgaria, the Hungarians in Romania and the Kurds are all our business. I would like the Minister to describe the Government's view on that.

The Government could have said that we would not sell the Hawks. I do not know what further deep discussions are necessary. We all know what Hawks can do or not do and the argument about whether they can be used only as trainers or in other roles. I would have thought that it was generally agreed that they could be used in other roles.

Mr. Gorbachev has pointed to the great potential of the United Nations now that the Russians co-operate fully. The right hon. Member for Leeds, East referred to that. We have a chance to develop peace-keeping forces that will be more effective than the United Nations force has managed to be in southern Lebanon. The Government have not been very supportive of the United Nations. When are we going back into the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation? It is about time that we did.

What are the Government doing to further the concept of an international conference on the middle east? I know that the Minister takes a steady, sound and sensible view of the middle east. I want to refer briefly to the death of Moshe Kol, of whom many may not have heard. He was one of the founding fathers of the state of Israel and a former leader of the Israeli Liberal party. He was a man with a great commitment to pluralism and he represented the good, positive side of Israeli politics, which is in retreat at present, although it is still there—if hard pressed.

I also want to pay tribute to another individual who is about to leave the political scene and whose example of high courage has been an inspiration to many. I refer to Mrs. Helen Suzman, who has served for a long time in the Cape Town Parliament and who will shortly cease to sit where she has so consistently and bravely attacked apartheid. What is the Government's present relationship with the Commonwealth on the degree of pressure to be applied to South Africa to bring about the end of apartheid? What role are the Government playing in the difficult, but hopeful, negotiations which will follow the ceasefire in the Angolan civil war? There is still a wide gulf between the view of President Dos Santos from Luanda that the rebels should be absorbed and President Savimbi's view that there should be an interim Government and free elections. As we are in favour of pluralism, I imagine that we are working to further the latter view, and I would like to know the position.

I am afraid that my time has all but run out and I hate to be told to sit down, Mr. Deputy Speaker, although fortunately that does not often happen. I want to conclude by myself by saying that the right hon. Members for Leeds, East and for Old Bexley and Sidcup, in different ways, were both wholly right in saying that the way forward for this country is not to go round shouting about nationalism, but to develop a real community sense within the European Community and to make the fullest possible contribution to the international agencies, many of which we have sadly shunned in the past.

Mr. Robert Rhodes James (Cambridge): It is always a pleasure to follow the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston): I agree with him strongly on one point. I attended virtually the whole of yesterday's debate, and I agree that it was a sad debate. To add a footnote, I am extremely grateful to the Government for responding to the application made by me and other hon. Members that Chinese students should have their visas extended for six months, which at least gives a breathing space. There is also a private fund, for which Sir Alec Cairncross is responsible. I ask my right hon. and hon. Friends whether, if the need arises, the Government will consider contributing to that fund. I know that many of my own students in Cambridge are under severe financial difficulties.

I agree with the right hon. Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey) that we do not debate foreign affairs very often. I recall when I first came here in 1955, in a different capacity, that one of the great features, apart from episodes such as Suez, was that there was virtual agreement between the parties on foreign affairs and defence. A signal example of that is the approach to Namibia. Resolution 435 was passed under a Labour Government and was supported by the Conservative party in opposition. The present Opposition, and especially the hon. Member for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson), have strongly supported the Government throughout the process, which we hope will end happily. There are still difficulties, and I have real apprehensions about intimidation in the elections, but I am still optimistic that the Rhodesia-Zimbabwe experience will be important. I would welcome warmly Namibia's arrival in the Commonwealth.

I want to concentrate on the middle east, where we are dealing with a rapidly changing scene. The adage about a week being a long time in politics has particular reference to this week, because the position now is different from the position on Monday. The new conditions on the elections of Palestinians imposed by Likud must be regarded as a major setback, although I do not regard it as disastrous. None the less, the process has begun and must be encouraged. I do not share in the criticism of my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary for meeting yesterday Mr. Bassam Abu Sharif of the Palestine Liberation Organisation. However, I understand the concern it has caused in certain quarters. When we talk about Israel, I hope that we do not give the impression of interfering in the internal affairs of a friendly country. I much regretted the remark of the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson), who described the democratically elected leaders of a friendly country as "deluded bigots". Such language coming from a party spokesman is helpful to no one.

There is a long record of British involvement in the Jewish national home and in Israel. One thinks of people such as Arthur Balfour, Churchill and Victor Cazalet. That friendship is enduring and durable. However, it also often requires considerable patience as well as understanding. I was struck by the final words of my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) in yesterday's debate. He was referring to Hong Kong, but his wise words have great relevance to the middle east.

"Let us be open and frank. We now face the most difficult task in politics: to remain patient in unknown circumstances that we cannot control and to which we can see no immediate answer."—[Official Report, 13 July 1989; Vol. 156, c. 1183.]

Our role with Israel is to encourage and to praise as well as to warn and to criticise. There is much about which to warn and much to criticise, but I hope that the people of Israel of all parties, not necessarily the Government, will recognise that in this country there is not only a tradition of support and friendship which goes far beyond the Jewish community and which I call the wider diaspora, but a desire and belief that that nation should and must succeed.

There may be dismay at particular actions and deep unhappiness about certain aspects of current policy, but the deep friendship is there and surely we are entitled to look not only at the area as a whole and to our friends in the Arab world, but to our friends in Israel and to exercise our right as friends to warn and criticise but also to encourage and praise.

11.50 am

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody (Crewe and Nantwich): I, too, propose to refer to the middle east, although the hon. Members' references to important aspects of European policy have been of considerable interest to me. Many of us regard the Community's attitude towards foreign affairs as one of its most interesting and perhaps one of its most defensible aspects.

When we discuss difficult questions such as the middle east, in this democratically elected Parliament, it is tremendously important that we remember that Israel is also a democratic state. In recent years we seem to have grown into the habit of holding forth about the difficulties of the Israeli Government without making it clear that we understand that Israel has always remained faithful to its democratic traditions. The Government party elects parliamentarians, which cannot be said of many other parties in the world. The party has also criticised many internal decisions, and the action of the Israeli Labour party, in seeking to debate in considerable detail the decision by Likud to limit the negotiating position of the Government, shows some of the best aspects of democracy at work. The Labour party is anxious not to destabilise the Government, but it cannot accept limitations on negotiating positions vis-a-vis its Arab opposite numbers.

Sometimes, in our anxiety to promote peace in the middle east, we seem to represent the PLO as the only democratic organisation. In fact, it is manifestly nothing of the kind, and the very welcome statement about the acceptance of the right of the Israeli state to exist has not been confirmed by the Palestine Council as a whole. In such circumstances, it would be helpful if this Parliament occasionally made it clear that we reject violence wherever it comes from. Those on both sides of the debate must accept that. It is true that we have seen more of what happens in the Israeli controlled territories, but my hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) described the truly terrifying situation in which the Kurds in Iraq find themselves. He made it clear that one of the things that distressed him most before he was able to visit the camps was a television programme about the effects of the use of poisoned gases on the Kurdish people. But it is fairly unusual for that problem to be dealt with in the media. Although the appalling genocide against the Kurds is debated from time to time, media coverage is neither constant nor clear, and the reason is very simple. Whereas it is possible to get pictures and comment from Israel, it is not easy to get such comment from Iraq or the surrounding states. That is an important point.

One of the strengths of the Israeli people has always been their openness. Their openness in debating their internal problems can be disastrous. I admire the fact that, when the Israelis have a problem with their army personnel, for example, they make it clear that they propose to take action against the person involved. They have courts martial and open control of their army representatives. That is the right way to proceed. I hope that, in similar circumstances, we would have the same degree of openness in the United Kingdom, although I am not sure that we would. I should like to think that that was how democratic states dealt with problems presented by internal disturbances.

None of that means that we should not have considerable reservations from time to time about the actions of Israeli political parties. It is precisely because the Israelis have a democratic system and a political divide that we can support those of our own political persuasions and those who support the democratic system. That is what we do and what we shall always do. It is most important that Britain, above all, should not be seen to be supporting only the PLO.

The opportunity exists to open talks. I would welcome the development of an electoral system in the West Bank and Gaza, but that can happen only when Arab candidates are allowed to come forward in safety and offer themselves for election. To that end, it is important that the Israeli Government do not impose preconditions on the negotiations. It is equally important that the PLO makes it clear that it will cease any form of physical attack against its own people if they offer themselves as candidates in an election. Only when the deaths cease will we begin to believe that the PLO wants to move towards some form of electoral representation capable of negotiating with the Israeli Government. There is a window of hope, but it is very small, and any action on either side that makes it more difficult to proceed will be savagely damaging.

The British have a particular role to play in the discussion. We should not always appear to be openly critical and not encouraging. We should not always highlight violence on one side and not on the other. Above all, we should say that, as elected representatives of a country with democratic traditions, we support an electoral system in which political power changes hands side to side at the wish of the electorate, and not at the wish of those who seek to dominate by the power of the gun. We should understand that those are the traditions that Israel seeks to support and encourage Israel to come to the negotiating table. We should not say, "You must agree to these conditions" or seek to lay down preconditions in talks with the large nations such as the United States and the Soviet Union. We should simply say to the Israelis, "You have a great deal of which to be proud. Do not retreat into the laager and give more power to your enemies who will then suggest that you have abandoned all that is best and most powerful in your tradition."

[Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody]

The middle east is a vital area, and it is essential that we should support the democratic and properly elected representatives who can negotiate the peace settlement that we all seek.

11.58 am

Mr. Robert Hicks (Cornwall, South East): I am afraid that constraints of time prevent me from responding to the various observations about our membership of the European Community. I think that it is true that some Conservative Members are disappointed about certain aspects of the stance of the British Government on our membership of the Community. Certainly, this was the case in the recent European elections.

I shall speak this morning about the situation in the middle east. Before discussing the conflict in general terms, I shall make a few remarks about United Kingdom bilateral relations with a number of countries in the region. Earlier this year, four members of Parliament visited the Yemen Arab Republic, North Yemen, and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, frequently called South Yemen or Aden. The PDRY, is the only Marxist Moslem state. Its economy is weak and it is a poor country by any standards. Hitherto, it has had close political ties with the Soviet bloc. However, there are signs that the PDRY is anxious to improve political relations with the West. For example, it is talking to the United States through a third country.

This change of emphasis is in part due to the change in leadership that has occurred in the Kremlin. In the Brezhnev era, there was a far cosier relationship than there is now, under Mr. Gorbachev. Incidentally, the same change in emphasis was also apparent when I visited Syria last October. Leaders of countries such as Syria, the PDRY and the Yemen Arab Republic no longer enjoy the automatic confidence and support of the Soviet leadership, whether it is manifested in political or economic terms.

I hope that the United Kingdom will respond positively to any favourable signals emanating from the PDRY. Any improvements in such relationships will be modest. We are talking about increasing the number of English language teachers, providing more student places in our universities for people from South Yemen and possibly helping tangibly to develop their agriculture. It is not without significance that, all through the period of difficult relationships with that country, following our withdrawal in 1968, British Petroleum continued to assist the state refining company.

The country now has mineral wealth, with high quality marble that is undeveloped, and it will need help from the West to develop it. There is also oil. The geographical location of the oilfield is significant, because it extends across the frontier into South Yemen, and the two countries, which until recently were at loggerheads, have formed a joint company for its development. Parallel to this commercial development between the two is the establishment of joint commissions at governmental level. These new arrangements are still in their infancy, but the United Kingdom should take a close interest in this development.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary visited San'a earlier this year. From the remarks made to us, I know that his visit was much appreciated, and there was universal agreement about its success. However, we cannot and must not rest on our laurels. North Yemen is very much flavour of the month as a destination for international statesmen and Ministers. The country has recently joined Egypt, Iraq and Jordan in forming a regional economic group. This relationship could have significant implications, and it is important that Britain should become as involved as it can with this development.

Our relationship with Iran has not yet been discussed this morning. As the House will know, I was one of five parliamentarians who visited Tehran some 13 months ago. During last summer and autumn, some improvements took place in our relationship with that country, because there was evidence that Iran was anxious, after eight years of Islamic revolution, and almost an equivalent time when it was at war with Iraq, to rebuild some bridges with the United Kingdom. We then had the Salman Rushdie affair, and our Government's decision to withdraw our presence from Iran. In other words, we were back to square one.

Since then, there has been the death of the Ayatollah. Contrary to some pessimistic predictions, the situation in Iran has not deteriorated as some thought that it would. There is probably an intense power struggle going on, but there are strong signs that Mr. Speaker Rafsanjani may emerge as the new president with executive powers, including power of co-ordination of the various sectors and groupings. If this is the case, and he decides to follow a more pragmatic approach, including a desire for better relationships with the West and the United Kingdom, I hope that the Foreign Office will not pursue an unnecessarily cautious line. Iran is a regional power occupying an important geographical position. It has considerable economic potential and we must not forget the implications of our overall relationship with Iran in the context of the three British hostages held in Beirut and Mr. Roger Cooper, in gaol in Tehran.

Earlier this year, I became a little more optimistic about the overall situation in the middle east. Since the cessation of hostilities between Iran and Iraq, this peace has held, although it is a little fragile at times. In doing so, it has removed a major source of instability in the region. Egypt now enjoys a much better relationship with its Arab neighbours—a crucial factor in the jigsaw. The Soviet Union under Mr. Gorbachev has shown its willingness to undertake a more constructive role. Finally, the United States at least appears to have accepted—perhaps reluctantly—the principle that an international peace conference under the auspices of the United Nations might provide the most appropriate framework for negotiations to take place between the interested parties.

It is worth reminding ourselves of the objectives of any peace negotiations involving Israel and the Arab world, and the Palestinians in particular. A declaration at the recent Madrid summit confirmed the policy of the Twelve in respect of the middle east conflict, as defined in the Venice declaration. It includes, rightly, the upholding of the right to security of all states in the region, including Israel, and the right to live in secure, recognised and guaranteed frontiers. It also——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is encroaching on the time of other hon. Members.

12.9 pm

Mr. Robert Hughes (Aberdeen, North): We would like to debate many issues, one being the issue of Cambodia where there is a great threat and a great fear that the Khmer Rouge may once again inflict terror. I hope that the Minister will let us know how the Government view the Khmer Rouge and whether they stick by their proposition that it should have no future part to play in Cambodia.

I shall devote most of my speech to southern Africa, because there is some optimism that there might be peace and stability in that region. In Angola, there appears to be some rapprochement between the MPLA Government and UNITA. If the United States and South Africa have finally withdrawn their military, financial and strategic support for UNITA, there is some possibility of progress. The same is true in Mozambique, where there is a possibility of discussions between the Frelimo Government and the MNR. The key is that the South Africans must totally withdraw their support. In Namibia, the independence process is under way, and we are all hopeful that there will be independence under resolution 435.

There are still major concerns which are shared by the United Nations, the Security Council, and even by the Government, that intimidation is still being carried out by the South Africa Kovoet forces. More ominously, there are now reports of UNITA personnel acting with Kovoet and harassing and intimidating people in northern Namibia. The Government must look closely at that and investigate it to make sure that the situation is cleared up.

The current mood over South Africa is optimistic. I know of no other oppressive regime that has more defenders and more apologists. I know of no other such country that has been given more chances. No other repressive regime has had more money directed to it in order to allow it to continue in its wicked ways. The investment is made under the pretext that more investment will bring about change. People who believe that are naive enough to believe that if a tiger is fed more and more meat, one day it will turn into a vegetarian.

Whenever there is an element of change, it is met with euphoric headlines. The big bang of change is said to be upon us. We had P. W. Botha's crossing-the-Rubicon speech, and now we have the five-year plan put forward by F. W. de Klerk. Any objective examination of that reveals it to be a most disappointing document. It does not even begin to measure up to the challenge of a free and democratic non-racial South Africa. The truth is that F. W. de Klerk is nothing more than a P. W. Botha clone. The face presented to the West is genial, and the words are honeyed and sweet, but the face looking inwards to the republic is the stern face of harsh repression. It is the continued state of emergency and the continuing killing and the banning of all legitimate political activity. It is state terror and oppression, and there is now the new terror of paramilitary oppression and the assassination of anti-apartheid activists.

Nothing so far in South Africa shows any sign of real progress. The five-year plan forms the basis of the National party's manifesto. Yesterday, I had a discussion on the radio with the hon. Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle), who sought to excuse the paucity of ideas by saying that the leader of the National party was only the President-in-waiting and not the President. People say that, because of that five-year programme, major change is on the way. For greater accuracy, the Library got a copy from the South African embassy. It says:

> "The National party will, within the next five years . . . seek agreement among leaders on a more just and meaningful basis on which groups may be defined for political participation;".

What on earth does that mean? The only clue that we have is from a National party MP called Boy Geldenhuys. He said that apartheid is now being replaced by differentiation. That is playing with words, and is absolute nonsense.

The only way to make real progress is for South Africa to accept that there is only one group on which it can base integration and a truly democratic society. South Africans, irrespective of race, class, creed or colour must be allowed to participate, and that is the only way forward. If South Africa would take that bold step, we could begin to see the binding together of the nation. Apartheid cannot be modified, reformed, or adapted; it must be changed.

People say that meaningful negotiations are in prospect. Everyone who has taken an interest in South Africa for many decades wants a negotiated and peaceful settlement. No one says that there should be any other way. If there are to be proper and meaningful discussions, some pre-conditions must be met. Those have been made clear many times to the British Government. On Wednesday, they were made clear to the Prime Minister when she met Mrs. Albertina Sisulu and representatives of the United Democratic Front. I welcomed that meeting, and I hope that during it the Prime Minister learned some humility from their demeanour, their intelligence and the way in which the United Democratic Front is approaching matters. She has much to learn.

The first pre-condition is that Nelson Mandela and all the other political prisoners in South Africa must be released unconditionally. The state of emergency must be lifted and all the banned organisations must be legalised. The restrictions on political freedom must be lifted, and there must be the right of free assembly and discussion. Above all, the military must be removed from the townships.

There has been much speculation about Nelson Mandela's meeting last weekend with P. W. Botha. The statement was issued second-hand, and it is a pity that Mr. Mandela cannot make a public statement himself. He has made it clear that the people of South Africa must be properly engaged in the process of negotiation. Settlement cannot be imposed by the white-dominated Government. He has made it clear that the African National Congress and the UDF and all the other parties must be involved in the discussions.

Mr. Anderson: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Hughes: No, I have only 10 minutes.

How can we influence events from outside? External pressure is important and forms part of the struggle of people in South Africa. There must be more pressure because South Africa does not shift without pressure. Anyone who believes that the Namibian settlement was reached because the South Africans suddenly changed their minds, has never looked at realities. South Africa decided to move on resolution 435 because of the cost of military pressure. In a sense, it is the Vietnam syndrome. White conscripts were sent back with limbs missing, or otherwise badly injured and sometimes in coffins, and that made the white South Africans realise the price that they were paying. The economic and military pressure has made them change. F. W. de Klerk's visit to Britain had nothing to do with promoting the five-year plan. It had to do with defending South Africa's economy, which is in major difficulties. It faces debt rescheduling and problems about overseas debt repayments.

The apologists for South Africans say that sanctions play no part, but the facts prove otherwise. The five-year plan makes, that pefectly clear when it says:

"Adversities such as the worst drought in living memory, a prolonged slump in the gold price and the most vicious international attempt—over more than two decades—to destroy the South African economy by boycotts, sanctions and disinvestment, having strained the economy of the country and of every business and household."

There we have it, from the horse's mouth. Sanctions are having an effect, are important, and must continue to be imposed.

The whole of southern Africa is an area of immense riches in material and people, and the time for it to be developed in the interests of its people is long overdue. If only people would recognise the great promise that it holds for the future and the fact that the African National Congress, the United Democratic Front and all the people who stand for free and truly democratic non-racial society should be accepted as partners and equals, the enormous potential of that area could be enjoyed by all its people.

Mr. George Gardiner (Reigate): When my right hon. Friend the Minister of State opened the debate she rightly drew our attention to political changes of a kind that few of us dared to pray for and that are occurring in many countries and continents, most notably in central and eastern Europe. I was glad that she devoted part of her speech to developments in southern Africa because immense changes are taking place there, too.

I do not share the view of the hon. Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes). I believe that never has the opportunity to resolve conflicts across the troubled continent of Africa been greater than today. The starting point was almost certainly President Gorbachev's recognition that promoting the armed struggle with Soviet arms, funds and advisers represented far too great a drain on the Soviet economy, and that without increasing the effort by at least 10 times it could achieve nothing. The effect of this has been to stimulate a sort of peaceful revolution stretching across a continent.

In Angola this revolution has led to an agreed withdrawal of Cuban and South Africa troops and to warnings to the Marxist MPLA that Soviet support cannot continue. That has led to a cautious rapprochement with Dr. Savimbi's UNITA. In Namibia it has led to Cuban and South African withdrawal and elections in November under United Nations supervision to elect a constituent assembly which will draw up a constitution.

In Mozambique the peaceful revolution has enabled friendly relations to be restored with South Africa and the chance of reconciliation between the Marxist Frelimo Government and the RENAMO rebels. All this has had a potent effect on opinion, especially white opinion, in South Africa. The ruling National party under Mr. de Klerk is now entering an election on a programme promising an end to white domination, open-ended talks with black leaders on a power-sharing constitution and moving to abolish apartheid.

Another significant factor has come into play. The deputy Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union has warned the ANC through Oliver Tambo that it must think of laying down arms and adopting a negotiating posture. That will make the release of Nelson Mandela politically possible and pave the way for him to make a constructive contribution alongside Chief Buthelezi and other acknowledged leaders to what will undoubtedly be a long negotiating process.

All these factors represent recognitions of reality—that the days of the armed struggle are over and that far more can be achieved through reconciliation. I hope that we in the West can cut away from many of our former prejudices and recognise changing reality, too.

I welcome my right hon. Friend's words on Namibia. Despite SWAPO's pre-emptive invasion earlier this year, we are now back on track to a peaceful settlement and SWAPO is returning without arms, as agreed in the first place. I urge the Government to use all their influence to ensure that the campaign for the elections in November is fair and open and that the democratic parties are not placed at a disadvantage.

There is undoubtedly anxiety about the situation in the camps for returning refugees. Many are administered by the Council of Churches in Namibia, which makes no secret of its open support for SWAPO. The CCN is still denying the SWAPO-Democrats, led by Andreas Shipanga, access to their members in these camps. It is essential for the election that all parties have access to all voters.

There are also worries about the preponderance of international aid going to SWAPO as that creates an unhealthy situation and an open invitation to corruption and bribery. There is, too, a continual flood of propaganda from Radio Zambia in favour of SWAPO.

I concede that there appear to be two sides to SWAPO. There are some in the organisation who want to let bygones be bygones and who speak of national reconciliation; but there is also a darker side, witnessed by refugees returning to Namibia, who tell of torture, rape and murder in SWAPO detention camps. SWAPO has asserted that if it receives a two thirds majority in the constitutional assembly it will impose a one-party state. That is not in the interests of Namibia or of the region. We need only look at other one-party African states, such as Zambia, to see how disastrous it would be. There needs to be open democracy in which SWAPO comes to terms with the other parties and, in fairness, the other parties come to terms with it.

My right hon. Friend had some constructive words to say about South Africa. Anyone who has visited it this year, as I have, and spoken to the new generations of Ministers, to opinion formers of the Afrikaans press and to a wide number of opinion leaders outside Parliament, must be convinced that a real window of opportunity for reform is opening up. I cannot share the dismal and negative attitude of the hon. Member for Aberdeen, North. That the National party can go into an election with such proposals, together with hints of Mandela's imminent release, is highly significant.

The whites in South Africa are coming up against reality, too. They are recognising the futility of trying to rule 20 million blacks who have no constitutional rights at national level yet who command growing economic power. Reality has caught up with black activists in the townships, too. Gone is the dream of three years ago that a wave of riots and strikes could topple the whites from power. Nor is there any illusion that economic sanctions will do the trick. Countless independently conducted opinion polls of recent months bear that out.

There is also a quiet revolution in the workplace. In the coal industry I watched black apprentices training side by side with whites for skilled jobs once reserved for whites, and at identical rates of pay. The greatest advance of blacks is seen in the economic clout that they have won for themselves. They command increasing purchasing power. Their minibuses are the fastest growing industry, followed by street trading. Small provisions shops are run from side rooms, and building materials are sold from back yards. I happily pay tribute to the work of the British embassy in diverting British funds into the squatter camps and into the townships, thereby getting the smallest of businesses going. Sewing machines for women, for instance, enable them to make dresses and contribute greatly to uplifting the blacks in these areas.

All these things increase employment, and black economic power is paving the way for political power. The entrepreneurs are achieving where the rioters failed.

Those developments underline the new mood of hope in South Africa. The old wind of change is blowing again. I urge the Government and Prime Minister to use all their influence to persuade other nations to help it on its way and to offer full encouragement to the reformers from all races in that country.

Mrs. Ann Clwyd (Cynon Valley): My hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) has already spoken about the plight of the Kurds in Iraq. I have a list of towns and settlements that the Iraqi Government have already depopulated or are in the process of depopulating. They are deporting at least 100,000 Kurds from the north of the country to the south, from a fertile area where they have farmed for generations to an arid area, in most instances, where they will be unable to continue with their agricultural settlements.

The deportation of Kurds has been continuing for a long time. The Iraqi regime has refused access to all international observers, both diplomatic and journalistic. Earlier in the year when, on behalf of the Campaign Against the Repression of Democratic Rights in Iraq, I went with some of my colleagues to see the Iraqi ambassador, he offered us a trip to a cultural festival in Baghdad. We said that we would be interested to go to Iraq but we explained that we wished to see the Kurdistan and not merely a cultural festival. For several months the ambassador played a cat-and-mouse game with us by sending telexes to Baghdad, receiving replies to the effect that the authorities were not happy for us to go to certain areas, and suggesting an alternative programme. The upshot is that none of us has been allowed to go to Kurdistan. We can draw our own conclusions from that.

Against that background, it is obvious that there are not many details of how many Kurds have been evicted from their historic towns, which towns have been affected and to where Kurds have been sent. I stress that it is said that at least 100,000 have been involved. The Iraqi Government claim that the operation has been carried out for border security reasons. There is no evidence, however, that the Iraqi Government intend to evict border populations along the Arab part of Iraq's frontiers. Instead, the operation is aimed at the Kurdish people, and is the latest campaign in the long and bloody war of genocide that the Iraqi Government have waged against their Kurdish people and the opposition movement. Even the Iraq-Iran war did not prevent the Iraqi regime from pursuing its internal war against its own people.

More than 4,000 Kurdish villages have been razed to the ground since 1975. Massacres and evictions have been taking place since then. Many areas have been depopulated. Their inhabitants have been moved to so-called modern villages. The zones that have been depopulated have been declared security zones and an order has been issued that any human or animal found within them shall be shot dead on sight.

The attacks on the Kurds took a sinister turn in 1987 when chemical weapons were used for the first time. The attacks continued throughout that year with no comment by the international community, to its eternal shame. In March 1988, the Kurdish town of Halabja was bombed with canisters containing mustard and nerve gases and 5,000 civilians were killed. In August 1988, after the cease fire in the gulf war with Iran, a large military offensive was launched in Kurdistan in which chemical weapons were used on a mass scale, with the result that thousands more were massacred. More than 100,000 Kurds fled for their lives across the border to Turkey and Iran. As my hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton said, many of them are living in appalling conditions. The regime has announced a number of amnesties for those whom it has deported, but few have taken those very seriously. We are told that those who took up the offers were later either imprisoned or redeported.

Large areas of Kurdistan lie empty. Villages have disappeared. Kurds have been scattered in camps and prisons throughout Iraq. This is not an internal matter; it is a humanitarian issue of international concern.

I shall refer to recent developments concerning human rights. In August 1988 there was a decree that gave Ba'ath party local organisations the right to pass the death penalty on those suspected of desertion and the right to execute on the spot. They can bypass both military and civilian courts. In February of this year, Amnesty International published a major report on the torture and murder of children in Iraq. Children are held hostage to force relatives to "confess" or to give themselves up. Victims are often as young as five-month-old babies.

In April, the regime held phoney elections for a national assembly that has no legislative power. The regime is all the time attempting to improve its image to the world.

I shall deal briefly with economic ties with Britain. To the extent that we can influence events in Iraq, I think that we should consider carefully our economic ties with the regime. Iraq's economy has been shattered by the war. Its reserves are spent and it is crippled by foreign debt. It desperately needs loans and easy credit so that it can trade. The regime wants to continue to spend large sums on the military and it is interested in developing its own military industry. Despite the ever-continuing violations of human rights in Iraq and the growing scale of the violations, Britain has maintained easy term credit for Iraq. When I asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster about trade links, he said that we have export credit arrangements with Iraq that amount to £340 million. It is disgraceful that those record export credit loans should have been agreed at this time.

Several trade missions have been sent to Iraq. The Department of Trade and Industry sponsored four up to May this year—the British Water Industries Group, the Engineering Industries Association, the Association of British Healthcare Industries and the British Electro-technical and Allied Manufacturers Association. There have been three missions from the Nottingham, Coventry and Manchester chambers of commerce. When I asked the Department what briefings were given to those trade missions before they went to Iraq, I was told that they concentrated on commercial relations and aspects of doing business in that country. Apparently, no briefing is given on violations of human rights. That is disgraceful.

The Government should link those credits with an end to human rights violations. They should ensure that no deal is struck to help Iraq to develop its own military industry. We must try to prevent British Aerospace selling Hawk trainer jets to the regime. We must not forget the importance of the air force to the Iraqi regime—the same air force that attacked Gulf shipping with Exocet missiles during the war of the tankers, the same air force that dropped mustard and nerve gas shells all over Kurdistan. I ask the Minister to deal with those matters today and to assure us that the Government will review their policy in the light of the continuing human rights violations in Iraq.

I wish briefly to touch upon the subject of Cambodia, a country in which I have a great interest. Unfortunately, there is not a great deal of time available to do so. Once again I appeal to the Minister. There is about to be a settlement of the Cambodian problem, and it is essential that it excludes the Khmer Rouge. For the Khmer Rouge to be given official status within Cambodia would be equivalent to inviting Hitler and the Nazis to return to Germany and to give them a position of importance.

I ask the Government to spell out their policy on the Khmer Rouge. I hope that they will take an active part in the Paris conference. I ask them to deplore the fact that the Khmer Rouge is still sitting at the United Nations as part of the Cambodian delegation, something to which this country acquiesced. The people of Cambodia, who have suffered so much, would regard it as a positive step if the Government were to withdraw their recognition of the Khmer Rouge at the United Nations.

Above all, I ask the Government to give Cambodia the aid that it will need when the Vietnamese pull out at the end of September. That country has suffered so much and we have done so little to help it. We will have our opportunity to do so in September.

Sir Dennis Walters (Westbury): Yesterday the House debated Hong Kong and the need for Britain to do all in its power to ensure the safety of Hong Kong's inhabitants when they lose the protection of British rule. People in this country feel a moral responsibility towards the Hong Kong people and it is right that we should consider all the options that might help them. Yet nothing could be worse than to make a promise now and then to cut and run when the time comes to redeem it. That is what we did to the Palestinians, as I shall remind the House during my brief speech.

Fifty years ago, there was uncertainty about Britain's intentions in Palestine; the British Government published a very solemn undertaking:

> "His Majesty's government therefore now declare unequivocally that it is not part of their policy that Palestine should become a Jewish state. They would indeed regard it as contrary to their obligations to the Arabs under the Mandate, as well as to the assurances which have been given to the Arab people in the past, that the Arab population of Palestine should be made the subject of a Jewish state against their will."

If the Palestinians had known that the British would let them down, they might have handled their case differently —we cannot tell. Whatever might or might not have been done, it is certain that the outcome would not have been worse for the Palestinians—every one of whom is now living in exile or under Israeli military occupation.

We should never forget our responsibilities for the Palestinian tragedy, which should form the background to our thinking when we examine British policy today and reflect on whether we are doing enough at this important time, when action aimed at making progress towards peace is possible. President Reagan and Mr. Shultz were totally committed to Israel, regardless of western interests and irrespective of international law, justice and morality. President Bush and Mr. Baker are not. They take a more balanced view. But for the situation to change not only in theory but practice, President Bush's Administration must do more than make even-handed statements. It must act firmly and speedily in making it clear to Israel that no longer can it get away with flouting international law and successive United Nations resolutions, and at the same time benefit from American economic aid and unconditional support.

By accepting United Nations resolutions 242 and 338, and by rejecting the use of violence, Chairman Arafat and the Palestine Liberation Organisation adopted the policy that successive British Governments and Western Governments continually urged upon them. That was a statesmanlike decision, especially bearing in mind the horrors of Israeli repression on the West Bank and Gaza. The hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) seemed to advance the extraordinary proposition that, if brutality and repression is carried out by an elected majority, it is somehow better than if carried out by a dictatorship. In fact, it is more repellent.

Very little has happened since the PLO's statements and concessions. The Israeli response was almost wholly negative, contemptuous and dismissive. Admittedly, at long last a dialogue has started between the Americans and the PLO, but so far that significant development has not achieved much. Also, Shamir was shamed into making some response, and produced half-baked proposals to hold elections. During the several months that we have been discussing the form that those elections should take, Israeli repression has continued unabated, and racist Jewish settlers on the West Bank, acting as agents provocateurs, have stepped up the shooting and killing of Palestinian men, women and children, with little effort being made to restrain them. Meanwhile, Shamir admitted, when speaking privately to his own party supporters, that the whole election idea was a gimmick.

Mr. Ivan Lawrence (Burton): Why does not Arafat call off the intifada? Then there would be less bloodshed.

Sir Dennis Walters: My hon. and learned Friend must make his own speech in due course.

Shamir admitted that the election gimmick was designed to buy time and was never intended to be a serious initiative. Sharon's antics have since brought out into the open the fraud that had already been admitted in private.

Where do we go from here? The European Community, with Britain taking the lead instead of lagging behind, should nudge the American Administration into action. The first step should be an international conference with the participation of the parties to the conflict, naturally including the PLO, the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain and France. I was glad to learn that Mr. Baker is beginning to look upon that proposal with some favour.

From there, we should explore the possibility of a transitional period of autonomy on the West Bank and Gaza. Twenty one years have passed and the landscape of the population is quite different from what it was when the draftsmen of United Nations resolution 242 envisaged a restoration of the status quo ante of June 1967. The Israelis are unlikely to countenance conventional United Nations peace-keeping, either now, to relieve Palestinian suffering, or in a transition arising out of negotiations. Should we not therefore explore with the Americans building on the Venice commitment to participate in "guarantees on the ground", the possibility of a non-United Nations force, perhaps including themselves and the European Community? I realise that the multinational force in Beirut is not the happiest of precedents but the multinational force and observers in Sinai is. The assumption must be that all the parties want a peaceful settlement. That was true in the case of Egypt and Israel but not in Lebanon in 1982 and 1983.

I do not believe in the good intentions of the present Israeli Government, and the lack of them has been comprehensively demonstrated, as has their de facto rejection of resolutions 242 and 338. However, there are people in Israel with good intentions who, unlike Mr. Shamir, Mr. Arens and Mr. Sharon, are willing to abide by those crucial resolutions and would like to talk to the PLO and reach an acceptable peace settlement. This is the time for them to show their colours, and I hope that the Labour party there will do so. It would help if serious pressure was applied on Mr. Shamir by the Americans and Europeans, and now is the right time to apply it.

As a minor and obvious step, we should upgrade PLO diplomatic representation. I was pleased that my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary met Mr. Bassam Abu Sharif yesterday. He should meet Mr. Arafat soon and I hope that that will be arranged. President Mitterrand and France are well ahead of us.

For reasons of history and self-interest, and in order to prevent the possibility of a future disastrous war in the middle east, Britain should be in the vanguard, promoting actions and initiatives to resolve the conflict and trying to bring peace to the middle east. I urge the Government to be bolder and more far-sighted, for there is an opportunity and an opening now and it should not be missed.

Mr. Frank Haynes (Ashfield): We do not often get an opportunity to have a go at Foreign Office Ministers in this place; hon. Members have already mentioned the infrequency of foreign affairs debates. We can get at all the other Departments but not the Foreign Office, and now it has chosen a Friday to hold this debate. This is our opportunity to get stuck in to Foreign Office Ministers and find out what they intend to do about the issues that they are neglecting.

Most hon. Members have an interest in one particular country, and my interest is Cyprus. I was disgusted that the Minister of State did not mention Cyprus when she opened the debate. Given the difficulties and problems facing that beautiful island, something could have been said, especially bearing in mind the work that has been done outside the British Government. The Government have sat on their hands, and they must get off them. They have to get stuck in and do something.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) made a first-class contribution for the Opposition to show where this nation stands in foreign affairs. Since 1979, we have gone downhill, and we will go further downhill until the next election, when Opposition Members will be on the Government side and will do something about the problem.

My hon. Friend mentioned the way in which the Prime Minister goes about her job. She flits here, she flits there, she flits every damn where, but she does not like to flit to Europe because of what happens there and the opinions expressed about the British Government. I do not want to waste my time. I want to refer to Cyprus. The Minister can take the grin off his face. That applies also to his Parliamentary Private Secretary behind him, the hon. Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell). This is a serious matter.

My hon. Friend the Member for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson) told me not long ago that his father said that all the wise men come from Swansea, East. I believe that, because he advises me wisely on Cyprus. A chappie in the high commission in London, Mr. George Allis also feeds me information on what is going on in Cyprus. What do we hear from that lot on the Treasury Bench? Not very much, unless we go down on our hands and knees to ask them exactly what is happening.

I am thankful, too, for what is happening in the United Nations. The Secretary General certainly set his stall out about what should be happening on that divided island. I have visited the island—not very often; I cannot afford to go there often. Many hon. Members can fly out of Heathrow. I accused the Secretary of State for Energy of doing that the other day, because I have a problem about energy and I could not get hold of him. I suggested that the Leader of the House should go to Heathrow and grab him one day before he goes and bring him here so that I can give him a going over. I hope to give the Minister a going over about Cyprus.

We want some answers. We want to know what the Government are doing, bearing in mind that many people outside the United Kingdom are working like mad to try to sort out the problem.

There was the invasion of 1974. Troops poured into Cyprus from the mainland of Turkey. I am particularly interested in Cyprus, and I am sick of asking the Foreign Secretary about the missing people. More than 1,600 people from the north of that island went missing when the invasion took place. We do not know where they are. It is the Minister's responsibility, on behalf of the United Kingdom Government. Here is another Member who continually asks, "Where are the 1,600 people?" If Denktash can be invited to speak to the Prime Minister, surely she can ask him where they are. The Minister should get the message and have a word with the Prime Minister so that, next time she sees this Denktash fellow, she can ask him where those people from the north are.

We have a real problem with Cyprus. Many hon. Members are showing their concern about what should happen. My responsibility is to stand here and tell the Government what the Opposition feel about them. [Interruption.] Yes, at our annual conference only last year we discussed the problem of Cyprus. What do we get from the Conservative party conference? Not a word about Cyprus. What do we get in the House of Commons? Not a word about Cyprus. The Government could not care less. All they are bothered about are pounds and pence. That is all that is behind their policies. That is why the people denied them all those seats in Europe. My hon. Friend was correct. The people of this nation have had a bellyfull. [Interruption.]

That Whip, the Comptroller of Her Majesty's Household, the hon. Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones), has just walked in from the Whips Office because he saw my name appear on the monitor. He is now bawling from his seat. A Whip should behave himself. I always do. I speak when I am invited to do so by the Chair. I respect the Chair at all times. When I am sat down doing the Whip's job, I keep my mouth closed. The hon. Gentleman has just come in from the Whips Office and now he has his mouth wide open.

The Comptroller of Her Majesty's Household (Mr. Tristan Garel-Jones) rose——

Mr. Haynes: I will not give way to the hon. Gentleman. The hon. Gentleman has come into the Chamber to be educated about foreign affairs, particularly about Cyprus.

I want to know what the Government intend to do about that island. After the next election I shall not be here. [HON. MEMBERS: "Oh."] Before I leave this place I want a settlement in Cyprus. It has a marvellous president. He sweeps clean, like a broom. He is a breath of fresh air. He is saying all the right things. The other side is listening to his suggestions. I have promised to have lunch or dinner with him in Kyrenia after the problem has been sorted out, so get stuck in, Minister.

We want action by the United Kingdom Government. We do not get much action on foreign affairs because we are rarely given the opportunity in this Chamber to question Foreign Office Ministers. I often have a word with the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) outside the Chamber about foreign affairs, but I want him to tell us today exactly where the Government stand on Cyprus and what they intend to do to settle the argument so that Cyprus can be peaceful, with the Turkish Cypriots and the Greek Cypriots living peacefully together, as they ought to do. Then we should all be welcome in Cyprus.

Mr. Robert Banks (Harrogate): I do not intend to follow the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) on the theme of Cyprus, but I recall that when the Turkish forces landed in Cyprus a Labour Government were in power under Lord Wilson, as he now is. The hon. Member for Ashfield ought to ask Lord Wilson what happened to those who are missing.

The Commonwealth has not yet been referred to in this important foreign affairs debate. It is a remarkable institution. It consists of a great variety of nations that hold many different views. It is held together as an institution by Great Britain. That common thread has helped it through difficult times. It is now stronger and more able to perform a constructive role.

I pay full tribute to the outstanding leadership, hard work and dedication of the Queen who, as Head of the Commonwealth, has done so much to hold the Commonwealth together. All the members of the royal family are conscious of the importance of the Commonwealth. They spend a great deal of time visiting Commonwealth countries, which I am sure helps to bind the Commonwealth together. I am delighted that Pakistan is to rejoin the Commonwealth. It will be most warmly received at the Prime Minister's conference in Kuala Lumpur.

I praise the work that is done by the Commonwealth, but much more could be done, particularly to improve the environment and protect the rain forests. The Commonwealth can also help to improve democracy. We are always trying to find ways to improve our own democratic institution. It is a hard enough task to make changes here. But it is important that younger democracies should have the advantage of connections with officers of this House. The connections between those officers and the officers of the various Commonwealth legislatures need to be extended wherever possible.

The Commonwealth has had its fair share of famine and poverty. We should do all that we can to improve the way in which we tackle poverty and famine throughout the Commonwealth. Nothing is of greater importance than protecting the health of populations by means of new methods of health care. Education is of the utmost importance, too. Student exchanges with Commonwealth countries play a major role in creating stable democratic institutions and in binding together the Commonwealth as a whole.

I turn now to the role of the Commonwealth in the problems that we are facing in Hong Kong. I praise the speech made by my right hon. and learned Friend yesterday, following his courageous visit to Hong Kong. That colony has been through—and is still going through—the most colossal emotional turmoil. To a certain extent, logic, reason and patience are overridden by the instant frenzy and anxiety that has taken over as a result of what happened in China.

It is important that we act as soon as possible to try to give as great a reassurance as we can to Hong Kong while the horrible memories of what happened in China are fresh in people's minds. I am sure that those memories will remain in people's minds but I believe that it is in the immediate future that we have an obligation to try to find a way of giving the citizens of Hong Kong the insurance of rights of abode if in 1997 the situation was such that they wished to leave that beleaguered colony.

Although I believe that there could be changes in China in the intervening period, we must work to undertake the obligation to provide that insurance. Through its collective discussions the Commonwealth can draw the attention of each and every member of the Commonwealth to the part that it should play in giving a pledge and creating that necessary insurance.

There will, of course, be discussions on this in the European Community and in the United Nations, and I welcome both. However, I hope that the Commonwealth will be able to do something constructive and positive. I do not under-estimate the great difficulties in doing that, but we must focus our attention on the fact that we are asking for a pledge for each member country to take a proportion of people from Hong Kong by giving them a right of abode in the event of the Armageddon scenario.

In my view, we are not going to suggest—nor should we suggest—that a right of abode should be granted to all Hong Kong citizens ahead of 1997. The way forward is to suggest that through the machinery, which I hope will be set up within the Commonwealth with possibly a group of other nations which are prepared to take in people, the necessary documentation can be issued accepting requests for a right of abode within agreed quotas. Only in the run-up to 1997—possibly in 1996—should those requests for a right of abode which have been made and documented then enable the individual concerned to obtain the right of abode guaranteed by the request document.

Individual countries would have to decide for themselves how to evolve the selection procedure. It is not for us to dictate to other countries that might be good enough to take Hong Kong residents in the Armaggedon scenario exactly how they should undertake the selection procedure. However, in each of those intakes, I believe that there should be a ballot for part of the intake to ensure that there is an element without discrimination. If the procedure were over-subscribed, the ballot would mean that there was always a chance for some of the people involved being accepted without discrimination.

If we can bring about those provisions, they would ensure that, by their actions, the Chinese Government would have to persuade the people of Hong Kong that their safety and future could be safeguarded; otherwise, China would be faced with the humiliation of a mass excursion of people from Hong Kong in the run-up to 1997.

I am convinced that it is in the interests of the people of Hong Kong to remain in Hong Kong for the time being, until 1997 at least. I am also convinced that it is in the interests of China to ensure that Hong Kong continues to flourish, because that is the major way in which Hong Kong can be of use to China's economy. I hope, therefore, that, through the continuing dialogue with China, we will build on the Sino-British agreement. I hope that we will go forward to a better future for Hong Kong in the light of that discussion.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. It will be evident to the House that many hon. Members still wish to speak. The two Front-Bench speakers hope to catch my eye at 1.45 pm. I am grateful to hon. members who are co-operating so well in making short speeches. I hope that there will be even shorter speeches from now on. In that way, it might be possible for every hon. Member who wishes to speak to do so.

1.5 pm

Mr. David Winnick (Walsall, North): I suppose that the 200th anniversary of the French revolution is an appropriate time for the House of Commons to have a debate on foreign affairs. I am not surprised by the Prime Minister's remarks. What she said in France was inappropriate and rather impertinent. One wonders what would have been the position if, on a visit to this country, the President of France had started to pontificate on the events of 1642 or any other aspect of British history. In making those remarks about 1789, the Prime Minister certainly did not speak for the majority of the British people.

I agree with every word of my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes) about South Africa, about which I have spoken many times here. I shall not say more because I agree entirely with the sentiments of my hon. Friend's speech.

On the Arab-Israeli conflict, my view remains that the failure of Israel to show genuine willingness to start talking with the PLO about the future of the occupied territories —they are occupied territories in international law—plays into the hands of the worst kind of extremist and terrorist who completely rejects any kind of Israeli state. The sooner that Israel recognises that there is no meaningful alternative to talks with the mainstream of the Palestinian movement and that the West Bank does not belong to Israel, the sooner there will be a chance of peace. I have always supported Israel's right to exist, even before 1948 when I wanted that state to emerge. I do not know what more the PLO leadership can do at this stage to bring Israel to the negotiating table. I hope that, first and foremost, the United States will apply the pressure that must be applied on the Israeli leadership.

I want now to talk about the present events in eastern Europe. I welcome the substantial political changes in Hungary. Those changes are warmly welcomed by the Opposition. As long as I live, I am never likely to forget Sunday, 4 November 1956, when the uprising in Hungary was brutally crushed by Soviet troops. That was the second intervention. The first, in late October, sparked the uprising. I learnt about what had occurred not on the radio but a few yards from here. I was on the largest demonstration that I have ever been on, one organised by my party against the Suez adventure. Aneurin Bevan was the main speaker. Many of us felt so humiliated by what had happened and by the collusion with France and Israel that we continued to demonstrate until 7 o'clock or 8 o'clock in the evening. It was on that day that I, like others, learnt of what the Russians had done in Hungary —two crimes on the international scene at the same time.

I am also extremely pleased by the progress in Poland. The House last debated Poland as such on 22 December 1981, when Solidarity had been banned and martial law was imposed. I took part in the debate, and in the course of deploring those events I said that if genuine, free elections were held in Poland it was unlikely that the ruling party would receive more than about 5 per cent. of the vote. Bearing in mind what has happened in the at least limited free elections in Poland, I have not, I suppose, been proved wrong. I am pleased that Solidarity is again a legal force in Poland and is playing its legitimate part in the affairs of that country. I welcome those events, and I hope that they will lead to political progress in the rest of eastern Europe.

However, I am concerned that some western leaders, such as President Bush, can over-react. What is happening in Poland and Hungary is new in any country under Communist control. Any over-reaction could produce a backlash. The right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) was right today. The Soviet Union will not necessarily give up its empire, so all the talk about Communism being defeated and the ideas of western Europe dominating the rest could play into the hands of very conservative forces in the Soviet Union and the other countries concerned. There could be a backlash. When we consider what happened in the 1950s and the 1960s, and the invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968, we should be rather cautious and wary about making remarks and acting in a way that could play into the hands of those elements in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union that do not want to see political progress.

So much in eastern Europe depends on what happens in the Soviet Union itself. Does any hon. Member imagine that the changes that we can see in Poland and Hungary could have come about without the political changes in the Soviet Union itself since 1985? Could such progress have come about under the Brezhnev regime? The answer is obvious. To repeat the point I made in an intervention in the Minister's speech, if it is right that the countries of eastern Europe should be able to pursue their own policies, that should also be recognised in central and south America by the United States.

I remember what happened in Guatemala in 1954, and no one can argue that it is now a country where the rule of law exists. I remember only too well the coup encouraged in so many ways by the United States which overthrew the democratic Government in Chile in 1973 and the efforts to destroy or destabilise the current regime in Nicaragua. If it is right for eastern Europe that people should be able to decide their own future, that should apply equally in central and south America.

I am concerned that there has been no political progress in Czechoslovakia. We know, of course, that since the invasion in August 1968, the most conservative elements have been in control and that there has been continued repression. Czechoslovakia remains, if not a totalitarian dictatorship, a very authoritarian one in so many ways. I am not sure of the distinction between the two. I went to see the Czech ambassador by arrangement on 1 March to protest against the imprisonment of Václav Havel, the distinguished Czech playwright, who has since been released. The ambassador would not allow me to put my views, and I wondered why he had agreed to see me. I had not gone to the embassy to discuss my holiday plans in Czechoslovakia or the climate there, yet he refused to listen. It is unfortunate that there has been no political change in Czechoslovakia.

Alexander Dubcek campaigned for and tried to bring about change and reforms within the Communist structure in the first six to eight months of 1968. Such progress is happening elsewhere in eastern Europe and in the Soviet Union now. Mr. Dubcek was somewhat before his time, but it will be a happy occasion indeed when the people of Czechoslovakia have far more freedom than they have now.

All countries in Europe should be able to enjoy basic human rights and civil liberties. As I have said on other occasions, although not necessarily in the House, I hope that I shall live to see the day when there is not a single dictatorship in Europe. I hope that what I have always wished for will come about soon. Many of the dictatorships in western Europe have disappeared. Greece, Portugal and Spain all now have the rule of law and the democracy that we have been fortunate enough to enjoy for so long.

Democratic liberties are starting to appear in eastern Europe and that is not only good for those who live in those countries, who have as much right to enjoy freedom as we have, but for Europe as well. There will be far less tension and less possibility of an incident triggering an international crisis that could threaten international security and world peace. I hope that the progress that we have witnessed in eastern Europe, albeit on a limited scale, will continue because that will be a very good thing for the whole of Europe, east and west alike.

Mr. Bowen Wells (Hertford and Stortford): I wish to speak on four subjects—the European Council in Madrid, development and the environment, growing out of debt and right of abode in view of events in China.

The European Council made some very serious decisions about the European monetary system and future arrangements for finance in Europe. Those matters have not so far been discussed in this Parliament, although they were recommended for debate on the Floor of the House by two Select Committees—the Select Committee on European Legislation and the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee. They were not introduced for debate before the Madrid conference and they have not been debated since.

That leaves the House with a problem. We have a Government, elected from among Members of Parliament, who do not wish and will try to stop Parliament discussing matters connected with the European Council. Unless this national Parliament asserts its sovereignty over the Government, it will never be able to discuss or seriously influence policy matters for discussion at the European Council and other forums of the European Community. That leaves a serious democratic deficit in the Community. The House must consider how it can control its Ministers and influence the policy of the European Comunity. Either the House will have to address that subject or we shall have to find or invent different institutions through which we can control and influence democratic decisions made in Europe.

I welcome the initiative of the Minister for Overseas Development in going to Brazil and presenting a practical programme by which we can help people in Brazil to make a living by harvesting the forests without damaging them. That is perfectly possible, particularly in timber exploitation, if we allow the forest to regenerate. That means a system of management of the forest. Third-world countries, which do not have managerial and administrative skills at their fingertips need exactly that sort of assistance. Significantly, the Brazilians, who resent much of the criticism levelled at them by unthinking environmentalists in this country, accept and will work with just the kind of assistance that we have offered. I congratulate the Government and the Minister for Overseas Development on the initiative.

It may have escaped the notice of many hon. Members that the conference held in the Grant Committee Room on 6 December last year, which was led by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, has given birth to a book entitled "Growing Out Of Debt" produced by the all-party group on overseas development. In the introduction, ideas are put forward based on the contributions of international figures ranging from Mr. Cheysson of the Commission to our own Chancellor of the Exchequer and Senator Bradley of the United States.

We call for a new initiative to be led by Britain, following logically Britain's initiative on debt in Africa. The key point here is that the developing countries—the indebted countries—are paying massive sums in capital repayments and interest to the developed world. Any initiative must redress that flow. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer initiated the idea that we should forgive debt in Africa, recycle it and put in grant money. I am glad to see that Germany, Canada and the United States followed our example. As a result, there is now a positive flow into most Africa countries from all the efforts of the IMF and the World Bank. This has reversed international financial flows—Government flows—but has done nothing about investment by the private sector in Africa. Such investment is essential if those countries are to grow again and achieve a better standard of living, above the level of starvation that many African countries face. We must also reverse the flows in Latin America and other debtor countries, including eastern European countries such as Poland and Hungary.

We made a suggestion about a Government initiative, and this is being taken up by President Mitterrand with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in Paris today, so it is apposite to talk about it, particularly as the forthcoming IMF and International Bank for Reconstruction and Development meetings in Washington will have to follow up the Brady plan, which was almost stillborn. It has been discussed but nothing has been implemented since March this year. Many steps will have to be taken, such as reduction in debt, the issue of bonds, debt-equity swaps, and changing the economies of the indebted countries so that they are in a condition to grow, and are benign to inward investment and private investment. Debts must be reduced, interest rates must be reduced and the period over which debts are repaid elongated, until they reach a level of repayment per annum that the exports of the country can stand.

Furthermore, to make such economies attractive to private capital and to keep money in that country instead of taking it back overseas, we should permit the creditors to put the money into a local account in local currency. They should be asked to invest that money, with the help of local government and entrepreneurs, in industries that will grow and provide the foreign exchange that is necessary to repay debts. In this way, those debts will be kept in active accounts and will not have to be written off. Such a scheme would need an international guarantee power, and that should be formed by the IMF and the World Bank. The capital would never be called, but it would act as a guarantee of repayment for the private investor who puts his money or retains it in the under-developed country, in accordance with the agreement made for reinvestment and keeping the money in the local currency account.

In this way, we shall engage the abilities and the resources of private banks and private entrepreneurs, the IMF, the World Bank, Governments and local entrepreneurs, in trying to rebuild economies and recycle the money for the benefit of the country concerned and the banks themselves. Such an initiative will reverse the terrible outflow of money haemorrhaging from the developing world to the developed world, to the disadvantage of both.

I am a member of the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs and I want to say this to the people of Hong Kong who seek the right of abode here. The whole reason for trying to get the right of abode here is to restore confidence in the future of Hong Kong. That is the crucial objective of their seeking the right of abode here—it is a sort of insurance policy. We know that 60 per cent. of the people there will never come here—they have said so. The trouble is that it is an insurance policy which will not produce the confidence that is needed, particularly if, in practice, Britain cannot provide the right of abode for all people in Hong Kong.

Therefore, we must look for other confidence-building measures, and I have two to suggest. One is that advanced in the report of the Foreign Affairs Select Committee—that students who come here may be permitted to count their time as a student towards citizenship. The second is that we should reduce the amount of money that people must bring to invest here before they are permitted the right of abode. If that is combined with a serious effort to get guarantees from the international community to assist the Hong Kong people, should there be an Armageddon after 1997, and with the democracy proposals and additional safeguards that we are seeking from the Chinese, I believe that there should be a bright future for the people of Hong Kong. I suggest, and hope, that they abandon this pursuit of the impossible—the right of abode in this country.

Mr. Peter L. Pike (Burnley): Bearing your guidance in mind, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I shall try to keep my comments to the absolute minimum.

In the forthcoming South African elections on 6 September, and with the new leader, Mr. de Klerk, we want quite clear guarantees that South Africa will take steps to end apartheid. When the Minister of State opened the debate, she gave us a list of certain items, but I know that it was by no means finite. The two chief things we must have as a sign of commitment to ending apartheid in South Africa are the ending of racial registration and the Group Areas Act. Those two pieces of legislation underpin apartheid, and until they are removed we will not see an end to that policy, which we want to be removed as speedily as possible.

I shall concentrate my remarks on Namibia, as I was there at the end of May and the early part of June. I therefore know how seriously concerned the people, particularly in northern Namibia, are about the absorption into the south-west African police force of former Koevoet forces.

We were in northern Namibia for only a few hours before we saw the large number of Casspir vehicles that constantly go along the main roads during the day. They were most threatening, intimidating and worrying to the people of Namibia. It was quite clear that the people were worried during the day, but at night, when the vehicles go off the main roads into the bush, and through the villages, they became terrified.

Unless the Koevoet forces are withdrawn completely —their former commander is now in charge of the police force in that area—the people cannot believe that they will be allowed to have a free and fair election.

I know that the Government have made their view known, but they have to continue to say on every possible occasion that we condemn the Koevoet force and that it must be completely off the scene if the process is to move forward peacefully.

In our short time there we saw five separate abuses of human rights. They were quite clear violations, all of them since 1 April. The worst incident involved young men who were forced to dig holes in the sand. They were buried head first until they were nearly suffocated, pulled out and beaten. The process was repeated time and again. It is that type of activity, which is still taking place, that gives rise to concern about genuine moves towards free and fair elections. Britain must ensure that it makes clear on every possible occasion to the United Nations special representative, Martti Ahtissarri, and the UN forces there that we shall give them our full support in their role in that country, which is to supervise and control free and fair elections. There is, of course, a great difference between the phrase "supervise and control" and the word "monitor". We have to ensure that everything possible is done to enable supervision and control to be carried out. If at any time assistance in election matters is sought, I hope that the Government will respond positively.

Farm workers form a large part of the electorate and political parties must have access to them. Each farm is marked on the map and as they are private lands there is restricted access. The Democratic Turnhalle Alliance is holding meetings and the farm owners are taking people to them. The hon. Member for Reigate (Mr. Gardiner) spoke about SWAPO. Any evidence of bribery involving large sums of money which I saw while I was there showed that the DTA rather than SWAPO was the suspect. I hope that the Government will do everything possible to ensure people's access to all the political parties contesting the elections later this year.

South Africa is clearly creating some financial difficulties for Namibia. It is responsible for the financing of services until Namibia becomes independent, and we must ensure that it carries out that role. We must also do everything possible after independence to ensure that there are proper negotiations about outstanding debt. It would be totally wrong if Namibia were asked to take over the massive and crippling debt incurred by a Government in which the people of Namibia had no say. That is extremely important.

After independence we shall still have to consider the question of Walvis bay, which will be a problem for future negotiations. Major concessions have been made about the registration procedure for the election. We need to ensure that the procedures and regulations governing the election will ensure confidentiality so that people know that they can vote freely and fairly. Illiterate people must know exactly how to vote. They fear that if they cannot be assisted to vote in a confidential manner the secrecy of the ballot will be destroyed.

Namibia has a small electorate and any fiddling at the edges can affect the outcome of the results. A party or grouping needs to have 66⅔ per cent. of the vote in order to draw up a constitution, and for that reason the matters that I have mentioned are important. The Government must show that they want a free and fair election and they must back the United Nations 100 per cent. in ensuring that the election takes place in November and is free and fair. We all look forward to Namibia achieving its independence.

1.32 pm

Mr. David Curry (Skipton and Ripon): I should like to explore the ground that lies before us after the Madrid summit. That was a good result for the United Kingdom and it was helpful that the Delors report was demoted from the status of the absolute truth and that we managed to neutralise the issue of British membership of the exchange rate mechanism—although both those gains are short term.

The agenda has not changed and the other states have not renounced the Delors goal of economic and monetary union. That means that there is a certain ambiguity at the heart of our relationships. The minimum, though in many respects sufficient, definition of monetary union must be an area of permanently fixed exchange rates with no exchange controls or other barriers to the free movement of capital or the circulation of currencies. For most of the other member states that remains the launch pad for further integration in the European Community. I am not sure whether at the moment the United Kingdom acknowledges that as the ultimate destination, although I was reassured to hear my right hon. Friend the Minister say that we should move as rapidly as possible to the first phase of Delors. I hope that that somewhat contradicts the idea that we were batting for beyond the next general election in the conditions that we laid down. We have bought time, not cancelled the difficult decisions. The important thing now in the short term is to ask how to use that time, and I should like to make two suggestions about that.

First, there is no need at the moment for another idelogical war over the principles of economic and monetary union. Secondly, our proposals, which we have promised, must not be so minimalist as to be insufficient to serve as a rallying point for those who may share some of our reticence about the full scope of the Delors report—the full scope of economic and monetary union. There are people who agree with many of our points, but we must offer them a flag behind which they can line up. If we are minimalist, they will not be able to do so because they will feel that we are not partaking of the ultimate goal.

I want to offer the Government two pieces of cautionary advice. First, it would be helpful if we did not so assiduously give the impression that we are desperately hoping that the liberalisation of exchange controls in France and Italy will lead to chaos. One cannot help but notice occasionally a suppressed anticipation that, with a bit of luck, that liberalisation will cause problems that will let us off the hook. We must be careful not to will that.

Secondly, I suggest that we need to be cautious about the canonisation of the president of the Bundesbank. He is a non-elected official, and the political decisions in a democracy are taken ultimately by elected members of Government. Chancellor Kohl does not necessarily share the bank president's views, and it would help the latter if we did not pray him in aid so often as a supporter of our opinions.

I believe that the conditions for the United Kingdom membership of the exchange rate mechanism will be fulfilled—and rather earlier than we expect. There will be an intergovernmental conference in which we shall take part, and an insistence on a treaty change for which we would do well to prepare ourselves. We must be careful about the attitudes that we adopt. I vividly remember Ministers arguing several years ago that we did not need a treaty change to achieve the single market; we needed only the political will. It would be difficult to deny now that that treaty change has stimulated a much more accelerated approach to the whole notion of the single market.

I recognise and share the Government's dislike of much of the philosophy behind the social charter. It will return in a new form. At the summit in December there is likely to be a declaration geared to employment. There is unlikely to be a legislative programme as an integral part of the declaration, and that will mean measures emerging under the existing competences of the Commission, measures which we should bat as they come. We do not necessarily need to declare war on the whole idea, because legislation will come forward in a conventional form which we shall treat on its merits as it appears. Our priority must be to press forward with the internal market, particularly in the important areas of insurance and public procurement.

I also suggest that the Government be more willing to acknowledge the victories that we have had. I notice that press statements from the French cabinet note with satisfaction when a certain decision has been taken in Europe of which the French Government approve. We tend to go in for great publicity about the issues over which we find ourselves in conflict; we are rather less good about praising—without crying triumph—those that go our way. Examples that come to mind are the banking directive and the fact that Europe has not embarked on a protectionist course. There will be no fortress Europe, given the decisions taken over the past few months and years.

It would be helpful if the United Kingdom would acknowledge that we are still determining the agenda in many respects in the European Community. The triumphs that we have had and the consensus on certain issues should be the subject of just as much comment as the areas on which we find ourselves in opposition. I note with satisfaction that the Government do not object to the use of article 90 in the telecommunications proposals of the Commission. That does not flow from the Single European Act—it would be a mistake to regard all these matters as flowing from that. It is an article of the treaty and as such it shows that the treaty can be used directly to obtain the deregulatory, free-market objectives of the European Community. I hope that we shall not be too alert to the possibilities of objecting to article 90 when it is used in areas that we find somewhat inconvenient. I think that some of my hon. and right hon. Friends would merely say that in taking that approach we were being rather cleverly French. That is an argument to which I would not necessarily object.

It is unfortunate that we allow the impression to be gained that there is a perennial British problem in Europe. I suggest that there is also a French problem of a dirigiste tradition in adjusting to the internal market. There is also an Italian problem, which involves a history of non-implementation of regulations, about which the Italian Government propose to do nothing. Milk quotas do not yet exist in Italy. There is also a German problem that involves a highly protected financial services market. There will be traumatic events when the Germans come to dismantle that market. I resent the implication that Britain is always the one-man awkward squad in the Community. Sometimes we make ourselves appear to be the awkward squad when frequently we can argue legitimately that we are leading the field and setting the pace when it comes to issues that are important to us. We must not define Europe exclusively in terms of the things that we want. We must understand that other member states have legitimate reasons to define Europe from their point of view.

There are other issues that have a rather broader effect on the Community than those to which I have referred. A major economic problem that lies at the heart of the Community is the massive German perennial trade surplus. If we had a more balanced and more evenly distributed growth in Europe, there would be far less demand for a social charter, and certainly much less demand for vast regional and social funds, which are essentially mechanisms to recycle the German trade surplus.

I have some sneaking sympathy with the countries that look forward to a central European bank as a means of applying a slightly more reflationary philosophy than that which governs the German economic policy. Some advocates of the British membership of the exchange rate mechanism take that stance on the ground that effectively the president of the Bundesbank would be in charge of British economic policy. One can see the attraction of that if one's priority is to counter inflation. At the same time, German policy is not always conducted in the common interest. It is not healthy for there to be a permament structural imbalance at the heart of the Community's economic performance.

The French identify the same problems with Germany as we do. However, they have opted for the embrace rather than the admonition. It is true that Chancellor Kohl and Mr. Mitterrand have met on about 67 occasions. The French have opted for what might be described as a suffocating embrace. This has meant, however, that they are able to exercise an important influence on German policy. Sovereignty, as in the French definition, is national sovereignty, and applies to the direction in which the nation wishes to go. That reflects a national interest generally and not necessarily the rather narrower terms of parliamentary sovereignty, which I suspect is the way in which the debate will be focused in this place.

The Community will face a significant problem which it has barely begun to address in an era of much freer frontiers, and it will lie with immigration and sanctuary. There will be problems if, for example, the Tamils are accepted in Holland and rejected in Belgium, or if the Syrians are accepted in Belgium and rejected somewhere else. These difficulties will be important within the Community, and we must consider them carefully.

I welcome what my right hon. Friend the Minister of State said about the importance of the EFTA. We have much more trade with it than with the United States and Japan combined. We are spending too much time talking about the demise of the Soviet empire. I welcome the prospect, but I note from my history that institutions tend to survive for longer than external circumstances would suggest. EFTA is at the heart of Europe, and it is difficult to conceive of economic and monetary union with Switzerland or Austria—Switzerland has an especially important currency—outside the EFTA system. I hope that the United Kingdom, with its special relationships with the EFTA countries, will see that it has a leading role in trying to achieve closer relationships. I accept that some special status will have to be devised, at least until we have completed the European single market in 1992.

It is somewhat strange that the Opposition should claim to be the great new party of Europe. I recall our last debate when Labour's new, sparkling European policy was unveiled, only to be promptly assassinated by every Opposition Member who spoke. It is curious that we should be portrayed as the divided party and the Opposition as the united party when the opposite is true. We may be divided on certain ultimate goals, but we are not divided on the concept. That realisation has yet to dawn upon the Opposition.

1.45 pm

Mr. Corbyn: If an hon. Member is granted an Adjournment debate on a constituency matter, he can speak for about 15 minutes, so it is rather curious that only four minutes is being allowed for me to discuss the rest of the world. I shall make only two brief and simple points.

The Minister praised the Government for their work on environmental matters and claimed that they were the greenest Government in the world. She said that Britain was busy examining all the causes of world pollution and the various phenomena that go with it. That argument would be stronger if the Government had given a commitment yesterday, during the Committee stage of the Antarctic Minerals Bill, to declare the Antarctic a world environmental park rather than allowing the prospecting for minerals that will inevitably lead to the development of mining operations in the Antarctic and damage to the fragile ecosystem. The Opposition forced the Bill to be debated and to be sent to Standing Committee, and there will be another debate on Monday evening. I hope that people will understand our role in that.

The announcement earlier this week of the growth of emissions of carbon dioxide from British industry and British power stations makes Britain the country with the largest increase in the world. That comes at a time when the Prime Minister is lecturing people and saying that she is doing more than anyone to solve the problems of the greenhouse effect. It sits rather ill.

Likewise, although there is undoubtedly a genuine concern about rain forests, the reality is that many poor countries are being forced to chop down their rain forests and destroy their natural resources simply to repay overseas debts. There is an inextricable link between debt and the destruction of the environment. It is time that the British Government clearly recognised that. Market forces are a major cause of damage to the world's environment. We need a strengthened United Nations environmental protection agency and a different attitude from the Government towards the environment.

My hon. Friends the Members for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) and for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) mentioned the problems of the Kurdish people in Iraq. Kurdistan is a nation of almost 20 million people—the largest unrecognised nation in the world. The Kurds are one of the most abused peoples, and the treachery that has been meted out to them throughout the century is a standing disgrace, in respect of which all major Governments are, to some extent, guilty.

Many Kurdish refugees from Turkey have recently arrived in Britain. We have close relations with the Turkish Government and Turkey is a member of NATO. Indeed, the Turkish President was invited to Britain last year and was feted at enormous public expense. Will the Government make the strongest possible representations to the Turkish Government about their treatment of the Kurdish people in Turkey, about those people's legitimate desire for self-determination and about the conditions suffered by 120,000 Iraqi Kurdish refugees? They fled to Turkey not because of a humanitarian gesture from the Turkish Government, but because of the repression that they had suffered from the Iraqi Government.

Will the Government make representations to the Turkish Government to ensure access to the Kurdish camps at Mardin, Mus and Diyarbakir for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Red Cross and other respected bodies such as the International Medical Relief Foundation, which wants to examine the many examples of the poisoning of the Kurdish people by Iraqi agents. Did they not suffer enough in Iraq, with all the oppression, murder and use of chemical and other weapons against them? They were forced to flee to Turkey, only to find Iraqi agents in the refugee camps. Those people deserve something better, and the support of the rest of the world, in their attempts to live a just and peaceful life.

I hope that the British Government will stop pretending that everything is all right in Turkey and that that country is returning to democracy, and will instead expose the abuses of human rights in Turkey and its Government's oppression of the Kurds. We should not shut our eyes to those problems but should stand up for the rights of those poor, unfortunate people—as we would expect others to do for us if we were in a similar position.

Mr. Donald Anderson (Swansea, East): I will at least start on a note of consensus. If we are to pursue a realistic foreign policy, we must first know ourselves. We must evaluate our country's history, strengths, weaknesses and potential. Our history as a country in relation to external affairs since 1945 has been of a process of adjustment to the new role that we can play in the world. Central to that process have been developments within the European Community.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office concluded long ago that our future lies in a closer relationship with the new Europe. Until recently, British public opinion seemed to lag behind that view, but recent public opinion polls, notably that appearing in The Daily Telegraph and the recent Eurobarometer poll, suggest that it now recognises the value of that relationship.

The Prime Minister—the queen across the water—has had rather a bad day. It was the Prime Minister's failure to appreciate the sea change in public opinion, as evidenced by recent polls, that made her so misjudge her political stance on Europe. That is emphasised by her insensitivity over the past few days in respect of the French revolution—an event that is fundamental to most French people, and to which they make obeisance. By her criticism, she allied herself in respect of France—as she has in the case of South Africa—with the old regime, rather than with the newly emerging forces.

The Prime Minister's formation ill suits her to understand the processes of change, and her temperament makes it difficult for her to co-operate with others. She still hankers after a special relationship with the United States that is no longer on offer, and still attempts to fan a narrow and unhealthy populism, with a much-reduced response. As the hon. Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) implied in his advice to the Prime Minister in his very wise speech, she should turn down the volume in respect not only of the European Community but of other areas of foreign policy.

The cross of Grantham must be one of the biggest burdens that Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers must bear. The two Ministers of State who are with us today are the partially acceptable face of a foreign policy that is directed more and more from Downing street in a strident and populist way—and in a misjudged populist way, because public opinion has changed. Rather like an old end-of-pier entertainer, the old appeals no longer receive quite the response that they enjoyed in the past.

By failing to recognise our strengths, the Prime Minister is failing to capitalise on our potential. Clearly there are few areas in which we can still play a solitary, unilateralist role. One is Hong Kong, on which we had a most valuable debate yesterday. Over the years, one has gained the impression that the Government's obsession with keeping on the right side of the People's Republic of China has led to distortions in our foreign policy on areas adjacent to China. One thinks of the policy on Tibet, and certainly that on Cambodia.

Another area is Argentina. Over the past few days, we have heard what may be construed as encouraging noises from Mr. Menem, the new President of Argentina, in relation to the Falklands. It will be helpful to know how the Government read those signals. It is clearly wrong that our relations are so strained with that great Latin American country. We cannot continue indefinitely in that immobilism. We need a more coherent position. The position that has been clearly adumbrated by my party is that it would be ready to open talks, without preconditions, with democratic Argentina on the future of the Falklands. That is also the view of the Foreign Office, which is seeking wherever possible to build bridges, but there is a vast road block—the No. 10 veto—across the way to closer relations between ourselves and Argentina.

Leaving aside Hong Kong and the Falklands which, in their own way, are a legacy of old colonial relationships, is it not quite clear that Britain's role in the future will increasingly be within our alliances? As my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey) said with his usual force, global problems need global solutions. Working within our alliances involves a process of give and take and a series of compromises, not absolutes. We in Britain have a unique position in the world through our permanent position on the Security Council and our role within the Commonwealth and the European Community. Our aim should be to maximise our influence in those organisations in which the sum is greater than the part. Who can deny that, latterly, strident isolationism has reduced our strengths and is contrary to our national interests? Within the Security Council we pay tribute to some of the work that has been done. It is clear that the negotiating skills of Sir Crispin Tickell, our permanent representative, allowed us to play a substantial and positive role in relation to the Iran-Iraq war.

The Government fail to recognise that the lack of sympathy with Third world issues, and particularly the lack of understanding in relation to South Africa, have mightily reduced the effects of our policies and the positive role that we can play elsewhere. I congratulate the hon. Member for Harrogate (Mr. Banks) on his positive comments about the Commonwealth—another of the areas in which a unique diplomatic asset for us has been mightily underutilised. It is a forum for world problems in miniature.

A day or so ago, the Prime Minister talked about the solution of the drugs problem. Such problems can properly be addressed in the Commonwealth. When the Government talk about the problem of Hong Kong, is it not proper to say that there could be a much greater urge to seek a solution within the Commonwealth context? With the Commonwealth and our EEC partners about 60 countries could help us to share a major moral burden in respect of the future of Hong Kong. I and my party regard the Commonwealth not as an alternative to Europe but as intertwined with Europe, giving us a special strength.

We know that the Commonwealth is not only of proven strength but is increasing. We look forward to the addition of Pakistan. We believe that Namibia is likely to be the fiftieth member, and we understand that Cameroon is already making approaches to the Commonwealth. At least that shows that it is an institution recognised by others as having a new vitality.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) made some cogent remarks about the tragedy of Cyprus. For too long the Government have adopted a laid-back position—cautious, waiting on the sidelines, failing to appreciate the special role that Britain has in Cyprus. Britain has subcontracted the Cypriot problem to the United Nations.

The Government's lack of commitment to the Commonwealth is also demonstrated by their policies towards the Commonwealth Secretariat and the Commonwealth Institute. The Prime Minister demands the right to be different within the Commonwealth. One thinks of the Okanagan statement on the Commonwealth, with the exception of Britain. One thinks of Britain's self-exclusion from foreign affairs Ministers' statements on South Africa. The Prime Minister demands the right to be different within the Commonwealth and the European Community but she expects Stalinist uniformity over developments in NATO. Those demands do not sit easily together.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) and other hon. Members have referred to the importance of the Venice and Madrid declarations on the middle east and to the fact that by and large, we follow the decisions that the Israeli Government have taken over the middle east. If the policy change by Mr. Shamir, not just Likud, which is likely to affect the stance adopted by the Israeli Government, effectively scuppers the new peace effort, and if the United States Administration establishes as a consequence an international peace conference, what will be the stance of Her Majesty's Government towards the peace conference? The intifada will continue. There will be enormous human rights abuses. Israel will be the despair of its many friends. It will harm itself both in relation to the occupied territories and internally as a result of its own divisions, unless it comes to terms with the new facts in that area.

I agree very much with what was said by the hon. Member for Leominster (Mr. Temple-Morris) about the Inter-Parliamentary Union and other similar institutions. I agree, too, with the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) that one should not seek to portray the Council of Europe as an alternative to the European Community. It can play a bridge-building role between eastern and central Europe but we should not give yet another signal to Europe that we are faint hearts on the European road.

My hon. Friends the Members for Hamilton and for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) have already said all that needs to be said about the Kurds. I repeat the question about the British Aerospace contract. The Government could veto it. We shall regard the British Government's response to the Hawk contract as a litmus test of their policies. Will business considerations prevail? Will the British Government view sympathetically human rights for the Kurds or will they view sympathetically the use of chemical weapons in Iraq?

My hon. Friend the Member for Cambodia—[Laughter.] With respect, I think that my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley might half accept that appellation. As she mentioned Cambodia, I hope that the Government will assure us that they will not favour the inclusion of the Khmer Rouge in any group that is involved in the peace negotiations, given the history of the Khmer Rouge.

As for the Sudan, the only democratic Government in the area have been topplied by a military coup. We know that the Prime Minister, Sadiq al-Mahdi, is under arrest, and it is said that he could face the death penalty. I appeal to the Government to make representations to the new military regime in Sudan on behalf of Sadiq al-Mahdi.

South Africa, is the area in which the Government's policy—or rather the Prime Minister's policy—is seen at its most personal and malign. That is important in itself but it also has symbolic importance. We know that the Government adopt attitudes in relation to human rights in Poland—at the tomb of Father Popieluszko—and in Hungary at the tomb of Imre Nagy. When will the day come when the Government will pay similar tributes to Steve Biko or other major South African patriots? As my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes) said, it is not just a question of the release of Nelson Mandela—even with all the importance attached to that—it is also a question of the context within which Mandela is released, analagous to the Commonwealth Eminent Persons Group and the conditions that it has laid down for a proper release for Mandela.

Our assessment is that the South African Government have not yet recognised the need for fundamental change. To them "negotiation" means negotiations with people whom they chose. Even the five-year plan talks about group rights. We believe that by colluding and by treating South Africa as just another country, we are playing into the hands of the establishment. Only sanctions or measures—call them what one will—are likely to bring the powers that be in South Africa to the recognition that they must do deals with the African National Congress. By issuing a statement on behalf of Nelson Mandela, President Botha has implicitly recognised the importance of the ANC. However, to our Prime Minister, the ANC is still just another terrorist organisation. When will the Prime Minister be ready to meet Oliver Tambo and other representatives of the ANC? That would be a positive signal.

I endorse all that my hon. Friend the Member for Burnley, (Mr. Pike) said about Namibia and repeat his questions.

In conclusion, the Government's faults in foreign policy are but an extension of their faults in domestic policy. They are reflected in the curbing of public expenditure. The proportion of our GNP that is devoted to aid is half what it was in 1979. The Government are weak on human rights and have a strident unwillingness to accommodate the other side in any discussions.

Under a Labour Government there will be a new internationalism and a recognition of our new status as a country. We will play to our strengths, which are many. They will not be undervalued as they are under this Administration.

2.7 pm

Mr. Waldegrave: I start by paying one tribute in which I know the Opposition Front Bench will join. The diplomatic service provides a great service for our country. Many hon. Members of all parties—on visits to Cyprus, for example—have had the benefit of the help of our diplomats. If they have not, the diplomats are always available. Let us think for a moment about our diplomats in dangerous places, such as Beirut, and pay a special tribute to them.

We have had some magisterial speeches today. My right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) made the second of two magisterial speeches in two days. He has told me that he cannot be here for my reply to the debate, but I should like to put on record the fact that I thought his speech outstanding.

The speech of the right hon. Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey) was in the great tradition of his speeches. This week this country has lost and mourns our greatest entertainer, Lord Olivier, but luckily things are not all bad. The right hon. Member for Leeds, East is his natural successor. He described himself as a timid man, to whom verbal fisticuffs cause deep and lasting anxiety. He made up some amusing new facts about the past. He referred, for example, to the inflation rate. It is boring to have to remind him that the OECD figures show that in 1975 Italy's inflation rate was 17 per cent., but the United Kingdom's was 24·2 per cent. I cannot remember who was Chancellor of the Exchequer that year. The crocodile that ate one of the right hon. Gentleman's colleagues would never have dared to take even a nip at him. He would have returned, as he did over the years, having swallowed up many people from the Militant Tendency, with the crocodile well digested.

There was much in the speech of the right hon. Member for Leeds, East with which to agree, just as there was in the speeches of the hon. Members for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) and for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson). One of the difficulties in debating with the Opposition Front-Bench speakers is that they decorate their fundamental agreement with us on many points with a verbiage of personal attacks on my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. They do so partly to disguise how much underlying agreement there is. We know the game. We learn it from their boss, the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman). He often agrees with us on, for example, the middle east and our approach to eastern Europe, but that does not preclude a certain personal venom in his approach.

After the prolonged period of paralysis in European politics since the second world war, after the iron curtain fell across Europe, the liberalisation in the Soviet Union has once again put events in Europe back at the centre of the world stage. Not long ago, it was fashionable to say that all the political interests in the world focused on the Pacific. We can now see that the two great events in Europe—the room for manoeuvre which is being allowed in eastern Europe and the development of unity in western Europe—have put those European events back at the centre.

I agreed with the right hon. Member for Leeds, East —although I did not entirely agree with his inflation figures, as he will see in Hansard—when he said that the tide of Communism had turned and that that was recognised in the Soviet Union. In a way, the Soviet Union has become a status quo power and, perhaps belatedly, has recognised that she will do well to manage to maintain much of her present position. This has transformed her approach to regional conflict in a variety of places, as the right hon. Member for Leeds, East, the hon. Member for Hamilton and others have said.

The Soviet Union now has a quite different approach to the United Nations, which provides an opportunity, as the right hon. Member for Leeds, East said, to use that institution in some of the ways that its founders hoped it could be used, including the great former Bristolian, Mr. Ernie Bevin, who at the time of the foundation of the United Nations in San Francisco made a speech that bears re-reading. There are hopes for partnership in relation to south-west Africa, the middle east, Cambodia and, as the right hon. Member for Leeds, East said, central America. As Mr. Gorbachev said in New York, this has ended the primacy of ideology in the Soviet Union's approach to foreign affairs.

There was a fascinating debate between the two leviathans of the debate—I was going to say "dinosaurs" —the right hon. Member for Leeds, East and my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup, on where the central and eastern parts of the Soviet Union now extend. I tend more to my right hon. Friend's side of the debate. The Finlandisation of central Europe is an objective that is not without hope. It means the achievement of neutral countries following a non-aligned policy and their own social, political and economic strategies, which Mr. Gorbachev endorsed as being their right in his speech in Strasbourg.

It is therefore somewhat paradoxical if, at this stage, we encourage the idea that those Finlandised countries—to use a form of shorthand—should be encouraged to go into the western camp. I wonder whether that would be in their interests in the medium term—where we go in the longer term is a different matter. We should not be unwilling to make it clear that, if Mr. Gorbachev means what he says, his new freedoms for the eastern European countries should lead to their being able to choose that status for themselves, which would be greatly to the benefit of their people. I also thought that we had an outstanding speech from my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), to which the hon. Member for Swansea, East has already paid tribute.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of State is more expert on the European Community than I am. She introduced the horrible word "subsidiarity", which is not hers. The concept, if not the word, was invented by Mr. Delors, who has much to his credit, including that word. If we could think of an English word, it would be more helpful. It is the principle upon which we should be working—that there is quite enough for Brussels to do without loading on to Brussels matters with which it need not deal. I am sure that hon. Members of all parties could make an allowance on that. There is no benefit in pushing matters up to higher tiers of Government just for the sake of it. My right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup had the emphasis wrong. He said that wherever we could co-operate internationally, we should. That is the wrong way round. It is where we need to co-operate internationally that we should.

My hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon was right to say that we should re-emphasise the matters that are going right in Europe, in many of which we have played a leading part, such as the liberalisation of the economy and the avoidance of the fortress Europe concept. Wherever I go in the world, I find that people from the Maghreb, the middle east and the wider world fear that Europe will turn in on itself and become fortress Europe. It would be a disaster if the greatest trading group in the world became an illiberal force in economics. My hon. Friend gave other good advice and I know that my right hon. Friend will note it carefully for the negotiations that lie ahead.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup asked, a little suspiciously, whether our praise for the Council of Europe meant that we were trying to make it into an alternative to the Community. Of course we are not. A number of other hon. Members mentioned the Council of Europe. A useful, new role is emerging for that body, which is to become one of the forums in which discussions in central Europe can take place. Hungary, Poland and the Soviet Union now have guest status and Mr Gorbachev made his interesting speech at Strasbourg. We should welcome this developing role for the Council of Europe.

The hon. Member for Hamilton and the right hon. Member for Leeds, East talked about central Europe. I cannot answer properly today the question of the hon. Member for Hamilton about additional sources of money for Hungary. I hope that we can deploy some. Some part of the purpose of my visit was to assess what we can do with how much money. He will note that we have provided a fund of £25 million over five years for Poland. In terms of debt, that is nothing, but in terms of moving people and developing programmes to help individuals and training, it is a considerable programme and a departure for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office which will be welcomed by hon. Members of all parties. We shall have to think how to spend the money properly, and institutions such as the Great Britain East Europe Centre will have a part to play. The last thing we want to do is to give the impression that the money has been tainted by Government intervention in the politics of other states. We must respond to requests and make it clear that it comes, if possible, with all-party backing and certainly with some independence from Government.

[Mr. Waldegrave]

In East-West relations in general, the liberalisation and transformation taking place in the background is being recognised and endorsed in the arms agreements coming forward—not the other way round. Peace is not made by the formalities of arms agreements, as we learnt in the 1930s as a result of the Kellogg pact and other agreements that failed. If the underlying forces are moving to conflict, treaties cannot stop them. It is the other way round. Now that affairs are moving in the right direction, it will become surprisingly easy to make treaties. I am talking about history nervously because of the presence of my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge (Mr. Rhodes James) who is looking rather gloomy about my references to the Kellogg pact, so I may have made a mistake there already.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup asked us to consider whether we yet believed that Mr. Gorbachev or any other Soviet leader could contemplate the break-up of the Soviet empire. He was not disagreeing with the right hon. Member for Leeds, East here. I do not think that any Soviet leadership could contemplate the break-up of the heartland of the USSR. There is reason to hope that the internal problems of the Soviet Union—the challenges of the nationalities and the economy—will make it take a more relaxed view about trying to maintain some control over countries that it once thought it needed as buffer states. What is in it for the Russians if they try to run the economy and defences of Hungary, given that they have enough difficulty with their own problems? There may be hope. There may be.

We have heard a number of interesting speeches about the Arab-Israeli question. I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge, whose leadership of the Conservative Friends of Israel is contributing to the building of bridges between those who are genuinely seeking progress on this matter.

We regard the Likud party decisions with considerable dismay. Yesterday, my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary met Bassam Abu Sharif of the PLO to show that we think it even more vital for the PLO to stick to its moderate position, which it reaffirmed last December, now that it is under the extra pressure of watching Israel's tentative moves towards rapprochement apparently being reversed. If the PLO can maintain its position, the other voices in Israel will have time to be heard and the friends of Israel in the United States and Europe will have time to emphasise that the election proposal—in its original form not much more than a minimal proposal—needs development rather than diminution. That is what we should all be seeking to achieve.

The hon. Members for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) and for Swansea, East and my hon. Friend the Member for Westbury (Sir D. Walters) asked what would happen if, despite all the efforts, the election proposal dies. I assure them that we are not backward in seeking an international conference. In fact, we have been rather ahead of the United States on this matter and our position is embodied in the Madrid declaration of the Twelve which was widely welcomed in the middle east. In that declaration, we say that not only should there now be an international conference but that the PLO must participate in it. That is only realistic as it will be impossible to find any other interlocuter who carries weight.

My hon. Friend the Member for Cambridge made two points that I support strongly. The first was that nothing will be gained by seeking to isolate Israel. In that respect, I agree with the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody). The capacity of Israelis to batten down the hatches and see the world as threatening all round them is one of the problems in making progress towards negotiation. Nothing that reinforces that attitude helps peace. Israel is a democracy, and forces in Israel, movingly represented in a recent piece by Amos Oz in The Daily Telegraph, need our support and help.

Grave problems also exist elsewhere in the middle east. The hon. Members for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) and for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) are both known as passionate protectors of the tragic Kurdish people. They both said that the Kurdish tragedy may be continuing. As has been said, the British Government played an honourable role in drawing the attention of the world to the tragedy at the time, when very few others were prepared to speak out. My speech at the Paris conference on chemical weapons was the only one to mention Iraq by name. All the others somehow managed to avoid the subject. I do not claim too much credit for that; we could not keep silent. The question that we face is the perennial, and most difficult of all questions for Foreign Office Ministers and Governments to answer: how we should balance our trading interests and our care for human rights. At what point do we say that we cannot deal with a country, or that we must seek progress by contacts, pressure and influence?

I have heard Opposition Members advance that argument the other way in relation to the Soviet Union at its worst and China at its worst periods. It has been argued that we should not cut countries off and that we should work with those people who we can work with. That can be said of some in Iraq as well. This is a difficult and agonising decision. I have no answer to it today, nor about the proposed Hawk deal. All that I can say is that the analysis of that will be carried out within the guidelines that we have maintained in the past in these matters.

Sir Russell Johnston: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Waldegrave: I can add very little to what I have already said, and I have much of the rest of the world to try to cover. Doubtless if a decision is made that is adverse to those arguments, we shall have other occasions on which to pursue them.

My hon. Friend the Member for Cornwall, South-East (Mr. Hicks) mentioned Iran. He is right to say that if there are signs of progress after the presidential election, Britain must and will respond to them. He is also right to say that the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen is another country that has noticed which way the wind is turning in the Soviet Union's foreign policy and is seeking other friends. Royal Navy ships recently went there, which a few years back would have been surprising, and they were greeted with the usual Aden welcome.

The hon. Member for Swansea, East mentioned Sudan. The first thing that we want to say to that new Government is that, above all, the Sudan needs peace in the south. We urge the new regime to maintain human rights in relation not only to previous Ministers, but those in the south and in the country as a whole. There is confusion and it is difficult to say at this stage what will happen.

Several hon. Members, led by the hon. Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes), mentioned South Africa. My hon. Friend the Member for Reigate (Mr. Gardiner) made a speech with which I very much agreed. The hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) spoke about South Africa and Namibia. I am much less of an expert on this than my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, but I found much of what they said out of date. It seemed to be simply a replaying of the gramophone record of sanctions, as though nothing had happened in southern Africa, the relationship between the Soviet Union and South Africa were not changing, and the hopes of progress were not higher now than they have been for many years. Our opportunity and challenge is to pass on that greatest African economy intact to its rightful owners—the population as a whole—rather than passing on a ruined economy, as happens so frequently in other parts of the world.

The hon. Members for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber and for Aberdeen, North spoke about Angola. We were greatly encouraged when, against the odds, President Dos Santos and Dr. Savimbi met and agreed the ceasefire. Although the delegations have now broken off their talks, we believe that they may shortly be resumed and we are urging both sides to show flexibility.

The return of the murderous Pol Pot regime in Cambodia must be out of the question. Any influence that we can use to that end we shall try to use.

I am grateful to the hon. Member for Swansea, East for giving me the opportunity to speak about Argentina. It is true that the recent statement by the new President Menem —whose peaceful transition to power we must welcome in that populous country—and by foreign minister Cavallo, seem encouraging. If Argentina is now ready to exclude sovereignty from talks, we welcome that as a basis for talks. It appears to be saying that it will do that. Things are moving fast, so such a move is a welcome sign to which we shall respond appropriately.

We had a speech of considerable volume from the hon. Member for Ashford (Mr. Haynes) on Cyprus. I regret that, a couple of weeks ago, when we had a most moving debate on Cyprus to which I replied, something detained the hon. Gentleman and he could not be there. Nevertheless, we welcome him now. I strongly refute his argument that the Government are doing nothing on Cyprus. The diplomatic activity last year in relation to Cyprus was probably more intense than for any territory with the same population. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary and my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, have all met President Vassiliou. I agree with what the hon. Gentleman said about President Vassiliou. There has been a range of diplomatic contacts aimed at producing progress, and we are certainly as dedicated to the outcome which the hon. Gentleman rightly and eloquently defended as anybody else.

My hon. Friend the Member for Harrogate (Mr. Banks), the hon. Member for Islington, North, the right hon. Member for Leeds, East and my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) talked about some of the new planetary issues and the use of multinational organisations such as the United Nations and the Commonwealth to try to produce solutions on an international and multilateral basis. I pay tribute to the environmental achievements in Brazil last week by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development.

(3) no further such Motion shall then be made.—[Mr. Sackville.]

Northern Relief Road (Birmingham)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Sackville.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Richard Shepherd (Aldridge-Brownhills): I should like to express some of the concerns of my constituents and more general concerns about the recent proposals of the Department of Transport in respect of the Birmingham northern relief route, the Birmingham north orbital route or, as some of us believe it to be, the new M6. Those concerns can best be summed up by citing a letter from two of my constituents, Mr. and Mrs. Smith, who live in Hednesford road, Brownhills. It is one of many letters that I have received on the subject, and it indentifies the general concern about the initiatives announced by the Government. It states:

"Dear Mr. Shepherd,

It was in May, 1984 that we were first informed of the new proposed Road, our house was in line on four out of the five proposed routes, which is the Chasewater variation route, so it was quite a shock.

My wife and I purchased our home in 1976, we were very happy with it liking the design, location and the friendliness of the people and neighbours of the area, we thought we were very lucky.

We both had good jobs and set about planning and vastly improving the property, patio window, large bay window, all double glazing, fitted kitchen, all Regency Design plaster moulding throughout, landscaped garden etc. so when we heard that we may lose our home, naturally we were very upset.

But, worse than anything has been the waiting, and the last 5 years have been the worst of our lives, all the enjoyment has gone out of our home, due to the fact that we can no longer make any plans not knowing about the future, and how long we have here, making us feel very insecure.

So you can imagine how we felt when we received a letter from the Department of Transport 2 weeks ago, saying that a decision has still not been reached on the route, and then to read in the local press on Friday evening that it may take another 5/6 years before we know due to the fact that a toll road is now being considered, is just too much, there is a limit to what one can endure.

After the Enquiry ended last September, we were promised of a decision in about 6 months time, of which we were patiently awaiting, to be expected to have to live through another 5/6 years like we have through the last 5 is quite unthinkable.

All we are asking Mr. Shepherd for both ourselves and all our neighbours is for them to please, please make up their minds so that we can get on with our lives once again, and to save all the misery and unhappiness that we are experiencing through all the uncertainty."

As the Minister will know, such anxiety and much more followed the Secretary of State's announcement by way of a written answer on 22 May to launch a Green Paper entitled "New Roads by New Means". He said that he proposed to hold a competition for the private sector to finance, design, build and operate a road which would serve broadly the same purposes as would be served by the published proposals for the Birmingham northern relief road. This road will be effectively the new M6 bypassing Birmingham.

On the same day as the Secretary of State's written answer to that parliamentary question he wrote to me enclosing a copy. The West Midlands regional office of highways at Five Ways tower also wrote that same day to members of the public advising them of the proposed competition and saying that in the circumstances it would be inappropriate to take decisions on the Featherstone to Coleshill north orbital route until the competition had taken place.

I stress that the delay explicit in the decision-making procedure is caused by the decision to defer until completion of the competition. I also stress that the release of information was arranged by the Secretary of State and the Minister of State without any consultation or inquiry involving local Members of Parliament as to the appropriateness of singling out this new M6 for a competition. Inasmuch as their predecessors had sought and in some respects accepted the views of their colleagues who were affected by the new M6, I deeply regret the Minister's decision to eschew consultation.

I do not believe that this was intentional arrogance. Rather, it was the casual indifference of a functionary. It was insensitivity, not deliberate arrogance, but I ask the Secretary of State and the Minister of State to reflect on the nature of representative government. To consult is not merely a courtesy; it is a way of seeking consent or acquiescence, and it is proper and right.

The conception of what I call the new M6 around Birmingham has been protracted. It was in August 1978 that the Department's road programme and highways policy division first issued a planning brief to the west midlands regional office instructing it to begin preparation of two schemes aimed at a new north orbital route to relieve the severely overloaded section of the M6 passing through the northern part of the west midlands conurbation. The schemes related, respectively, to a section planned to run from Essington—M6—to Bassetts Pole—A38—and to another to run from Bassetts Pole to Dunton. The brief was to examine not only new route solutions but an improvement of existing roads, and it assumed that a high standard dual two-lane all-purpose route would be provided.

The then Parliamentary Under-Secretary announced in a press release dated 9 August 1978 the addition of both schemes into the trunk road preparation pool. In 1980, the two schemes were included in the 1984 onwards reserve list. In the 1983 roads White Paper they were identified as dual three-lane standard roads, and the Bassetts Pole to Dunton scheme was extended to the M42/M6 near Coleshill. Further examination of the schemes led the Department to the conclusion that, to provide as much relief to the M6 as possible, the volumes of traffic that would use the new route would require a dual three-lane route to motorway standard. On that basis, the Department proceeded to public consultation in 1984.

At preview meetings held in Birmingham on 8 May 1984, the director of transport in the regional office presented proposals for what had by then become known as the northern relief route. The following day, 9 May, the Department issued a press release announcing a public consultation exercise on the route. Separate consultation documents for the two schemes were distributed to households in the area.

The documents presented five feasible alternative routes which had been identified between Essington and Bassetts Pole and two between Bassetts Pole and Coleshill. They also included an assessment of the impact of each route, and questionnaires to be completed by 20 July 1984. All the route options could take land and required the demolition of housing and other property. All options would also have effects on land and property remaining close by, in terms of noise, depreciation, severance and so on, during and after construction.

Public exhibitions of the proposals were held from 17 May to 9 June 1984 at a number of local points. Representatives of the Department and of the consulting engineers were in attendance to explain the alternatives and to answer questions. The total attendance at these exhibitions was 6,400, and 6,278 questionnaires were returned. Responses were also received from a number of public bodies. No consensus emerged from the consultation exercise. The response of residents was to reject all routes or to opt for the ones furthest from their homes. The Secretary of State for the Environment—NIMBY—would well appreciate the natural response that most of us have to development.

Opinion among public bodies was divided. The regional office was in the process of analysing the public response when the then Minister of State visited the area in October 1984. Each local Member of Parliament affected by the scheme took up the matter and one of my hon. Friends raised it in an Adjournment debate on 4 December 1984. In his reply to that debate, the Under-Secretary said that he was conscious of the fact that the uncertainty about the new route created anxiety among those living in the area and could lead to a certain degree of blighting of property. For that reason, he said that the Department was anxious to reach as early a decision as possible and to make an announcement in the early part of 1985.

The then Minister of State paid another visit to the area on 12 July this year—I wish that the present Minister of State had done the same. It was not, however, until 11 March 1986, when the then Minister with responsibility for roads and traffic met local Members of Parliament, that the decision became known that the preferred route was broadly in line with the green—Chasewater—and yellow options which had been considered at the public consultation stage.

The Department announced the decision in a press release on 12 March 1986. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary wrote to me enclosing an advance copy of the press release on that date. It reiterated the urgent need for a new road. Paragraph 2 said:

"the main aim of the new road is to provide urgently needed relief to the heavily overloaded sections of the M6 where it passes through the West Midlands conurbation."

It went on to note that the M6 plays a "vital role in the national road network"

but that it had become

"the victim of its own success".

This meant, and means, that it is one of the most heavily used sections of our motorway system. By 1980, average daily flows had already exceeded 110,000 vehicles in places, and peak flows of over 130,000 vehicles a day had been recorded. That is for a road with a design capacity of about 70,000 vehicles a day. The percentage of heavy goods vehicles was 30, which was exceptionally high. In other words, the M6 at certain times is near collapse in the Birmingham section. Anyone who uses the section knows how desperate the situation is. It is made even worse by essential road works and the level of accidents which occur.

The Department noted the growth of traffic levels and recorded that by the design year for the scheme there would be more than 200,000 vehicles per day in the north-west/south-east corridor through the region. A large percentage of the traffic passes through the conurbation or is long-distance traffic which has its origin or destination within it. It is the nature of this corridor traffic which leads many of us to believe that the north Birmingham relief road will become effectively an integral part of a continuous flow of traffic along the M6 from the north-west to the south-east. Hence it is commonly referred to as the new M6. The announcement of the preferred route brought into effect the blight provisions of section 192(1)(f) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971.

The press release also advised that, depending on the time taken to get through the statutory stages and on the availability of funds, work on the scheme would commence in 1991 and that the new road could be open to traffic in 1993. By the time of the planning inspectorate's press release of 8 March 1988, subject to completion of the necessary statutory procedures construction could still start in 1991, but would take about three years to complete. Presumably that means an opening at some time in 1994.

The press release envisaged publication of the draft line orders in mid-1987. In the event, it was September of that year. On 8 March it was announced that there would be a public inquiry between 24 May and 23 September 1988. The inspector, Mr. Kavanagh, reported to the Departments of the Environment and of Transport before Easter of this year.

On 18 May, the Secretary of State published his White Paper entitled "Roads for Prosperity", with no reference to the Birmingham north orbital route. On 22 May, in a flurry of activity, he published his Green Paper entitled "New Roads by New Means", which dealt with bringing in private finance. Again, that did not mention the Birmingham, northern relief route. Characteristically, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State sent a letter dated that same day, which included his planted parliamentary question and his written response, which was to the effect that there is to be a competition for the finance, design, construction and operation of a private road, which would serve broadly the same purposes as would be served by the published proposals for the Birmingham northern relief road. This, for want of a better term, new road proposal would not be confined to the preferred route identified by the previous Secretary of State.

The thought that there is a possibility that a new motorway may be constructed somewhere, don't know where, don't know when, is a curious end piece to the hard-won acquiescence on an identified preferred route. Indeed, the Government have already spent about £10 million of our money on specialist firms and consultants, principally Sir Owen Williams and Partners.

The Minister claims that this work is not abortive. He will make this information available to private commercial firms—not to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker nor to me, nor to the general public who paid for these reports, but he will make it available to private commercial interests. Further, the Secretary of State thinks that it would be inappropriate to take decisions on the presently proposed draft scheme and orders until this "sometime future" competition—date unknown, legislative basis uncertain—has taken place. Homes and lives have been blighted, as recognised by the Department having already paid out £2·3 million, and there are more payments in the pipeline. All this is for a road that we are now led to understand may not be even approximately where its preferred route has been the subject of public inquiry.

I regret that the Minister's advocacy has caused both great uncertainty, with the possibility of a wider shadow of blight extending from Brownhills to Lichfield, and raised the spectre of delay. If I have understood his judgment, it is that somewhere in a corridor running from about Essington to Coleshill there may be a toll motorway. This toll motorway, if it is to meet earlier projections, should be in operation in 1994. It will be about 30 miles long and will have 12 junctions if it is to meet some of the purpose of the presently understood route. Being a private motorway, it will under present legislation require a private Bill or the hybrid Bill procedure. There have been private Bill promoters who can testify that this procedure can involve considerable delay.

To meet that difficulty the Government have decided on the introduction of a new procedure by way of amendment to the Highways Act 1980. The Secretary of State will legislate for the new M6 to be a private road. At least, that was the position until about 4.45 pm yesterday when, in another flurry of activity, the Department responded to a letter written some time ago. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, who unfortunately cannot be here today, wrote to me, and I shall quote his letter as it has some bearing on the debate. It said:

"You have expressed in the strongest terms your own concern, and the representations you have received from your constituents, about the route which any privately financed Birmingham northern relief road should take and about the need to avoid delay—indeed, you are moving an Adjournment debate on the subject tomorrow. Having considered and reflected on these representations, I am writing to you to set out my conclusions."

No discussion, no consultation—my right hon. Friend found himself in a hole and had to send a letter at 4.45 pm on the day before the debate.

"As you know, my original intention had been to leave it open to bidders to propose their own route, for a road serving broadly the same purposes as the public sector proposal which we put to the public inquiry. The aim was to give the private sector maximum flexibility to propose routes which might offer better solutions than the original route; after all, one of the main advantages of involving the private sector in the provisions of roads is to make use of their innovative ideas and skills. Nevertheless, you have made it very clear to me that, after much work on the part of all concerned, the present route has achieved a good degree of consensus; and you have persuaded me that it would be too damaging and disruptive to leave bidders the freedom to propose wholly new routes."

That is two months after the Government had already created great uncertainty and anxiety. It continued:

"I therefore now propose to meet your concerns by requiring bidders to make proposals which broadly follow the line of the route originally proposed by my Department to the public inquiry. They may not propose entirely new routes. Bidders will of course produce their own designs and will have freedom to propose variations or improvements to the route. These will be considered at the public inquiry, along with all other aspects of the successful tenderer's proposals. It will be open to objectors to propose alternative routes or variations, just as they were able to do at the inquiry into the Department's original proposals. The Inspector will have to consider proposals and objections on their merits, and I will examine the Inspector's report in the light of all the relevant considerations.

I am able to meet your concerns about the route because of the special circumstances of the BNRR which you have made so clear to me. Private sector promoters will have greater freedom to propose routes in most other competitions, because there will not be an existing proposal at a fairly advanced stage of preparation. The decision on the route for the BNRR does not therefore set a precedent or compromise the underlying policy.

I appreciate and share your concern about timing of the BNRR"— hallelujah.

"My aim is not to delay the scheme as a result of the private sector competition. The original publicly financed road was not due to open to traffic anyway until the mid-1990s, and that was subject to considerable uncertainty."

That was slippage already. It continued:

"Similar uncertainties apply to a privately financed scheme, and indeed to all major road schemes. Subject to these uncertainties, I would expect a private financed scheme to be able broadly to match the former projected opening date of the mid-1990s. To reinforce the point, I shall ask bidders to make proposals on the basis of an opening date in 1995. For our part, we shall proceed as fast as possible. This month we are issuing background material to potential bidders, and next month a formal invitation to tenderers to pre-quality will be placed in the EC Journal."

I do not want to delay the House, but in that flurry of correspondence I also received a letter from my hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic, responding on behalf of my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport. It is important to some of my constituents because it raises the question of awarding some of the costs of successful objectors. I shall quote it because it is important to put it on the record. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for signing the letter in time for me to receive it before the debate. It said:

"Thank you for your letter of 16 June to Michael Portillo.

It is the Department's practice following a decision on an inquiry to award qualified successful objectors some or all of their costs depending on the degree of success. A qualified objector is one with an interest in the land affected such as owner lessee or occupier.

Where a decision is made to abandon the proposals entirely objectors' costs are dealt with immediately. In cases where it is intended that fresh proposals will be taken forward, the assessment of costs is usually deferred until the final decision has been taken.

In the case of the Birmingham Northern Relief Road it was announced that a decision following the inquiry would be deferred until the private finance competition has taken place. Award of objectors' costs will be considered once the decision on the inquiry has been announced.

If as a result of the competition it is decided to implement proposals other than those taken to the inquiry, claims for costs will be invited from qualified objectors.

Objectors' costs cover all reasonable costs incurred in preparing and presenting the case at the inquiry—including such items as travelling expenses."

Many citizens' action groups, having a genuine concern for their environment and locality, cannot meet the criteria set out in that letter, despite the fact that they may have incurred considerable costs. Some individuals may even be dead by the time that the matter of costs is considered.

My intention is not to review the proposals for new road finance or to attack them. None of us finds it particularly difficult to accept the principle that, in the case of new roads such as the corridor between Birmingham and Manchester announced in the Green Paper, one must canvass all possible alternatives for their financing and construction. However, the northern relief road has already been 10 years in preparation, from its preparatory and initial stages through to the public inquiry. We shall have a difficult problem in political terms in convincing local residents—particularly given that there has been no improvement to Aldridge-Brownhills' roads infrastructure for 25 years, despite its population increasing from 35,000 to nearly 92,000—that they are now confronted by the possibility of a toll road that will toll part of a continuous M6, from the north-west to the south-east. There is also the issue of the 12 junctions, which I am sure my hon. Friend the Minister is considering carefully.

The sequence of announcements has given rise to the belief locally that a deal has been cobbled up with national construction companies such as Tarmac, which have convinced the Ministry that the quick kill method of introducing the concept to the public is to take over a project in which citizens have already invested £10 million and whose public inquiry they also financed. All of that is being thrown up in the air in a curious way. In a debate only the other week, my hon. Friend the Minister said, as I understood him, that the matter merits no significant debate. Therefore, we must countenance either new legislation or the use of the private Member's Bill or hybrid Bill procedure. It is difficult to understand how that does not imply delay, particularly when a Europeanwide competition is also involved.

I have tried to express some of the frustrations that are felt in connection with that matter. What function can we perform as Members of Parliament when a Secretary of State and a Minister of State do not think it is worth even consulting local Members of Parliament and of continuing a tradition established by their predecessors in seeking such advice? This Adjournment debate is indicative of the insensitivity of senior Ministers, who did not even feel that it was worth troubling local residents or their elected representatives in respect of a tremendously important decision.

2.53 pm

The Minister for Roads and Traffic (Mr. Peter Bottomley): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) on securing the debate and on the basically fair way in which he conveyed his views and the concerns and interests of his constituents. My hon. Friend will not be surprised if I totally reject any words of his that might be taken as criticism either of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State or of my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport.

Single Member constituencies make it possible for people's interests to be forcefully presented. If there is one thing to be said about my hon. Friend, it is that he never puts forward his views in any other way. If he has a view worth expressing, he presents it in a manner that ensures that all hear it clearly. That is demonstrated by the response of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in the letter that my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills read out.

I am grateful also for my hon. Friend's kind remarks about the letter on successful objectors' costs. It is important to come to the House of Commons not with some goodies to distract attention, but to try to provide information so that hon. Members can make their speeches in the light of known information rather than do a magician's act.

I now refer to the general point about "New Roads by New Means"—the private funding, design, even private operating opportunities. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has rightly been congratulated on his mainly successful attempts so far to remove unnecessay obstacles to private sector involvement. My hon. Friend, with his west midlands constituency, will know that we would not have had canals if it had been up to the Treasury and the Department of Transport to provide them. Also, we would not have had railways, so many ports, or airports if it had been up to central Government. On many occasions, central Government are even more conservative than I am. In looking for private sector involvement, we have made great strides forward. The Channel tunnel is perhaps the biggest private sector scheme in the world at the moment. I would not spend too much time talking about the Dartford to Thurrock bridge, which is to provide extra capacity linking the M25 across the Thames.

When my right hon. Friend wanted to bring forward new opportunties for private sector involvement, he could have said, "We will not start even looking at any scheme if it has been in the roads programme." That would probably have meant that there would be no private sector involvement, in addition to the ones that we have in different forms at the moment, for about 13 years. I do not think that anyone would want that.

My hon. Friend's main criticism is that the Department was unable to consult him and our hon. Friends who represent the other parts of what we might call the new M6. If that has caused offence, I apologise. It was probably correct to try to treat the House of Commons as a whole in putting forward the proposal. My hon. Friend said also that the Department and its Ministers claim some credit for the modification of what my right hon. Friend called the purist view, instead of allowing private sector competitors to range far and wide and create a great deal of extra uncertainty. In a press notice and in a letter to my hon. Friend, my right hon. Friend said that the bidders will be expected to stick to pretty well the line, the route and the function of the new M6 as we put it to inquiry.

I emphasise the point that my hon. Friend read from the letter from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. We hope that there will not be much unnecessary extra delay. I hope that no one listening to the debate or reading reports of it afterwards will assume that road schemes run like clockwork anyway. The nearest analogy that I can think of is a dinghy race—things can only go wrong, and there is no normal way of accelerating, although we will do the best we can on the M40. My hon. Friend the Minister of State is doing all he can to try to make sure that we learn the lessons. We will all learn lessons from my hon. Friend's speech and from his constituents' concern.

As time moves on, many of the apprehensions that have rightly been expressed will turn out not to have foundation. Notification of the European competition is in the official journal. People will then qualify for the tendering process. That should not provide, as the cliché goes, an ongoing continuing delay situation. It should be a one-off—a notice that, if one wants to come in, that is fine.

I refer those who are interested in this subject to the working party on private finance in the construction industry sector group of the National Economic Development Office and the paper entitled "Private Participation in Infrastructure Projects" by R. S. Dobson. It refers to some of the problems that the private sector faces and what kind of action plan would move things forward. It would be in the interests of the private sector who wish to bid and also in the interests of my hon. Friend's constituents to read it.

I place on record quietly but firmly that nothing that we are doing is at the behest or in the interests of a partlcular construction firm. People may have had their doubts, but they are not correct. On the two other occasions when people have had bright ideas in the construction industry, we have gone out to tender, and on each occasion the people who first had a good idea were not the ones who won the tender competition. There is no given right for people to say that the intellectual property or idea they may have had in the first place, which may or may not duplicate other things in this or in other countries, necessarily gives them the right to win a large contract or to get the advantage of a parliamentary procedure, which, as my hon. Friend said, could be under general legislation or a hybrid Bill. What matters is that we meet the interests of travellers while meeting the interests of local people during the period of uncertainty.

The blight and the delay connected with various road schemes cause me concern. My hon. Friend and his parliamentary neighbours share that concern. Future plans will be introduced without unnecessary delay. When the history of the Birmingham northern relief road, or the new M6, is written, I think we shall find that the movement towards the provision of private finance is a plus rather than a minus and that, because of my hon. Friend's work, and that of others like him, there will be relatively little extra delay. His constituents will therefore be grateful for the representations that my hon. Friend has made on their behalf in the House and to the Departmentof Transport.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute to Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 3 July 1989

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Conciliation Service

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration the Lord Chancellor's Department is giving to the establishment of a conciliation service to assist the courts in matrimonial and custody cases.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor received the report of the conciliation project unit based at the university of Newcastle upon Tyne in March of this year. The report, and comments upon it, will be carefully evaluated and the role of conciliation considered as part of the Lord Chancellor's announced rolling programme of reform of family law and procedure.

Family Courts

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Attorney-General what recent representations the Lord Chancellor has received on the subject of family courts.

The Attorney-General: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor continues to receive correspondence regarding family courts both from hon. Members and from members of the public and interested organisations. Precise information on the number of representations is not readily available as much of the correspondence refers to family courts as one of a number of issues or as an ancillary matter to the main focus of the correspondence.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General what is the longest and shortest time taken between the dispatch of an explanatory statement from the British embassy in Islamabad and arrival at the immigration appellate offices in London during the last year, to date; what is the longest and shortest time taken by the explanatory statements being sent from London and arrival in Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Responsibility for dispatching explanatory statements from diplomatic posts overseas to the United Kingdom is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. Explanatory statements from Islamabad are sent to the appellate authorities by diplomatic bag. During the last year to date the longest transit time for diplomatic mail between Islamabad and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office was 11 days, the shortest two days. Mail received in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office addressed to the appellate authorities is forwarded by daily Government van service.

Once received at the appellate authorities' headquarters in London, explanatory statements and the accompanying notices of appeal are checked, processed and where appropriate, dispatched to regional hearing centres. During the last year to date, it is estimated that explanatory statements have taken between three and 17 weeks to reach the hearing centre at Leeds.

The delay in dispatching case papers to Leeds reflects the pressure on the appellate authorities caused by the increasing volume of work. The number of cases received in 1988 was 60 per cent. higher than in 1987, and there has been a further increase in the first five months of 1989. The appellate authorities have employed additional staff and overtime in an endeavour to minimise delays and the Lord Chancellor's Department continues to monitor the position.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received about delays in explanatory statements being dispatched from the post in Islamabad to the immigration appellate authorities in London and dispatch from London to Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Responsibility for the despatch of explanatory statements from Islamabad to London rests with the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. The Lord Chancellor, who is responsible for the administration of the immigration appellate authorities, has received no specific representations about the length of time taken for explanatory statements to be processed in London and sent to Leeds, other than from the hon. Member himself.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Attorney-General what action he proposes to take in the light of the expressed intention of the Storehouse Group to open its shops for trading on Sundays in defiance of the provisions of the Shops Act 1950.

The Attorney-General: It is the duty of each local authority to enforce the Shops Act 1950 in its area. I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer that I gave him on 17 April 1989.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Environment-friendly Products

65. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken to encourage environmentally friendly products as part of the Government's overseas development strategy.

Mr. Chris Patten: We support research into a number of environmentally friendly products. For example, we fund the development of appropriate, energy-efficient technologies and of more precise application systems for pesticides. All programme managers in my Department are required to ensure the environmental soundness of projects.

UN Environmental Convention

66. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications for overseas aid policy of the United Nations environmental convention initiative.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government have proposed a simple framework or umbrella convention setting out general principles for good practice in matters affecting the world's climate. The implications for our aid work would be to enhance the priority given in developing countries to programmes aimed at improving energy efficiency and at forestry. We are already using aid funds in these areas and are seeking to identify further projects which we might be able to support. It is too early to say how any specific protocol subsequently negotiated under the convention would affect aid policy.

European Community (Aid)

67. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the combined average gross national product given in overseas aid by all members of the European Community, except the United Kingdom, in the latest available year.

Mr. Chris Patten: Figures are available only for those member countries of the European Community which are also members of the development assistance committee of the OECD. In any case, such figures are open to varying interpretations. The overall percentage of gross national product given in overseas aid by these seven countries, excluding the United Kingdom, was 0·53 per cent. in 1987 and is provisionally estimated at the same figure in 1988.

Bursaries

68. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications he has received for bursaries for students from the Republic of South Africa and Botswana to attend courses at British further education establishments for the academic year 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The British Council, on our behalf, has received well over 2,200 applications for bursaries for the academic year 1989-90 for students from South Africa, and 100 applications for students from Botswana.

Overseas Students

69. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of expenditure on overseas students funded under the aid programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Provision for the financial year 1989-90 is £94 million in support of more than 15,000 overseas students. In addition, a contribution of £5·8 million is being made available to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office scholarships and awards scheme.

Vietnam

70. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he expects to restore development aid to Vietnam in the light of Vietnam's withdrawal from Cambodia.

Mr. Chris Patten: It is still too early to give a firm indication on development aid to Vietnam. We will consider this in the light of the actual withdrawal of troops from Cambodia.

Guyana

71. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support he is providing for Guyana's economic reform programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: Provided that the IMF programme remains viable, we shall be providing for the three years 1989 to 1991 (a) £13·7 million capital aid for the purchase of United Kingdom imports; (b) a $US8 million bridging loan to help Guyana pay its debt service arrears to the international financial institutions when they fall due in November; (c) a waiver of about £1 million a year of payments due on past United Kingdom aid loans; and (d) a technical co-operation programme costing about £1·5 million a year, aimed primarily at strengthening public sector management.

Central Africa

72. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of official assistance to central African countries is given in the form of medical supplies.

Mr. Chris Patten: Information is not available in the precise form requested. In 1987, the latest year for which figures are available, 3 per cent. of the Overseas Development Administration's capital project aid to Malawi, Zambia and Zimbabwe, taken together, was spent on the health sector. In the same year the proportion of British aid-financed personnel in those countries working in health was 14 per cent.

Sub-Saharan Africa

73. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total bilateral aid in real terms given by the United Kingdom to sub-Saharan Africa in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Chris Patten: British bilateral aid to sub-Saharan Africa in constant 1988 prices was £410 million in 1979 and an estimated £400 million in 1988.

Indonesia

Mr. Robert Banks To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) to which projects soft loans in the £50 million aid package to Indonesia announced on 14 June are to be applied;

(2) what is the number of British companies and the types of products which will be supplied to Indonesia as part of the recently announced package of aid;

(3) what is the number of British specialists who will be directly employed in Indonesia as part of the recently announced aid package;

(4) whether the recently announced aid package to Indonesia will result in any greater preservation of the rain forest.

Mr. Chris Patten: The £50 million aid package to Indonesia announced on 14 June is the second tranche of a £100 million soft loan facility signed with the Government of Indonesia in December 1988, and means that £185 million worth of soft loans are now available to fund projects in Indonesia. These funds are not allocated at the outset to specific projects, but likely candidates are the subject of feasibility studies and appraisals and then, if both Governments agree, are allocated funds. It is not, therefore, possible at this stage to say which projects will be allocated funds, how many British companies or specialists will benefit or what types of products will be supplied, but we will, of course, be seeking to maximise the benefits to British industry, as well as to Indonesia, of these funds. One of the leading candidates for funding is a forestry radio communications system project aimed at improving the Indonesian Ministry of Forestry's management and control of the rain forests.

Soft Loans

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the amount of soft loans currently provided by the United Kingdom in the form of aid to Commonwealth countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1988 Commonwealth countries received £7,863,050 in the form of concessional loans qualifying as official development assistance. So far no soft loan agreements under the aid and trade provision have been concluded with Commonwealth countries, though several offers of soft loan assistance have been made.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the amount of soft loans currently provided by the United Kingdom in the form of aid to non-Commonwealth developing countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1988 non-Commonwealth developing countries received £4,833,155 from the United Kingdom in the form of concesional loans qualifying as official development assistance. In addition 12 soft loans worth in total £399 million have been concluded with six non-Commonwealth developing countries under the aid and trade provision.

Indonesia (Rain Forest Discussions)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent mission to Indonesia to discuss rain forest issues.

Mr. Chris Patten: The recent forestry project identification mission made good progress in discussing with the Indonesian Government the provision of technical co-operation in the forestry sector. The mission recommends a four year co-ordinated programme of assistance with emphasis on improving the management (including natural regeneration) of the lowland rain forest of Indonesia. Senior Indonesian officials support the mission's findings in principle and when the latter have been formally approved, three project preparation missions will be mounted, probably in late 1989.

Tanzania

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance was provided to Tanzania for the purchase of vehicles.

Mr. Chris Patten: During the financial year 1988-89, we provided nearly £7·5 million for vehicles from within the finance we made available to support the Tanzanian balance of payments. We also separately provided over £750,000 as emergency assistance for trucks for the cotton sector. In addition, we provided vehicles as part of our support to a number of development projects.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial aid has been given to Tanzania in 1989.

Mr. Chris Patten: Gross British bilateral aid to Tanzania in 1988 is estimated at £33·5 million. This year we expect to maintain our programme at a substantial level.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Irradiated Food

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to forbid the sale of irradiated food in restaurants.

Mr. Ryder: The sale of irradiated food in catering outlets presents different practical problems from sales in retail shops. I am in the process of examining the issues involved.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the procedures his Minister will go through up to the lifting of the ban on food irradiation and the timetable for these procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have made clear that we need to obtain wider powers to enable us to provide for the control mechanism that we consider necessary for food irradiation. It will then be necessary to consult all the interested parties over the details of the control system and to introduce the necessary regulations to give effect to this. The timetable will depend on a number of factors, in particular the timing of the primary legislation.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes to take any further action in the light of the Southwood report on bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1989, c. 352]: The detailed plans in relation to the next stage of this vital study have now been drawn up, and implementation will start shortly. This will involve the purchase of 660 cattle, 330 offspring of animals affected with BSE and 330 control animals. They will be transported to and housed at the Ministry's experimental husbandry farms at Boxworth, Drayton and Gleadthorpe. The study will last up to seven years and will cost an estimated £4·7 million.

Farm Diversification Grants

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food further to his reply to the hon. Member for South Shields of 22 June, Official Report, column 251, if he is able to list the reasons for rejecting applications for farm diversification grant schemes in 1988.

Mr. Ryder: The reasons for rejection of grant applications were as follows:

	Number
Able to carry out work without grant	45
Enterprises of works not eligible	44
Applicants not eligible	27
Receiving grant from other public funds	4
Planning consent refused	4
Not likely to be viable	3
Other miscellaneous reasons including work started before application	10

Gas Emissions

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his reply to the hon. Member for South Shields of 27 June, if he will list all the schemes introduced by his Ministry which help reduce greenhouse gas emissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The measures include the designation of 19 environmentally sensitive areas since 1987; the introduction of the farm woodland scheme and the set-aside scheme in 1988; and the introduction, earlier this year, of a new farm and conservation grant scheme which offers grant inter alia for energy saving, effluent facilities and for the regeneration of native woodlands and heather moors. In addition, the policies adopted by the European Community in recent years to reduce surplus production of agricultural commodities will help to mitigate emissions.

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of man hours in the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service devoted to environmental training for each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Although records have not been kept in the precise form requested, it is estimated that from 1980 to the end of 1988 on average 4,780 man hours per year have been spent on ADAS environmental core training. In addition, a significant amount of environmental training is undertaken as an integral part of discipline training for new entrants and ADAS advisers.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of posts in the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service devoted to training for each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Participation in training activities is an essential and integral feature of the professional development and responsibilities of all ADAS staff. No individual staff are allocated full-time to training duties but all officers responsible for managing other ADAS staff, or with appropriate professional skills, or experience have responsibility to monitor, arrange or provide training in appropriate subjects.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the research projects directly aimed at (a) finding the causes of salmonella enteriditis, botulism and other similar infections such as salmonella typhimurium and (b) the treatment and or vaccination of poultry flocks.

Mr. Ryder: Research on the causes of human infections is a matter for the Department of Health. My Department however funds the following work aimed at minimising the risk of infection through the food chain:

Predictive Modelling of the Growth of Pathogenic Microorganisms in Food Systems.

A co-ordinated programme of research into the growth and survival of microorganisms in real food systems. The development of a modelling database and expert system for eventual use by the food industry. The programme will initially concentrate on those food-related microorganisms that are of major public health significance: Salmonella typhimurium, Salmonella enteritidis, Clostridium botulinum, Listeria monocytogenes and other Salmonella and Clostridium species.

Other Research involving Salmonella enteriditis, Salmonella typhimurium, Clostridium botulinum.

Risk and Hazard Analysis in egg infections.

Thermal destruction of Salmonella enteriditis phase type 4 in the domestic cooking of food containing eggs.

Use of Non-radioctive DNA probes for the detection of pathogenic Bacteria in food.

Enzyme-linked immunological Biosensors for detection and identification of Pathogenic Bacteria in food.

Determination of Food Constituents and contaminants by ELISA.

Heat induced thermotolerance in food Poisoning organisms.

Survey of Bacteriological Quality of goats milk.

Lysozyme destruction of Gram negative organisms in Chicken and Red meat.

Bacteriological Hazards of large meat roasts in catering and long storage of chilled foods in catering.

Detection and quantification of microorganisms in foods by novel lectin-based assays.

An investigation into the use of biosorbants for the concentration, separation and detection of low levels of food contaminants with special reference to pathogenic microorganisms such as Salmonella.

Guidelines for Pasteurisation.

Develop and investigate novel methods to separate and concentrate microorganisms from food to enhance rapid microbiological methods.

Development of design nucleic acid probes for the rapid detection of food microorganisms.

Serological diagnosis of Salmonella enteritidis infection.

Plasmid profile analysis of S. enteriditis.

Development of a Salmonella enteritidis infection Vaccine to prevent Salmonella infections in chickens.

Salmonella Service: Bacteria typing, Surveillance and work under the Protein Processing Order.

Work being carried out under the Zoonosis Order and in collaboration with the Public Health Laboratory Service.

Factors Determining Intestinal colonisation by Salmonella.

Investigating the basis of Virulence of the Salmonella genus.

Variation in virulence of Salmonellas, Host Responses to infection, Novel Vaccines and Strategies for Use.

Salmonellosis in Cattle—to determine the epidemiology in order that methods to minimize the spread of and effects of infection can be formulated and applied.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the specific arrangements for the monitoring of possible salmonella enteriditis or typhimurium, botulism and other infections in (a) animal feedingstuffs, (b) eggs and (c) poultry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Monitoring for the presence of salmonella eneteriditis and typhimurium in animal feedingstuffs is already carried out on a voluntary basis by many manufacturers. The Government are shortly to introduce voluntary codes of practice which require the monitoring of animal feedingstuffs and raw materials used in their manufacture. Poultry laying flocks are subject to compulsory monitoring with similar provisions to be introduced shortly for breeding flocks and hatcheries. There is no requirement to monitor for botulism toxin because botulism toxin occurs in isolated pockets and would not readily be detected.

As regards other infections, investigations are carried out by the state veterinary service at veterinary investigation centres on material submitted from private veterinary practices and other sources.

Meat Products (Contents)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what regulatory provision exists concerning the minimum meat content of pies and other meat products; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will take steps to require food manufacturers to label meat pies and other meat products so that the percentage meat content is clear.

Mr. Ryder: The Meat Products and Spreadable Fish Products Regulations 1984 already require most meat products to bear a clear declaration of their minimum meat content on the label. In addition, they contain minimum meat content requirements for a number of products including meat pies.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Class Sizes

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the average class sizes in primary and secondary education in state and private schools, respectively, in the years 1979, 1984 and 1988.

Mr. Butcher: Information on class sizes in independent schools is not collected centrally. The average class size in maintained primary and secondary schools in 1979, 1984 and 1988 were as follows:

	1979	1984	1988
Primary	25·9	24·7	25·4
Secondary	21·0	20·4	19·9

Classes relate to those taught by one teacher at a selected time on the day of the census count in January and do not necessarily represent the pattern of classes over the academic year as a whole.

Book Acquisitions

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information the Government have on whether (a) the University Funding Council intends to continue its initiative to provide specific funds for the purchase of books for university libraries after 1989-90 and (b) it intends to extend the initiative to libraries at polytechnics and institutes of higher education;

(2) whether the Government have monitored the effect on library acquisitions of the additional funding provided in 1987-88 for university library acquisitions.

Mr. Jackson: It is for individual universities and polytechnics to decide their own priorities within the total resources at their disposal. I know of no plans by the Universities Funding Council to prolong the initiative launched by the University Grants Committee or by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council to adopt such an initiative for its sector. Universities' annual expenditure returns are monitored by the Universities Funding Council.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the levels of funding for acquisitions in polytechnic and university libraries.

Mr. Jackson: Representations have been received from the Publishers Association and the standing conference of national and university libraries, as well as from a number of hon. Members in the context of general higher education matters.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take within the new system of student finance to assist students to spend more on books.

Mr. Jackson: It is for individual students to decide what priority to accord to particular items of expenditure within the resources at their disposal. Top-up loans will increase these resources.

Research Grants

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money his Department expects to save through the withdrawal of funds for scientific research deemed near market; and how he intends to reallocate the money saved.

Mr. Jackson: This Department funds basic and strategic research through the science budget. We have not withdrawn any funding in respect of near market research.

University Applications

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many advanced level secondary school pupils from (a) local education authority maintained secondary schools and (b) private sector maintained secondary schools applied for a place at each university in the United Kingdom in 1979 and in 1988; and how many, from each sector, each university finally accepted.

Mr. Butcher: Information on individual universities is not available. Available information for all United Kingdom universities is given in the following table.

Applications and acceptances through the Universities Central Council on Admissions of home students from England and Wales who had attempted A levels.

Type of school	1983		1988
	Applications	Acceptances	Applications	Acceptances
Maintained sector
Grammar/technical	10,247	5,320	7,731	4,588
Sixth form college	12,279	5,997	11,910	6,403
Comprehensive	50,606	22,119	41,295	20,658
Other secondary and modern	758	286	310	120
Total maintained	73,890	33,722	61,246	31,769
Independent	23,365	12,814	23,519	14,217

Library Provision

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what steps he is taking to improve the library provisions in universities and polytechnics;

(2) when he last discussed the subject of adequate funding for libraries of universities and polytechnics with the Universities Grants Committee.

Mr. Jackson: Decisions on the funding of university and polytechnic libraries are for the institutions themselves, in consultation as necessary with the relevant funding council.

Teacher Shortages

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has had any recent representations about the loss of teachers and headteachers from the profession because of (a) house prices and interest rates, (b) recent education reforms, (c) powers to school governors and (d) ability of schools to opt out.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about the effect on teacher supply of house prices in the south-east. I am not aware of representations on loss of teachers and headteachers from the profession for the other reasons listed.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress being made towards implementing the national curriculum and on whether teacher shortages are likely to delay its implementation in any area.

Mrs. Rumbold: Implementation will start this autumn, when schools must begin teaching programmes of study in maths and science to 11-year-olds and in maths, science and English to five-year-olds. Pupils aged five to 14 must also study the foundation subjects for a reasonable time. We do not expect teacher shortages to delay implementation. My Department's action programme to combat teacher shortages is designed to help local authorities and schools to recruit the teachers they need.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress being made towards implementing local management schemes for schools and how such schemes can tackle teacher shortages.

Mrs. Rumbold: Good progress is being made by local education authorities towards producing schemes of local management for submission to my right hon. Friend by 30 September. Approved schemes will be introduced from 1 April 1990. Local management will ensure the best possible match between schools' needs and the deployment of resources including the key resource of teachers.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further steps he will be taking to encourage local education authorities to organise individual financial packages to solve difficulties encountered in recruiting high-calibre teachers and heads.

Mrs. Rumbold: The interim advisory committee believes that teacher recruitment and retention measures should be flexible and precisely targeted, and that this is best achieved if they are designed locally. It recommended that authorities review their present policies to ensure that they are meeting the needs of their schools. My right hon. Friend has strongly endorsed this recommendation. Appropriate measures may include relocation and housing assistance and should embrace the flexible use of incentive allowances, an additional 27,500 of which will become available from September.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to recruit Danish and other European national qualified teachers to fill teacher vacancies in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for local education authorities and schools, as the employer, to recruit teachers. On 21 December 1988 the Council of Ministers of the European Communities adopted a directive which will enable a range of professionals, including teachers, to have their professional qualifications recognised for the purpose of practise in member states other than their own. The directive must be implemented by 1991. My right hon. Friend proposes to make regulations according the benefits of the directive to members of the teaching profession qualified in other member states from September this year. This should assist LEAs in their recruitment of teachers from other member states. In addition, the Department has agreed to support a project to recruit and train teachers from France and West Germany, and is considering another in respect of German science teachers. Officials have put local authorities who have expressed an interest in touch with the Danish authorities.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has had in the past four months on teacher shortages region by region, subject by subject and from education authorities, headteachers or governors.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not readily available in the form requested. My right hon. Friend has received in the past four months some 200 letters from local education authorities, headteachers, governors and parents about teacher shortages—including correspondence forwarded by hon. Members.

Maintained Primary Schools

Mr. Raison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his best estimate of the number of children in maintained primary schools where the age of transfer is 11, 12 and 13 years, respectively.

Mr. Butcher: In January 1988 the numbers of pupils in maintained schools of the following age ranges were as follows:

Age range of schools	Total pupils
5-11, 7-11, 8-11	2,589,690
5-12, 8,12	255,580
9-13, 10-13, 11-13	196,350

There were no primary schools in 1988 with a transfer age of 13: all the schools shown in the table with this age of transfer were middle or secondary.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Journeys

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister when she last used (a) a scheduled British Rail train service and (b) any scheduled public transport service when travelling on official business.

The Prime Minister: February 1987. For reasons of practicality and security it is difficult for me to travel by rail on official business. I do so when a suitable opportunity arises.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Soviet Union (Emigration)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will ascertain from the Soviet authorities the cause of the delay in the appearance of new legislation on emigration promised by the Soviet Union for the last 18 months.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are continuing to press the Soviet authorities over the urgent need for a new emigration law. We believe that this should establish clearly the principle that all Soviet citizens must be free to leave their country when they wish, and would thus—if properly implemented—provide a lasting solution to the refusenik problem.

Human Rights

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about the denial of human rights and the use of torture in the last five years in South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We make frequent representations to the South African Government, both bilaterally and with our European partners, to express our concern about human rights. More detailed information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about the denial of human rights in the last five years in Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Eggar: We have made no specific representations, but the Government of Saudi Arabia are aware of our view that all Governments should respect human rights.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about the denial of human rights in the last five years in New Zealand.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about the denial of human rights in the last five years in Chile.

Mr. Eggar: We have made a number of representations about human rights to the Chilean authorities over the last five years. The precise information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about the denial of human rights in the last five years in Austria.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about the denial of human rights in the last five years in Belgium.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on recent allegations of torture in Fiji.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made in the last five years complaining about the denial of human rights and the use of torture in Yugoslavia.

Mr. Eggar: We have made a number of representations about human rights to the Yugoslav authorities over the last five years. The precise information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made in the last five years complaining about the denial of human rights and the use of torture in Paraguay.

Mr. Eggar: We have made a number of representations about human rights to the Paraguayan authorities over the last five years. The precise information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made in the last five years complaining about the denial of human rights and the use of torture in India.

Mr. Eggar: None. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 23 May.

Islamabad

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he is doing to speed up the dispatch and processing by his Department of explanatory statements prepared by the post in Islamabad and by the appellate authorities within the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I have given to his similar question today. Explanatory statements are sent to the appellate authorities by diplomatic bag and this arrangement will continue.

Responsibility for the independent appellate authority (IAA) rests with the Lord Chancellor. I understand that in 1988 the volume of cases received by the IAA increased by 60 per cent. compared with 1987 and that the volume has risen further this year. In order to cope with that considerable and unexpected rise in workload the IAA has recruited an additional four staff in the last six months. Overtime is being worked and other measures are being taken to help improve efficiency.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he is doing to speed up the processing by the post in Islamabad of explanatory statements prepared by the Home Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In recent months staffing levels of the immigration section of the British embassy in Islamabad have been increased. On average, explanatory statements are now prepared and forwarded to the appellate authorities within four to six weeks of receipt of an appeal. Individual cases may take longer depending on what further inquiries the entry clearance officer needs to make in the light of the grounds for appeal.

Mrs. Anwar Sultana

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mrs. Anwar Sultana, whose date of birth is 9 May 1957, and whose reference is IMM/92028, first applied to the post in Islamabad to enter the United Kingdom; and when a decision is to be taken on her application.

Mr. Eggar: In accordance with the recent guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the question to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive a reply from the unit in due course.

WALES

Research Grants

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money was provided by his Department for research into the links between pollution and human health (i) each year from 1979-89 and (ii) in the current financial year.

Mr. Grist: The Department has funded or contributed toward the costs of, a number of research projects concerned with the effects of pollution. Details of the major studies supported during the period in question are contained in the reports entitled "Research Wales" which are published annually by the Welsh Office. Copies of these reports are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much of his Department's budget is devoted to research purposes; how much is given in grants for research; and what proportion of each figure has been devoted to near market research (a) in the current financial year and (b) in each of the last three financial years.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to Tables 14a and 14b of the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development 1988", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. None of my Department's budget is devoted to near market research.

Research Grants

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the research grants given for near market research for which his Department is directly or indirectly responsible in the current financial year and each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have not made any such grants.

Drinking Water

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) of 14 June, Official Report, column 416, he will list the number of people affected and the main population centres supplied with water from supplies subject to European Community derogations; and when he now expects the need for derogations will be removed.

Mr. Grist: Supplies subject to derogations are mainly in rural areas with most of the supply areas affected being situated in Gwynedd, north Dyfed and south Powys. Information concerning the numbers of people affected is not available. The need for most of the derogations should be removed by 1990 and all by 1995 at the latest.

Welsh Development Agency (Management Buy-out)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he proposes to permit a management buy-out of the Welsh development Agency's sub-regional west Wales organisation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has received proposals for management buy-outs from the board of the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will meet the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency and indicate to him that he should forbid senior managers of the agency from working on buy-out proposals; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if, when he next meets the board of the Welsh Development Agency, he will instruct the board to cease the consideration of buy-out plans by senior managers and to improve the board's capacity to attract inward investment and to build advance factories in Wales.

(5) what is his policy concerning management buy-outs and the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received no proposal for management buy-outs from the board of the Welsh Development Agency, though I encourage the agency to be alert to any prospect for increasing the efficiency and effectiveness of its activities through greater private sector involvement in the full range of its activities.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will institute an investigation and publish a report into proposals by the Welsh Development Agency's west Wales regional director and the west Wales senior investment executive to buy out the west Wales region and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. This is a matter for the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of employees and the value of, or the rent of the premises of the west Wales Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. Peter Walker: There are 17 full-time employees in the Welsh Development Agency's west Wales region. As at 31 March 1989 the value of premises administered by the region was £5·1 million.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the Welsh Development Agency research, secretarial and technical facilities were used by the Welsh Development Agency employees to facilitate studies and proposals concerning management buy-out proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: As far as the Welsh Development Agency is aware, none of its research, secretarial or technical facilities was drawn on to formulate the proposals made for the west Wales region.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the senior management of the Welsh Development Agency's west Wales region first proposed to the Welsh Development Agency's chairman that there should be a management buy-out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I understand from the WDA that this particular proposal was first mentioned within the agency in October 1988.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are (a) the current, (b) the 1987, and (c) the 1988 budgets of the west Wales Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: These are matters for the agency, but it informs me that the expenditure budgets directly under the control of the west Wales regional office amounted to a total of £1·4 million in 1987-88 and £1·7 million in 1988-89. In the current year they will amount to £1·5 million. The figures are not, however, directly comparable due to a reorganisation of the agency's regions in July 1988. The figures also omit a number of items of major expenditure including new factory building which are controlled and accounted for by central departments of the agency.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when he last met the west Wales Welsh Development Agency's senior investment director;

(2) when he last met the west Wales Welsh Development Agency regional director; and if he discussed management buy-outs.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am not aware that I have met these officials of the Welsh Development Agency and have certainly not discussed management buy-outs with them.

NORTHERN IRELAND

West Link (Belfast)

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action is being taken to relieve the current congestion which is occurring on West Link in Belfast in the light of the construction of the new cross-harbour bridges.

Mr. Needham: Proposals for the improvement of West Link are included as part of the highway measures in the Belfast urban area plan. The recommendations of the inspector following the public inquiry are awaited.

M1 Motorway

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are his intentions regarding the improvement of the road from the M1 motorway at Dungannon to Omagh, Strabane and Londonderry; and what is the accident rate on (i) the present road and (ii) as an average for the Province.

Mr. Needham: Proposals for the improvement of the road from the M1 motorway at Dungannon to Omagh, Strabane and Londonderry are currently under consideration. Stage I of the Omagh through pass is currently under constructon and stage I of the Strabane bypass will commence very soon.

The three year average of accidents/million vehicle kilometres on this stretch of road is 0·48. There is no national average for the Province. The United Kingdom national average is 0·35.

Dual Carriageways

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration is being given to the construction of lengths of dual carriageway or climbing lanes on arterial routes and roads to ports supporting heavy lorry traffic; and when essential schemes already commenced in stages will be completed.

Mr. Needham: The roads system in Northern Ireland is constantly under review and capital improvements are dictated by capacity demand. Each proposed scheme is subjected to a strict cost-benefit analysis which determines its priority within the roads capital works programme. Arterial routes and roads to ports are fully catered for within that programme.

Essential schemes already commenced in stages are planned for completion as follows:

Omagh through pass—1994
Enniskillen stages 1, 2 and 3—1990
Newry bypass—1994
A/26 Antrim-Ballymena stage II late 1993

Payments for Debt

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland from how many people deductions were made under the Payments for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1971 in each of the years from 1979 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 20 June 1989]: The number of people from whom deductions have been made is not available, but the number of debt cases, recorded by the four main creditor bodies, in respect of which deductions were made in 1988-89 under the Payments for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1971 was 16,479. Directly equivalent information for the earlier years is not available, but I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave her on 25 October 1988, Official Report at column 137.

With effect from April 1988, the major proportion of deductions from benefits against arrears of rent, rates, electricity and gas charges have been made under the provisions of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1987, and the 1988-89 figure given already referred to excludes deductions under these regulations.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

74. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what percentage of cases dealt with by magistrates courts, judgment or sentence is deferred from the original hearing; and what proposals he has to shorten the length of time between arrest and the conclusion of a case and to cut the number of appearances of individual defendants in respect of a single charge.

Mr. Hurd: In 1988 it is estimated that 76 per cent. of cases were adjourned one or more times. Measures to reduce delays include the establishment of a scrutiny of the magistrates courts service and of a committee to review the procedure of the magistrates courts; the introduction on an experimental basis of power for courts to remand defendants in custody in certain circumstances for up to 28 days at a time; the development of the magistrates courts management information system; and the progressive introduction of statutory time limits which govern the period during which an accused may be held in custody awaiting committal or trial.

Television Licences

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints his Department has received about anomalies in the application of the concessionary television licence scheme since the rules change in May 1988; and if he will give details.

Mr. Renton: Since the change in the regulations in May 1988, we have received visits from five hon. Members and 202 letters, 98 of them from hon. Members, about aspects of the concessionary TV licensing scheme. The nature of each complaint is not separately recorded, but the main points raised were whether the scheme should be extended to ordinary housing, the treatment of new residents of schemes which no longer qualified and whether the circumstances of individual housing schemes fitted the new regulations.

Miss S. A. Lawrence

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will inquire into the reasons why Miss S. A. Lawrence of 68 Sutton road, Southend whose date of birth is 1 February 1952, and who applied to his office in Croydon on 27 December 1987, and forwarded a cheque for £170, has had no notification since that time apart from an immediate acknowledgement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Home Office received some 300,000 citizenship applications in the course of 1987, mostly in connection with the ending of certain registration rights under the British Nationality Act 1981. This led to delays in completing naturalisation that are currently around 22 months. Miss Lawrence applied for naturalisation in December 1987. Her application will reach its turn for consideration within the next few months. I am not aware of any reason for giving it priority.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the results of the scrutiny of the working of section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 which was undertaken by his Department.

Mr. Hurd: The report of the scrutiny of section 11 grant is being published today, and a copy has been placed in the Library.

The Government welcome the report's thorough analysis of the way in which the system has operated. The report shows that there is still a need for special provision to help break down barriers which prevent people from the ethnic minorities from using fully their opportunities for educational, economic and social development.

We are considering further what changes need to be made to improve the effectiveness of help provided to ethnic minority communities by services funded under section 11 grant. Such services are one important means of enabling men and women from Britain's ethnic minorities to play a growing and confident part in the mainstream of our national life.

Police Stations

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report in tabular form the results of the Home Office survey conducted in December 1987 into the extent of old and sub-standard police stations in the Metropolitan police area giving the names and locations of stations which are (a) first class, (b) second class, (c) vulnerable and (d) irrecoverable.

Mr. Hurd [holding answer 29 June 1989]: The Home Office survey focused on the extent of old and sub-standard police stations in England and Wales. Questionnaries were issued to the Metropolitan police only in respect of police stations which were in categories C and D. The total number of stations and the number in each category, have changed since 1987. The position is summarised as follows:

	Numbers
A first class	27
B second class	64
C vulnerable	58
D irrecoverable	37
Total	186

The details of the gradings of stations are as follows:

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many student hours have been lost in recreation classes in the last three months in Her Majesty's prison, Wandsworth; and what percentage this is of the normal evening provision.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 28 June 1989]: In the 12-week period ending 23 June 1989 a total of 3,350 student hours were lost: this represents 35 per cent. of the normal evening class provision at the establishment.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of books issued to prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Wandsworth (a) in the three months before fresh start and (b) in the last three months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 28 June 1989]: In the 12-week period preceding the implementation of fresh start (5 June 1988) 17,797 books were issued to prisoners. In the 12-week period ending 23 June 1989 a total of 9,546 books were issued.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the governor of Wandsworth prison on staffing levels at the prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Staffing levels are discussed in the normal course between governors and regional management. A round of discussions on staffing levels has taken place between the governor of Wandsworth and regional staff over the last two months, and management is considering the position.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Internal Market Council

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will report on the Internal Market Council held on 14 June.

Mr. Maude: The Council adopted the electro-magnetic compatibility directive, designed to facilitate free trade in electrical apparatus by ensuring that it does not produce or receive interference. It reached common positions on the fifth amendment to the cosmetics directive; on modifications to three directives dealing with technical standards for tractors; and on the proposed regulation on the giving of security to ensure payment of customs debts (the last of these being subject to a United Kingdom parliamentary scrutiny reserve).

The Council discussed the proposed European Community mergers regulation, and the proposed directive to ensure compliance with public procurement directives. The Commission withdrew its proposal for a right of residence directive and indicated that it would now put forward new proposals on this subject shortly.

Community Charge

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether licences for telecommunications operators contain provisions enabling them to inform community charge registration officers of changes of address by telephone subscribers.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 26 June 1989]: There are no provisions in telecommunications licences which expressly enable operators to pass on such information.

Business Development Consultancy Initiative

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total amount of expenditure on business development consultancy initiative between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989 and for each of the region and island authorities in Scotland.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 29 June 1989]: In the period from 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989 the Department contributed £1·6 million to the cost of consultancies in Scotland under the business development consultancy initiatives. It is estimated that those consultancies not completed by 31 March 1989 will cost the Department a further £2·1 million. A breakdown of expenditure for each region and island authority in Scotland is not available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total number of applications (a) received and (b) approved for business development consultancy initiative between April 1988 and 31 March 1989 and for each of the region and island authorities in Scotland.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 29 June 1989] In the period from 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989, a total of 1,529 applications were received for the business development consultancy initiatives in Scotland. In the same period, 1,235 applications were approved for assisted consultancy. A breakdown of the applications received and approved for each region and island authority in Scotland is as follows:

TRANSPORT

A33

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he is making on the upgrading of the Otterbourne to Chilworth section of the A33 trunk road to motorway standards; and when he expects the work to be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Works in advance of the main contract for the Compton to Bassett section of the M3 are proceeding satisfactorily. We hope to award the main contract shortly. Construction should be completed around the end of 1991.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is satisfied with British Rail's safety measures associated with its proposal to run the proposed high speed rail link parallel to the M20 motorway through the village of Sellindge.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail will need to satisfy the railway inspectorate on this and other safety aspects of the proposed Channel tunnel rail link. Preliminary discussions have been held.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ask British Rail to consider re-routing the proposed high speed rail link to the south of the village of Sellindge.

Mr. Portillo: That suggestion has been put to British Rail and I understand that it is looking at it, among many others.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ask British Rail to reconsider the Rachel alternative to the proposed high speed rail link.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail has indicated why it thinks that Rachel is not appropriate, but is none the less studying it.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to seek to ensure that the village of Sellindge is environmentally protected from the proposed high speed rail link.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail will need to convince both the Government and Parliament that all environmental concerns have been fully considered and, so far as is reasonably possible, met.

Community Bus Services

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will reduce the cost of registering community bus services.

Mr. Portillo: Yes. Regulations that I have made were today laid before Parliament to reduce the fees for registering or varying non-subsidised community bus services from £30 and £27 respectively to a flat charge of £10.

Nuclear Material (Rail Transport)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether any uranium is transported through Oxford by rail to Windscale or other destinations.

Mr. Portillo: The timing and routing of such consignments is a matter for British Rail. I am informed that nuclear cargoes do not normally travel via Oxford.

A33 (Accidents)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents involving injuries and deaths have taken place for each year since 1979 in each direction on the A33 between the M3 and M27.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The M3 motorway was extended south to Bar End (Winchester) in 1985. Accident statistics for the A33 trunk road are not available separately for each direction of travel. The combined figures for accidents involving death or injury are as follows:

A33 (T): M3 (A303/A30 Junction) to M27 Bassett

Year	Number of Accidents
1980	93
1981	89
1982	89
1983	91

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received following the three year review of the orange badge scheme for disabled car parking; and what consideration he is currently giving to the problems affecting 430 thalidomide victims arising from the outcome of that review and, in particular, for those with shortened arms such as Mrs. Alison Wright of Bognor Regis.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We received nearly 700 comments on the discussion paper which we issued in August 1986 setting out possible changes to the orange badge scheme. The results of the review were announced in answer to a question from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 25 April 1989, at columns 481-83.

A number of people have understood limited press reports to mean that badges will in future be restricted to recipients of mobility allowance. We do not want to restrict eligibility to this extent. Nor do we seek to ration badges or set targets for their availability.

We have received many letters and telephone calls supporting our proposals for tackling abuse of the scheme. The idea of redesigning the badge with space for a photograph of the holder has been particularly welcomed by people with disabilities and their representative organisations.

Public concern has recently been expressed about not extending eligibility for badges to all thalidomide victims with upper limb disabilities.

We have accepted advice and representations from the statutory disabled persons transport advisory committee (DPTAC) that badges must continue to be restricted to people with permanent and severe mobility problems.

The committee's constituent organisations include the joint committee on mobility for the disabled, the Disabled Drivers Association, the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation and the Disabled Drivers Motor Club. The majority of DPTAC's members are people with disabilities.

We are taking further medical advice on the mobility problems specific to some thalidomide people.

Officials have met with the Thalidomide Trust and are in touch with the Thalidomide Society.

We hope to make an announcement shortly on the outcome of this further consultation as it effects the eligibility of thalidomide victims in relation to the mobility criteria of the scheme.

The greatest concern must be to protect the interests of those people who cannot move without the benefit of the national scheme and to avoid the growth and extension of local schemes conferring benefits only to local people.

If the national scheme further loses its value and validity, the most severely disabled will suffer badly.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will consider introducing a two-tier system in the future for disabled persons, consisting of a red badge for less serious cases of disability, together with an orange badge for priority, as at present.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 30 June 1989]: No. For the scheme to be workable it is essential that only one class of badge is issued, and is restricted to those people with the greatest mobility problems. This approach has been strongly supported by organisations representing people with disabilities following our recent detailed review of the scheme.

It has been a basis of the scheme from its inception that the issue of badges should be restricted to those most in need of the parking concessions conferred by it. This approach was endorsed in the recent review of the scheme.

The main problem with the scheme is that badges are too easy to get, not too hard. Extending eligibility to those with less serious mobility handicaps (even if the full range of parking concessions were not provided) would increase considerably the number of badge holders. This would contribute to further traffic congestion in town centres. It would make enforcement of the scheme even more difficult.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the need for orange badges by those who have deformed arms or none at all; and what reply he gave.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The consultation paper on the orange badge scheme which we issued in August 1986 discussed the possibility of extending eligibility for badges to people with severe upper limb disabilities.

This was generally opposed by those commenting on the paper. In particular, the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee (DPTAC) argued strongly that badges should continue to be restricted to those with severe mobility problems. Most of the major organisations representing people with disabilities are members of DPTAC.

We have received several representations that badges should be issued to thalidomide victims without arms. We are taking further medical advice on whether there are any previously unknown mobility problems specific to thalidomide victims. We are in touch with the Thalidomide Trust and the Thalidomide Society.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total outstanding debt on the Severn bridge at 31 March.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 30 June 1989]: The estimated debt at 31 March 1989 was £114 million.

DEFENCE

Married Quarters

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army married quarters have been sold on the open market during each of the past five years; and what were the net annuals proceeds from such sales.

Mr. Neubert: The number of married quarters that have been sold on the open market during each of the five years is given in the table. The net annual proceeds from such sales are identifiable only for 1988-89 and 1987-88, since records were not kept in this form prior to 1 April 1987.

Financial year	Number of quarters sold on open market	Proceeds of sale £ million
1987-88	212	5·517
1986-87	326	—
1984-85	67	—

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances and on what terms serving soldiers are able to purchase Army married quarters which are surplus to requirements.

Mr. Neubert: Surplus married quarters that are suitable for sale to individuals are offered to service personnel at a discount of 30 per cent. on the market value. In order to be eligible, service personnel must be aged 25 or over and neither they nor their spouses must have held a freehold interest in a house or other residential property, or a lease with an unexpired term of 21 years or more, since 1 December 1983. Where more than one application is made, preference is given to the applicant with the longest period of reckonable service.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army married quarters have been made available for sale to serving soldiers in each of the past five years; and how many have been sold to (a) officers and (b) other ranks.

Mr. Neubert: Since 1 December 1983, a total of 1,195 surplus Army married quarters have been offered for sale to soldiers. A total of 339 were sold to officers and 642 to non-commissioned personnel. In the time available it has not been possible to provide a year-by-year breakdown of these figures.

Nuclear-Powered Warships Safety Committee

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the composition, role and powers of the nuclear-powered warships safety committee; who appoints it; to whom it reports; and what decision-making powers it has.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The nuclear-powered warships safety committee consists of serving and retired experts in nuclear and related fields from both within and outside the Ministry of Defence. Its members are appointed by the Secretary of State for Defence. Its terms of reference are to advise the Secretary of State and other Ministers on all public safety measures concerned with the construction, operation and maintenance of nuclear-powered warships. Although the committee has no executive powers, in practice the Ministry of Defence has always followed its advice on matters which fall within its terms of reference.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many further (a) deaths, (b) leukaemias and (c) multiple myelomas occurring to nuclear test veterans and to members of the control group have become known to the National Radiological Protection Board in the five years that have passed since the National Radiological Protection Board study was completed;

(2) if he will request the National Radiological Protection Board to produce an interim report examining the developments there have been since the report on nuclear test veterans was completed.

Mr. Sainsbury: At this stage, I have nothing to add to my answer to the right hon. Gentleman on 19 May 1989 at column 326.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will discuss with the British Nuclear Tests Veterans Association the completeness of the service medical records used in the National Radiological Protection Board study of nuclear test veterans.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the right hon. Member to paragraphs 5.5, 7.5 and 8.1 of the National Radiological Protection Board report 214 of January 1988 where the completeness of service records is discussed. I can add nothing further to that.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will request the national Radiological Protection Board as part of its study of nuclear test veterans, to consult the United States scientists who provided the evidence to the United States Government on their nuclear test veterans.

Mr. Sainsbury: It would not be appropriate for the Government to instruct the NRPB on how it should conduct its work. However, I am confident that the National Radiological Protection Board, comprising independent experts, will consult whoever it feels necessary in order to further its understanding of matters relating to the nuclear test veteran studies.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what analysis was made by the National Radiological Protection Board of the incidence amongst nuclear test veterans of the 13 cancers for which the United States Government are now willing to pay compensation to their nuclear test veterans.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to tables 7.1-7.15, 8.1-8.3, and tables F1-F13 contained in the National Radiological Protection Board report 214 of January 1988 where comprehensive analyses of the information pertaining to different types of cancers are listed.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what has been the cost of obtaining information about the ill health and mortality of nuclear test veterans in the five years since the previous cut-off point;

(2) what is the estimated cost of analysing the information obtained since the cut-off date used for the first National Radiological Protection Board report on nuclear test veterans;

(3) what was the cost of the National Radiological Protection Board report on nuclear test veterans; and what proportion of it arose from establishing the names of the nuclear test veterans, their involvement in the nuclear tests and the establishment of an appropriate sample.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information is not available in the form requested. The total cost to the Ministry of Defence of the NRPB contract to date has been £540,000.

Security Firms

Mr. Hincliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether soldiers based at the Shoeburyness proof and experimental establishment, who are currently employed part-time by Centre Security Services undertaking security work at Southend civic centre have permission to undertake this additional employment.

Mr. Neubert: Approval was given to three soldiers to undertake such additional work during their off-duty hours, and two are currently engaged in it.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on allowing security firms based close to Army garrisons to employ serving Army personnel on a part-time basis.

Mr. Neubert: Any officer or soldier wishing to take up any form of off-duty employment is required to obtain approval first. Approval is granted only when the commanding officer certifies that the appointment will not interfere in any way with the applicant's military duties.

Headquarter Contracts

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list in the Official Report the value of payments made in respect of headquarter contracts to Rolls-Royce

Ltd. and Rolls-Royce plc by his Department for goods and services destined for the British armed services in each of the six years to 31 March;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the precise amounts paid in respect of headquarter contracts to each of the following contractors by his Department for goods and services destined for the British armed services in each of the three years to 31 March 1988: (a) the General Electric Co. plc, (b) British Telecommunications plc, (c) Lucas Industries plc, (d) BTR plc, (e) Austin Rover Group Ltd, (f) Dunlop Holdings plc, (g) United Scientific Holdings plc, (h) Courtaulds plc, (i) Massey-Ferguson Holdings Ltd, and (j) Commercial Shearing Inc.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 17 May 1989]: Detailed investigation has established that a substantive answer to these questions could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Company Cars (Mileages)

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, of the 1·4 million company car drivers how many drive (a) less than 2,000 miles, (b) 2-3,000 miles, (c) 3-4,000 miles, (d) 4-5,000 miles, (e) 5-6,000 miles, (f) 6-7,000 miles, (g) 7-8,000 miles, (h) 8-9,000 miles, (i) 9-10,000 miles, (j) 10-11,000 miles, *(k)*11-12,000 miles, (l) 12-13,000 miles, (m) 13-14,000 miles, (n) 14-15,000 miles, (o) 15-16,000 miles, (p) 16-17,000 miles and (q) 17-18,000 miles annually.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that this information is not available from Inland Revenue administrative records.

Exchange Rate

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to stabilise the exchange rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's speech in the Opposition day debate on Government economic policy on 7 June at columns 247-322.

European Monetary System

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has had recent discussions with the Spanish Minister of Finance on questions affecting membership of the European monetary system.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has regular discussions on a wide range of subjects with his EC Finance Minister colleagues, including the Spanish Minister of Finance.

Investment

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out in tabular form the growth of total investment in the United Kingdom in the 1980s, together with the comparable figures for each of the other major European countries.

Mr. Lilley: The information is as follows:

Percentage increase in Total Gross Fixed Capital Formation 1980-88

	Percentage
United Kingdom	39·1
Germany	4·4
France	6·7
Italy	11·1
Spain	33·6
Netherlands	17·1
Belgium	3·1

Premium Bonds

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on his decision to introduce a minimum £100 purchase of premium bonds.

Mr. Lilley: I have received a number of representations. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave on 5 May to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) explaining the reasons for this decision, Official Report, column 255.

Investment Income Surcharge

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to restore the investment income surcharge.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

City Earnings

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the total earnings by the City since 1965 in (a) the European Community, (b) the United States of America, (c) Japan and (d) the rest of the world.

Mr. Lilley: The data requested are not available.

Output Statistics

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his latest figures for output per hour worked in the United Kingdom, Germany and Japan.

Mr. Lilley: The April 1989 Treasury economic progress report presented estimates which show that output per hour worked in the United Kingdom economy in 1986 was about 50 per cent. higher than in Japan and about 5 per cent. lower than in Germany.

Banking System (Complaints)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to establish a statutory system to replace the banking ombudsman in the light of public disquiet over the treatment of complaints relating to automatic telling machines.

Mr. Lilley: The report of the review committee on banking services law and practice, under the chairmanship of Professor Robert Jack, was published by command (Cm 622) on 23 February 1989. The committee has made 83 recommendations covering a number of banking issues including the banking ombudsman scheme. The Government are carefully examining these recommendations and will set out their detailed response in due course.

VAT

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the value added tax charge on the self-supply of new construction introduced by amendments to schedule 3 of the Finance Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I have received a number of written representations and met representatives of universities, independent schools and banks. In the light of these representations, I have decided to table further amendments for the Report stage of the Finance Bill which will tax the exempt use of new buildings on the basis of the historic cost of land plus the cost of construction.

Independent Taxation

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements have been made to publicise the effects of independent taxation.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 June 1989]: A major programme of publicity for independent taxation is already under way. The first stage of the programme began in March and April this year to coincide with the issue of about 1 million extra tax returns for 1989-90. These returns will help the Inland Revenue divide married couples' income and tax reliefs correctly for the new system. Each return was accompanied by special message briefly outlining independent taxation and its effects and explaining the importance of completing the returns. Posters about the returns and independent taxation were also displayed in post offices, libraries and other locations. The Inland Revenue has published four new leaflets about the new system to give general guidance to taxpayers. These leaflets are available from tax offices and tax inquiry centres.

Further publicity is planned during the coming months and will focus on ensuring that taxpayers, particularly married women, are aware of the change and its implications for them.

Tax Returns

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people will be issued with personal tax returns by the Inland Revenue in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 27 June 1989]: The number of people sent personal tax returns in 1988-89 was 9·098 million. It is expected that the figures for 1989-90 and 1990-91 will be:

	million
1989-90	10·188
1990-91	11·400

Personal Incomes

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give (i) the total unearned and (ii) the total earned income of (a) the top 1 per cent., (b) the top 5 per cent., (c) the top 10 per cent., (d) the top 20 per cent., (e) the top 25 per cent., (f) the bottom 50 per cent., (g) the bottom 70 per cent. and (h) all taxpayers in the years 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 27 June 1989]: Estimates are given in the table. They are based on a projection of the 1986-87 survey of personal incomes and are provisional. All estimates are subject to a large degree of uncertainty since some investment income on which tax is deducted at source is not reflected in the survey.

Total Investment Income and Earned Income

All taxpayers	26·1	260·2	31·7	282·1

Territorial Army (Earnings)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidance is given to tax inspectors on the treatment of earnings from the Territorial Army for unemployed men receiving benefit.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 26 June 1989]: I can assure my hon. Friend that inspectors of taxes are given appropriate guidance to ensure that the earnings of all taxpayers are taxed correctly. If he has a particular case in mind, and would let me have the details, I shall be happy to look into it.

Income Tax

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the proportion of income taxpayers falling into the higher-rate and basic-rate bands, by region, for the last full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 27 June 1989]: The table gives estimates of the proportion of tax units (married couples and single people) with liability to income tax for 1986-87, the latest available year, at basic rate only and at higher rates. The estimates are based on a sample survey, and their reliability is limited by the size of the sample available, particularly in regions where the total number of taxpayers is relatively small such as Northern Ireland and East Anglia.

Region	Proportion of taxpaying tax units liable to tax at:
	Basic rate only Per cent.	Higher rates Per cent.
North	96·3	3·7
Yorkshire and Humberside	95·7	4·3
North West	95·7	4·3
East Midlands	95·9	4·1

East Anglia	95·6	4·4
South East	91·9	8·1
South West	95·0	5·0
Wales	95·7	4·3
Scotland	95·4	4·6
Northern Ireland	93·9	6·1

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing total sums raised under the business expansion scheme, by region, for the last full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 27 June 1989]: Provisional estimates of regional investment through the business expansion scheme for the year 1987-88 are as follows:

Region	1987-88 £ million
England
South East	134
East Anglia	8
South West	15
West Midlands	8
East Midlands	3
Yorkshire and Humberside	5
North and North-West	6
Wales	2
Scotland	11
Northern Ireland	1
Total	194

Notes

1. The estimates represent investment in 1987-88. Some money raised by BES approved funds during 1987-88 may not be invested until 1988-89.
2. Each company is allocated to a region by the address of its registered office; it may conduct business elsewhere.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disabled People (Benefits)

3. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review social security benefits for disabled people.

24. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for involving disabled people and their organisations in the review of disability benefits.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to consult disability organisations about the review of disability benefits.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend, the right hon. Gentleman and the hon. Lady to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) earlier today.

32. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, in the light of the Social Security Advisory Committee's report "Benefits for Disabled People: A Strategy For Change" he plans to increase spending on disability benefits.

38. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the financial terms of reference of the disability benefits review.

52. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase spending on disability benefits.

53. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response he has made to the comments of the Social Security Advisory Committee, in its report entitled "Benefits for Disabled People: A Strategy for Change" that reforming the system unavoidably means putting in new resources.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, in light of the Social Security Advisory Committee's report "Benefits for Disabled People: A Strategy for Change" he will increase spending on benefits for disabled people.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what additional resources he plans to make available for disability benefits.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend and the right hon. and hon. Members to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) earlier today.

Agencies

10. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how his Department's agencies will affect the work of social security staff.

Mr. Moore: Agencies will mean exciting new opportunities for our staff. They will have clearer targets and greater flexibility to provide an improved service to the public, and their pay will be matched to their success in doing so.

16. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the introductions of his Department's agencies will affect staff training.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Training will be more sharply focused on the specific aims and objectives of the agencies, with a particular emphasis on management training, to reflect the greater devolution of responsibilities which agencies will bring.

29. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further agencies are envisaged for his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 17 May 1989, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced plans for the establishment of an information technology services agency by April 1990; a national insurance contributions unit by April 1990; a benefits administration agency by April 1991. A further agency, the resettlement units executive agency, has already been established.

Pensioners (Home Ownership)

14. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioners own their own homes outright.

Mr. Moore: In 1986 about 48 per cent. of pensioners owned their own homes, of which only 4 per cent. had a mortgage and paid interest. This means 96 per cent. of pensioners did not pay mortgage interest.

31. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioners are owner-occupiers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1986, a total of 48 per cent. of pensioners were owner-occupiers; of those, 92 per cent. owned their homes outright.

Attendance Allowance

15. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are receiving the higher rate of attendance allowance at the latest available date; and what was the comparable figure for 1979.

Mr. Scott: An estimated 310,000 people were receiving the higher rate of attendance allowance at any one time in 1988-89. The corresponding figure for 1978-79 was 122,000.

33. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to improve the attendance allowance system.

Mr. Scott: We are constantly seeking to improve the working of the attendance allowance system. We have substantially reduced the average time taken to decide new attendance allowance claims from 12·5 weeks in 1983 to 7·5 weeks currently. This year we are spending almost £1,200 million on attendance allowance, an increase of 230 per cent. in real terms since 1978-79. The reports of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys disability surveys will help us judge how well the substantial current expenditure is targeted and whether there are better ways of helping those in greatest need.

Pensions

17. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many European Community countries pay flat-rate retirement pensions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Within the European Community, only the United Kingdom, Denmark and Ireland pay flat-rate retirement pensions. So far as the United Kingdom is concerned, that means that all pensioners are provided with a secure foundation for retirement. In countries that rely on earnings-related schemes low earners receive low pensions and very low earners have very low pensions.

Benefits (Uprating)

18. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he intends to take to compensate those who are currently losing because of the disparity between inflation and the uprating increase.

Mr. Moore: In April, benefits were fully uprated in line with the movement in prices over the 12 months to September 1988. In the same way, the next uprating will take account of the movement in prices between September 1988 and September 1989. The use of the historic method for uprating is much fairer than the previous forecasting method. A switch to the forecasting method in 1976 meant that pensioners were not compensated for the price increases of 6 per cent. between March 1975 to November 1975. That meant pensioners got over £1 billion less, in today's prices, than they would have done.

41. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he intends to take to compensate those who are currently losing because of the disparity between inflation and the uprating increase.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's reply to the hon. Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Smith) earlier today.

Living Standards

19. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much the average living standards of couples with children has increased since 1979.

Mr. Scott: From 1979 to 1985, the average living standards of couples with children improved by 9 per cent. This improvement is larger than for couples without children or single people. Both these groups had improvements in their living standards of 6 per cent.

Child Benefit

20. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families in receipt of child benefit contain an earner of more than twice national average male earnings; and what proportion of all such earners are part of a family unit receiving child benefit.

Mr. Scott: On the basis of the 1986 family expenditure survey, a little over 300,000 families in receipt of child benefit contained an earner of more than twice average earnings, representing just over a half of all such earners. Information about the incomes of families receiving child benefit is not routinely collected. Estimates are subject to normal sampling and response variation.

Benefits

21. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are in receipt of social security benefits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are a large number of different social security benefits serving different purposes and giving different sorts of help to different groups of people. The estimated average numbers receiving each of the various benefits in 1988-89 are:

	1988-89 Thousands
Retirement Pension	9,720
Widows' benefit	385
Unemployment benefit	620
Sickness benefit	110
Invalidity benefit	1,130
Industrial disablement benefit	210
Industrial death benefit	25
Maternity allowance	15
Non-contributory retirement pension	35
War pension	255
Attendance allowance	760
Invalid care allowance	100
Severe disablement allowance	265
Mobility allowance	530
Income Support	4,215
Child benefit—numbers of children[1]	12,030
Child benefit—number of families	6,755
One parent benefit	680
Family credit	285
Housing benefit[2]
rent rebate	3,100
rent allowance	925
rate rebate[3]	5,105

Notes:
[1]Numbers of children in families receiving child benefit, including those also receiving one parent benefit.
[2]Most households getting assistance with rent will also be in receipt of a rate rebate.
[3]Includes estimates of people receiving community charge rebates in Scotland.

At any one time, people can receive more than one social security benefit and there are cases where people (eg parents) receive benefits for others (children). In 1987, the latest year for which an estimate is available, social security benefits made some contribution to the incomes or family incomes of some 38 million men, women and children—about 70 per cent of the population of Great Britain.

26. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will make it his policy to commence payment to anyone granted (a) housing benefit or (b) any other form of social security benefit with effect from the date from which the need for that benefit can be shown to date.

Mr. Scott: No. There are prescribed times for claiming housing benefit and other social security benefits some of which may be extended for up to 12 months before the date of claim where the claimant proves there was good cause for the failure to claim timeously.

National Insurance

22. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what effect the current increase in earnings will have on national insurance fund contributions.

Mr. Scott: We expect that the current increase in earnings will increase the income of the national insurance fund by about £500 million compared with estimates published last autumn. The Budget measures on national insurance contributions and the abolition of earnings rule will cost the fund a net £1 billion in 1989-90. The national insurance fund's income from contributions is expected to be about £28·2 billion in the current year.

46. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage increase in contributions to the national insurance fund anticipated in the current year as a result of the increase in earnings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The percentage increase in receipts from national insurance contributions to the national insurance fund resulting from the expected increase of earnings in 1989-90 is expected to be 9 per cent. in cash terms. This estimate is based on receipts net of statutory sick pay, statutory maternity pay and personal pension rebates, but includes premiums paid to the state scheme by occupational pension schemes. It also take account of the changes announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor in his Budget speech.

Pensioners (Income)

23. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioners have investment income.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1986, a total of 70 per cent. of all pensioners, and 85 per cent. of recently retired pensioners received investment income.

27. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioners have income from some source other than state benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1986 just over 80 per cent. of pensioners were in receipt of income from a source other than state benefits.

34. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, by how much pensioners' income from savings has increased since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Pensioners' average total net income from savings increased by 64 per cent. in real terms between 1979 and 1986.
Source: Family Expenditure Survey 1986.

Transitional Payments Unit

25. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what factors he ascribes the staff effort required to process each application to the housing benefit transitional payments unit having been three times greater than expected.

48. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what factors he ascribes the staff effort required to process each application to the housing benefit transitional payments unit having been three times greater than expected.

51. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what factors he ascribes the staff effort required to process each application to the housing benefit transitional payments unit having been three times greater than expected.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The staff effort required in the transitional payments unit was not three times greater than expected. An early planning estimate was made of the number of staff who would be needed at the transitional payments unit which proved to be an underestimate for two main reasons: the difficulty of estimating staff numbers in a wholly new area of work before detailed procedures had been worked out; and the fact that many of those employed in the transitional payments unit lacked any previous work experience. The general running costs of the unit in 1988-89 will be less than half the original estimate.

Carers

28. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated annual saving to his Department from the existence of a network of informal carers.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available.

Claimants

30. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which categories of claimants or potential claimants he has identified as being in greatest need.

47. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which categories of claimants or potential claimants he has identified as being in greatest need.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We recognised that less well-off families with children—those on income-related benefits-needed extra help. Income support and housing benefit include premiums providing extra help to families, lone parents and disabled children. Family credit provides more generous help to working families with modest earnings. In all three benefits, the amounts provided for children vary with their ages. In this year's uprating extra help, over and above the £2·1 billion needed to maintain the value of benefits, of 50p per child per week (worth £70 million in total) was provided for some 3 million children living in around 1·5 million families.

Income support and housing benefit include premiums recognising the extra needs of pensioners and disabled claimants. The independent living fund provides financial help to enable severely disabled people who are receiving income support or have low incomes to pay for the personal care and domestic support they need to maintain an independent life in the community.

From July we are introducing measures to provide extra help for 16 and 17-year-olds who are forced to live independently which is worth up to £6·60 a week for these on income support and up to £5·61 a week for those on housing benefits only. From October we are directing extra help to elderly and disabled pensioners, costing nearly £200 million in a full year and worth up to £2·50 a week for single people and up to £3·50 for couples.

North-West Office

35. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of staff employed by his Department in the Department of Social Security north-west office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total number of staff employed in the north-western regional office is 647.

Social Security Spending

36. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what amount spending in real terms on social security programmes has increased over the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: Spending on social security in 1989-90 is forecast to be £51·1 billion in current plans, while in 1984-85 it was £38·1 billion. Despite a drop in unemployment of almost one third, with the consequential effect on expenditure on that group, overall social security spending has increased by 3·4 per cent. in real terms in the last five years.

42. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage of public expenditure spent on social security benefits now; and what it was in 1979.

Mr. Scott: The percentage of public expenditure spent on the social security programme in 1989-90 is forecast to be 30 per cent. on current plans, while in 1979-80 it was 24 per cent.

Family Credit

37. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the advertising cost for each successful new claim for family credit, above expected trends, received as a result of the recent advertising campaign.

50. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the notional advertising cost for each successful new claim for family credit, above expected trends, that has been received as a result of the advertising campaign.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Such cost estimates would not be meaningful. It is not possible to assess accurately how much of the increase in claims has been a direct result of the advertising campaign rather than other factors such as the increase in family credit rates in April. Furthermore, the campaign aims to raise levels of awareness of family credit not only to encourage claims by people who may be entitled at present but to encourage others to claim in the future should they become eligible through changed circumstances.

In terms of the objective of increasing awareness within the target groups, there have been significant increases.

Research indicates a change from 25 to 82 per cent. awareness. This is matched by increases in applications. In the weeks before the campaign we had 164,000 applications. In the 11 weeks after the campaign started we had 295,000 claims and of the claims decided since the campaign began over 135,000 have been successful and 86,400 further claims are awaiting decision.

The cost of advertising and other promotion of family credit since April to the end of July is approximately £4·8 million.

43. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received regarding the take-up of family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Representations are usually to the effect that it needs to be improved. The recent advertising campaign has sought to increase public awareness of family credit and so promote increased take-up.

Advertising

39. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has undertaken an up-to-date assessment of any improvements in take-up ratios on targeted benefits following the completion of the spring advertising campaign launched by his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The precise effects on family credit take-up rates will not be known until information is available from the 1989 family expenditure survey, but the increase in the number of claims received during the campaign has been very encouraging and the underlying caseload is now almost certainly over 300,000.

Pensioners (Living Standards)

40. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much the average living standards of pensioners have increased since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Between 1979 and 1986 pensioners' average total net income increased by 23 per cent. in real terms.

Source: Family Expenditure Survey 1986.

Social Fund

44. Mr. Kirkwood To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have been refused loans by social fund officers on the basis that they have insufficient income to repay the loans.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There were 18,931 loan applications refused for this reason in the period April 1988 to May 1989.

Social Security Fraud

45. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many personnel are involved in the detection of fraud in social security benefits; and what is the total expenditure by his Department in this area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Precise figures are not available, but it is possible to estimate the numbers of full-time equivalent posts on the basis of records of staff time expended on fraud-related work. The numbers of full-time equivalent posts are 3,335. Data for the total expenditure by the Department in this area are not available. Staff costs are now some £47 million in a full year.

Mobility Allowance

49. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent discussions he has had with pensioners' groups on extending the age after which mobility allowance can be paid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I met a delegation from Pensioners Voice on 13 June, when the age limit for mobility allowance was one of the matters discussed.

Prescription Charges (Exemptions)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representation he has received about the operations of the Agency Benefits Unit regarding its processing of applications for exemption from prescription charges; what improvements in service to applicants can be expected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Agency Benefits Unit deals with claims made under the National Health Service low income scheme which provides help with the whole range of National Health Service charges and fares to hospital for treatment. Each claim under the scheme covers all these services, including exemption from prescription charges, so that separate information about the latter cannot be given.

On the operation of the low income scheme generally, apart from many letters about the amount of help provided in individual cases, most representations have concerned the amount of time taken to deal with claims. A major cause of delay earlier in the year was a problem which arose in connection with the regulations governing the low income scheme, and which led to a stockpiling of cases at the unit. All the cases which had been stockpiled were cleared by the middle of April, but work is still in progress to correct the cases which had been dealt with before the stockpiling began.

Representations have also been made about the claim form, and the design of the form is currently under review. The opportunity will also be taken to correct weaknesses in the form which have sometimes led to delays due to forms having to be returned to claimants because they were not properly completed.

Elderly People (Income Support)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the projected increase in cost of income support for elderly people in private residential and nursing home accommodation in the next five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available, but forecasts of public expenditure on income support as a whole are contained in the public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount paid in income support to elderly people in private residential and nursing home accommodation for each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows estimated expenditure on payments of supplementary benefit income support to elderly people in private and voluntary residential care and housing homes; information for private homes only is not available. Before December 1985 such data were not collected.

Date	Annual equivalent expenditure £ million
December 1985	280
May 1986	360
May 1987	530
May 1988	680

Source: December 1985, May 1986, May 1987 and May 1988 Quarterly Statistical Enquiries.
Note:
The amounts for 1985-7 relate to supplementary pensions, and that for 1988 to payments of income support to people aged 60 or more.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy towards the payment of independent living fund grants in order to substitute for National Health Service services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Decisions are a matter for the trustees of the fund. Payments from the fund complement the provision made for severely disabled people by the statutory authorities and are not intended to replace them.

War Widows

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to be able to respond to the further representations which he has received about the plight of the pre-1973 war widows.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My noble Friend has recently responded to representations made by the Officers' Pension Society and several hon. Members. Officials have provided a note to the Social Services Committee on the points raised on this subject at the hearing on 14 June. There are no other representations awaiting a reply.

Young Claimants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the total number of 16 and 17-year-olds in Scotland and for each of the local Department of Social Security office areas who have (a) applied and (b) received income support as a result of direction from the Secretary of State under the severe hardship provision from September 1988 to the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows the number of applications for income support from 16 and 17-year-olds in Scotland on the ground of "severe hardship" between 12 September 1988 and 23 June 1989. It also shows the number of directions given to enable income support to be paid.

Notes:
1. Based on 100 per cent. count of applications received.
2. Information relates to the number of applications received rather than to the number of individual young people involved. Some individuals may have received more than one direction.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number of 16 and 17-year-olds claiming benefit in Scotland and for each of the Department of Social Security local area offices in each of the months June, July, August and September 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the total number of 16 and 17-year-olds in Scotland who have been exempt from the withdrawal of entitlement to benefit covering lone parents, registered blind, incapable of work by reason of disease or mental or physical disability, pregnancy or couple married with a child in the period September 1988 to the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Fife, Central of 7 November, Official Report, columns 99-100, if he will outline the findings of the monitoring of the changed social security benefit arrangements for young people seeking a YTS place in the period September 1988 to June 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The benefits involved in the changed arrangements for young people from September 1988 were income support and child benefit.

As far as income support is concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 16 March at columns 305-06 and to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 13 March at columns 27-28.

The changes in child benefit arrangements in the period July 1988 to June 1989 resulted in 418,000 invitations to claim extended child benefit being issued to the parents of those leaving school at summer or Christmas 1988 or Easter 1989. Payment of extended child benefit was made in 43,000 cases where young persons were registered for work or a YTS place.

I am satisfied that the Training Agency has more than sufficient YTS places for all who want one. On 31 May (the latest figure available) there were over 141,000 unfilled places. Arrangements are in place at a local level with the careers service to ensure that the Training Agency is aware of and can satisfy demand for YTS places.

HEALTH

Water (Contamination)

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, as a matter of urgency, he will direct the Chief Medical Officer to provide a second opinion on the risk to human health of chironomidae in water, including drinking water supplies.

Mr. Freeman: The Chief Medical Officer has sought expert advice on this matter. The advice is that there is no evidence that when these larvae have been found in drinking water supplies they have ever caused a human health hazard.

Re-Solv

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further plans he has to support the work of Re-Solv.

Mr. Freeman: Earlier this year I met colleagues from other Departments with an interest in solvent misuse to discuss the Government's strategy for tackling the problem. At that meeting we recognised the valuable work undertaken by Re-Solv. We agreed that half the cost of the Re-Solv director's salary over the next three years would be met by Government. The Department of Health is, in addition, making a grant of £50,000 in 1989-90 to Re-Solv to undertake a range of activities to combat solvent misuse. That amount includes a contribution towards the cost of the full-time director for the first year of appointment.

Hospitals (Management Arrangements)

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will report further on his intention to introduce new management arrangements for the special hospitals service, as outlined in the ministerial statement of 4 May 1988.

Mr. Freeman: With the agreement of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department, the new Special Hospitals Service Authority came into being on 1 July 1989. Initially, the authority will work with the Department, and the Home Department, in formulating national policies for the service; in finalising the new arrangements; and in preparing the way for senior managerial appointments and for the handover of the functions currently discharged by the Department and the three existing local hospital boards. Further measures will be taken in due course to enable the authority to assume full responsibility for the service, from 1 October 1989. At that stage the Department will relinquish all its operational management responsibilities and the local boards will cease to exist, to be replaced as soon as possible by new local arrangements.

As well as its administrative responsibilities, a primary task of the authority will be to determine policies and priorities within the strategic framework provided by the Government's stated objectives for the further development of the service. These include the overriding need to continue to ensure the safety of the public; to continue to improve standards of treatment and care; and to forge closer and more effective links between the special hospitals and the services to which they relate—the hospital and community psychiatric services and the prison medical service. It was with the achievement of those objectives in mind that my right hon. and learned Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department agreed on the need to strengthen the management of the service, both in terms of the establishment of a central special health authority, and the introduction of general management.

The new arrangements will provide an improved environment in which roles and relationships, and lines of accountability, are more clearly defined and in which better-informed decisions can be taken on key issues—including the quality of the lives of patients, and the use of resources.

I am pleased to announce that Dr. David Edmond, the present chairman of the Rampton hospital board, has accepted an invitation to serve as chairman of the new authority. He comes to the job with a proven track record both in the service itself, and in industry, and his knowledge, experience and deep commitment to the service will stand him in good stead in taking on this demanding appointment. The membership of the authority will be announced shortly.

Blood Donors

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action can be taken by donors to the blood transfusion service to ensure that the blood they supply is used exclusively within the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: The national blood transfusion service meets non-NHS hospitals' reasonable requests for blood according to availability and clinical need.

The suggestion that donors should impose conditions is not only contrary to this principle but is impracticable in a service dealing with over 2 million units of blood each year.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria have been issued to district health authorities to prevent specifications on competitive tendering being drafted in such a way as to facilitate the application of a specified firm.

Mr. Freeman: A wide range of guidance has been issued on the importance of openness in tendering. For example, the Department's guide "Option Appraisal: Medical and Scientific Equipment", published in 1988, advises that a range of equipment should be identified that appears to satisfy the functional requirements and that requirement specifications should not include performance features that would effectively limit the choice to only one model unless there is clear agreement by all concerned that they are genuinely essential. The Department's procurement directorate will offer health authorities advice on available choices, where required.

Children Bill

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received seeking information as to when he envisages that part VIII of the Children Bill [Lords] will be implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 30 June 1989]: We have had a few representations on this particular point in the past year. I refer the hon. Member to what my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor said on implementation of the Bill generally in the other place on 6 December at columns 534-35.

NHS Grading

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what percentages of cases in each of the last three years where upgrading of National Health Service staff was approved by the Whitley council joint secretaries the award was backdated to the date of application.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 30 June 1989]: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. If my hon. Friend has a particular case in mind he might wish to let me have the specific details.

Self-governing Hospitals

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether maternity services will be included as part of the core services to be provided by self-governing hospitals.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 21 June 1989]: Exactly what core services different self-governing hospitals will provide will vary according to the facilities that they have available, the services other local hospitals provide and local requirements. Where, however, a self-governing hospital can best provide maternity services to which patients need guaranteed local access, it will be required to do so.

SCOTLAND

Fish Farming

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the members of the committee appointed to advise the Crown Estate Commissioners on fish farming; if he will describe their remit; and if he will state their remuneration and criteria for appointment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend was happy to announce on 30 May the appointments of the hon. Lord Grieve and Professor George Dunnet to the chairmanship and deputy chairmanship respectively of the fish farming advisory committee being established by the Crown Estate. Background to the appointments is contained in Scottish Office news release 30 May/0948/89 copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. The other members of the committee will be representatives of the relevant public bodies. Details of the bodies to be represented and the remit of the committee were contained in the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 19 December at columns 88-89. The question of remuneration is a matter for the Crown Estate.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to reply to the letter from Scottish Wildlife and Countryside Link on fish farming, dated 30 January.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My officials met Scottish Wildlife and Countryside Link and discussed in depth the issues raised in the letter. We shall be keeping Link informed of developments.

Heritage and Culture

Mr. Greg. Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for further promoting Scotland's heritage and culture.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's booklet "Scotland's Heritage" was published on 9 June and copies were placed in the Library. This made it clear that our policy has been, and will remain, to support the conservation of Scotland's heritage and to promote wide public appreciation and understanding of Scotland's rich and diverse culture. Amongst many initiatives giving effect to this policy, my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 9 June a commitment in principle to the development of a museum of Scotland which would exhibit the natural, social, economic and cultural history of Scotland.

Crofts

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what area of land was under crofting tenure in (a) 1976, (b) 1983 and (c) 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1976 about 881,000 hectares of inbye and common grazings land were registered as being in crofting tenure. Since then about 15,000 hectares, mainly inbye land, have been decrofted.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the European Commission's proposal to limit the payment of the hill livestock compensatory allowance to 25 per cent. for the first 45 livestock units and 12·5 per cent. for the next 45 units.

Mr. Rifkind: We have received representations from several right hon. and hon. Members, the National Farmers Union of Scotland and the Scottish Landowners Federation expressing concern about the European Commission's proposals for changes to the hill livestock compensatory allowance arrangements.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in the event of the European Commission's proposal to limit the payment of the hill livestock compensatory allowance to 25 per cent. for the first 45 livestock units and 12·5 per cent. for the next 45 units becoming effective, the Government will consider funding the deficit for Scottish farms.

Mr. Rifkind: Negotiations on the Commission's proposals—which are part of a package of measures relating to reform of the structural funds—have only just begun. It is premature to consider what action the Government might take if the proposals were to be adopted unchanged, but I can give a categorical assurance that in the negotiations we shall be seeking to ensure that full account is taken of the structure of farming in the less-favoured areas of Scotland.

Wetlands

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to announce the designation of an area either as a site under the Ramsar convention on the conservation of wetlands of international importance or as a special protection area under EC directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds, or both.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The next classification of a site will be announced as soon as the necessary consultations have been completed.

Dental Schools

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the involvement of his Department in announcing on 22 June the plans for the future of Scotland's three dental schools.

Mr. Rifkind: I was extremely concerned at the premature and regrettable disclosure in a television programme on 22 June of the recommendations of the report of the working party on dental provision in Scotland, chaired by Sir Donald McCallum. My Department was, of course, not involved in that disclosure.

Nurses

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by district health authority (a) the current nursing staff establishment, (b) the number in post at the latest available date and (c) the number who have left the National Health Service in the preceding year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no district health authorities in Scotland. The equivalent is a health board. The whole-time equivalent number of nursing staff employed in each health board at 30 September 1988 is set out in the table. Information about nursing staff establishments is not held centrally and the number of nursing staff who leave the NHS could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Art, Craft and Design Teaching

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to bring craft and design education into the curriculum for Scottish schools; what plans there are for the teaching of art; and by what date he expects such subjects to be part of the curriculum.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Current guidance for secondary schools is that the curriculum of every pupil up to the age of 16 should include subjects within the modes designated creative and aesthetic activity, which includes art, and technological activity and applications, which includes craft and design. Scottish certificate of education courses are available in both subjects at O-grade, standard grade and higher levels. Art and design may be taken at the level of certificate of sixth-year studies. Consideration is being given to the introduction of a certificate of sixth-year studies course in craft and design. Craft and design and art are also aspects of the primary curriculum, which is presently being reviewed.

Community Care

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make an announcement on his plans for community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend plans to announce his proposals for community care in Scotland at the same time as decisions are announced on the Griffiths report. As has been indicated in the House, this will be before the summer recess.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of (a) botulism, (b) salmonella enteriditis, (c) salmonella typhimurium and (d) other types of food poisoning have been reported or detected in Scotland for each month since January.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of food poisoning cases reported during 1989 are as follows:

	Number
January	150
February	181
March	114
April	165
May	160
June	255

The cause is not always known but those recorded include:

	Botulism	Salmonella enteriditis	Salmonella typhimurium
January	Nil	54	32
February	Nil	85	31
March	Nil	60	21
April	Nil	43	9
May	Nil	81	27
June	Nil	96	32

Scottish Constitutional Convention

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is now taking steps to take part in the discussions of the Scottish constitutional convention.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Lead Plumbing

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans for replacing lead plumbing in pre-war houses and tenement blocks; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The replacement of lead plumbing within a house is the responsibility of the owner, though grants to private owners are available for this purpose from district and islands councils.

In the period 1982-87, over 45,000 grants which included lead plumbing works were approved by local authorities. In the same period more than 350,000 houses were improved by local authorities and other public sector agencies; many of these houses are likely to have had lead plumbing replaced as part of the modernisation works.

Water Supply

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to give any advice to regional water authorities concerning the addition of orthophosphate to the public water supply; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no plans to issue further advice at the present time. Full advice was given to regional and islands authorities in mid-1984. The addition of orthophosphate has achieved considerable reductions in levels of lead in tap water in a number of areas of Scotland. The effectiveness of the treatment is kept under review.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in view of the growth of Sunday trading in Scotland, he has any plans for a review of the law so as to provide safeguards for employees and local residents.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on people being denied jobs or being required to give up employment, if, on grounds of family or conscience, they do not wish to work on Sundays.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Other than those in the report "Scotland's Sunday Under Pressure", none.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received the publication, "Scotland's Sunday Under Pressure" by the Keep Sunday Special Campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received the publication and has noted its findings.

Policewomen

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in the light of research findings of Professor Ray Wilkie on policewomen in Scotland, he will consider whether any policy changes need to be effected.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We are examining the report, but the main implications of the research findings are for the police service itself to consider. I understand that copies of the report have been circulated to the chief constables of all Scottish police forces.

Contracts (Tendering)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to prohibit expenditure by certain local authorities on forming and operating separate companies for catering and cleaning services to compete with private contractors who may tender for local authority contracts; what assessment he has made of the effects of this practice on the ability of private contractors to compete fairly for these contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Within the resources available to them, local authorities may do anything that is calculated to facilitate, or is conducive or incidental to, the discharge of any of their functions. If authorities decide to set up companies for catering and cleaning services, they cannot award contracts to such companies without taking reasonable steps to secure competition for the carrying out of the work. I should be glad to be informed of any evidence that private contractors are being prevented from competing fairly in such circumstances.

YTS

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is monitoring the impact of the YTS guarantee on 16 and 17-year-olds.

Mr. Lang: I am satisfied that the Training Agency in Scotland has more than sufficient YTS places available for those young people under 18 who want one.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the number of summer school leavers eligible for YTS as a result of failing to obtain employment or a place in full-time education.

Mr. Lang: We estimate that up to 50,000 16 to 17-year-olds might leave school this summer. All are eligible for YTS, but only a proportion will seek a place. The Training Agency has consulted the careers service and is satisfied that it has sufficient places to meet likely demand, but further places can be provided if required.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give (a) the number of YTS places available and (b) occupied for each of the former administration areas of the Training Agency, known as area manpower boards.

Mr. Lang: This information is not available in the precise form requested. As at 31 May 1989 the Training Agency had 61,115 agreed YTS places in Scotland and 47,345 of these were filled. This information is broken down by Training Agency area office area as follows:

	Agreed places	In training
Glasgow city	9,844	8,434
Lanarkshire	6,306	5,325
Renfrew, Dunbarton and Argyll	8,249	6,260
Ayrshire, Dumfries and Galloway	6,969	5,498
Lothian and Borders	7,655	5,424
Central and Fife	9,287	6,831
Grampian and Tayside	9,397	7,220
Highlands and Islands	3,408	2,353

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the YTS guarantee will be met for every 16 and 17-year-old summer school leaver in Scotland who does not enter full-time education or permanent employment.

Mr. Lang: We aim to ensure that every young person under 18 who is seeking a YTS place is offered one before his or her entitlement to benefit ends.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the YTS guarantee is being met; and how monitoring of this procedure is being undertaken.

Mr. Lang: Yes the guarantee is being met. Local arrangements with the careers service ensure that Training Agency area offices are aware of and can satisfy demand for YTS places.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the number of 16 and 17-year-olds in Scotland who did not obtain a YTS place before the expiry of the period of extended child benefit or bridging allowance between September 1988 and the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: The guarantee of a YTS place to all 16 and 17-year-olds that want one means that there is no need for any young person who applies for a YTS place in reasonble time to be without financial support. Information about young people who are not on benefit or on YTS is not collected centrally. I cannot therefore offer an estimate of their numbers.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has met the regional and islands council careers officers to discuss the implementation of the YTS guarantee.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My officials regularly meet representatives of Scottish careers services to discuss this and other matters.

Dounreay

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much time has elapsed since he received the report from his reporter, Mr. A. Bell, on the public inquiry into the application to build the European demonstration reprocessing plant at Dounreay.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The report on the public local inquiry was received by my right hon. and learned Friend on 30 March 1988. He is currently considering the implications of the report.

Planning Applications

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the planning applications, including outstanding applications, in respect of which public inquiries have been held since May 1979 and his decision has not been announced until a date more than (a) 12 months, (b) 18 months and (c) 24 months after the conclusion of the inquiry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:-

1. Applications called-in by the Secretary of State in respect of which public inquiries have been held since May 1979 and where the decision was made more than

(a) 12 months after the conclusion of the inquiry;
Skiing development, Lurcher's Gully, Aviemore
Aberdeen Central Comprehensive Development (Area B)
Waste disposal plant, Inchbelly Farm, Kirkintilloch
Landfill site, Dalinlongart, Argyll
Travelling people's site, Hardhill Road, Bathgate

Glasgow School of Chiropody

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the future of the clinical department of the Glasgow school of chiropody;

(2) if he will make it his policy to guarantee the future funding of the Glasgow school of chiropody for the next five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I announced on 24 February 1988 my approval for the transfer of Greater Glasgow health board's school of chiropody to Queen's college, Glasgow in the higher education sector. The school will continue to be funded by the health board until this transfer is effected and after transfer will be funded in exactly the same manner as other institutions in the higher education sector. The health board is currently considering whether some of the chiropody services provided in a clinic adjacent to the school might be redistributed to other sites in their area.

Rural Areas

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further steps he plans to take to ensure the effective co-ordination of the various Government policies and initiatives for the rural areas of Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: This Government have always recognised the importance of rural areas in Scotland. We have responded to their changing needs and have demonstrated our commitment to their well-being over the years through many and varied forms of assistance to help sustain rural communities, stimulate economic activity, and maintain and enhance the environment.

We are in a period of changing emphasis for rural Scotland. For instance, agriculture support policies are being reshaped; new development opportunities are being recognised, not least by local communities supported by the voluntary sector; and we are placing even greater emphasis on effective conservation of the environment. I am encouraged by the increasing awareness of a need to achieve a balance between development and conservation to sustain the resources of our natural environment for the benefit of future generations while at the same time permitting rural communities to achieve their full economic potential.

In order to ensure that our current and future efforts are fully co-ordinated and effectively targeted, I have asked my noble Friend the Minister of State, Lord Sanderson of Bowden, to take special responsibility for rural policy co-ordination in the Scottish Office in addition to his existing responsibilities for agriculture, fisheries, forestry, Highlands and Islands development and tourism. This appointment will ensure that the initiatives already in hand and further developments likely to occur in the coming years are properly co-ordinated and work together to achieve their common purpose of enhancing the position of rural areas.

Other Ministers will retain their existing responsibilities. Lord Sanderson will concentrate on ensuring that, in a time of change, the right balance is struck between the protection of the environment and economic development.

Roads

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to publish a White Paper on Scottish roads.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 30 June 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the major statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State on 18 May in which he announced a substantial increase in funds for the trunk road programme. In that statement the Secretary of State indicated his trunk road priorities and referred to a planned consultation paper on the "routes south of Edinburgh" study, and a major review of the trunk and principal road network. The outcome of these consultations may form the basis of a policy document or White Paper in due course.

Tree Planting

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly, of 22 June, Official Report, columns 205-6, whether the figures given relate to actual hectares of forestry planted within the period specified or the number of hectares for which grant was paid within that period.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 30 June 1989]: As stated in the answer, the figures given in categories (b), (c) and (d) were the areas on which planting grant was paid, while the figures in categories (a) and (e) were, respectively, the areas actually planted and the areas estimated to have been planted, in the period specified.

Erskine Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the outstanding debt on the Erskine bridge as at 31 March.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 30 June 1989]: This figure will not become available until the bridge account for 1988-89 is finalised and laid before Parliament.

ENERGY

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the basis of the statement made by the hon. Member for Worcestershire, South (Mr. Spicer) to the international business machines conference in Bournemouth on 13 June that each new pressurised water reactor nuclear station operated would reduce United Kingdom carbon dioxide emissions by 6 million tonnes a year against a coal-fired station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Each tonne of typical United Kingdom power station coal burnt produces approximately 2 tonnes of carbon dioxide. The figure of 6 million tonnes a year of carbon dioxide equates to a 1·2 GW station displacing equivalent baseload coal fired plant burning a little under 3 million tonnes a year.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what commitments he intends to enter into on behalf of the Government in respect of National Power's costs for the decommissioning of nuclear power stations and the disposing of and reprocessing of nuclear waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy made clear to the hon. Member on Report on 10 April at column 667, the industry, and, therefore, the consumer, will pay these costs unless something happens which is not foreseen—such as the regulations concerning the environment being changed—and proper provisions could not, therefore, have been made in the accounts. The amendments the Government intend to table at Lords Report stage, announced by Baroness Hooper on 19 June at column 20, do not represent a change to this policy, but a particular means of implementing the Government's commitments under it.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Use

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any further information in relation to water use restrictions following his answer to the hon. Member for Kingswood on 8 June, Official Report, column 87.

Mr. Howard: We are now aware of 16 cases in England where water utilities, using their powers under section 16 of the Water Act 1945, have imposed bans on the use of hosepipes for watering gardens and washing cars. These affect about 6 per cent. of the population.

Equity Share Schemes

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities in the east midlands region have plans to build houses under equity share schemes.

Mr. Trippier: The Department does not collect information in the detail requested. Some indication of local authorities' intentions may be found in their annual housing investment programme submissions, copies of which are available in the Library.

Bathing Waters

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by which date he expects all identified bathing waters in the north-west region to meet the provisions of EEC directive 76/160/EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Department is currently discussing with water authorities, including North West water authority, plans that they have drawn up aimed at bringing remaining bathing waters up to EC standards by the mid-1990s.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list North West Water's environmental quality objectives for all identified bathing waters on the Fylde coast, Morecambe bay and north Cumbrian coast.

Mr. Howard: Quality objectives for rivers and estuaries are at present set by water authorities; in future this will be the responsibility of the Secretary of State on the advice of the National Rivers Authority. The relevant standards for identified bathing waters are set out in the EC directive 76/160/EEC, a copy of which is in the Library.

Surcharging

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the last two occasions on which councillors have been surcharged for refusing to grant planning permission.

Mr. Gummer: The surcharging of councillors under sections 19 and 20 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 is a matter for individual auditors. I am not aware of any case in which councillors have been surcharged for refusing to grant planning permission.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the last two occasions on which councillors have been surcharged.

Mr. Gummer: I understand that the last two occasions on which councillors were surcharged were in September 1985 when councillors from Lambeth and Liverpool were surcharged in connection with late rate-making.

CO_2 Emissions

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the carbon coefficient assumed for motor spirit and derv in producing carbon dioxide emissions; and what are the latest estimates of carbon dioxide emissions in the transport sector, broken down into road, rail and air transport.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 29 June 1989]: Estimates of carbon dioxide emissions from fuels are made by multiplying the fuel consumption figures by a factor which is the assumed carbon content of the fuel in question. These factors are subject to constant revision as more information becomes available from suppliers about the carbon content of their fuels. The factors used in calculating carbon dioxide emissions from petrol and derv are 855g/kg and 857g/kg of fuel used respectively.

The most recent estimates of carbon dioxide emissions from road, rail and air transport for 1987 are based on information supplied by Warren Spring laboratory. Both the carbon content of fuel and fuel consumption figures are subject to revision. These are the current best estimates available. In 1987, 96·2 million tonnes of carbon dioxide were emitted by road transport. The figures for rail and air transport are 2·2 million tonnes and 18·4 million tonnes of carbon dioxide respectively. Emissions from aircraft using fuel supplied in the United Kingdom will not all occur in United Kingdom air space. The figure of 18·4 million tonnes is an estimate of emissions occurring world wide from aircraft fuel supplied originally in the United Kingdom. The figures given here differ slightly from those published in the Department's "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics 1988", because of updating.

Nature Reserves

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the further report allowing publication of the strategy for national nature reserves; and what plans he has for consultation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my noble Friend the Minister of State for Housing, Environment and Countryside in another place. Anyone wishing to send comments to the Nature Conservancy Council about the preliminary report is invited to do so. An announcement will be made in due course about the next stage of the review.

Water Meters

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent the monthly cost of water bills in the pilot scheme in the Isle of Wight involving water meters differed from previous costs before the introduction of water meters.

Mr. Howard: The tariff used in the meter trials on the Isle of Wight have been set so as to recover the same amount of income in total from the island as would have been recovered under a rateable value basis. It is, however, too early to say to what extent individual bills will differ as customers on the island will not receive their first metered bills until October.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there has been any formal evaluation of the pilot scheme for water meters in the Isle of Wight; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Some preliminary results from the Isle of Wight and other metering trials were set out in the first interim report which was published last February. Other reports will be published from time to time over the next three years as information on various aspects of the trials becomes available.

Housing Management

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to act on the recommendation in the Glasgow university report "The Nature and Effectiveness of Housing Management in England" to introduce a system of performance indicators for local authority housing management.

Mr. Trippier: My noble Friend the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside intends to table an amendment to the Local Government and Housing Bill during Committee stage in another place.

This would enable a performance indication scheme to be put in place in every local authority so that tenants will be able to see—for the first time—how efficient, effective and economical their authority is in managing its housing stock. Precise requirements will be for regulations. We plan to consult widely before introducing the scheme.

Water Purity

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what reports he has received concerning the presence in water supplies in south-west London of the organism chironomidae; what action is being taken to eliminate the organism; how long he expects elimination to take; and if he will make a statement on how the matter arose and what action he intends to take to prevent a recurrence;

(2) what advice or instructions his Department gives to water undertakings to monitor water supplies to test for the presence of unwanted organisms; whether he considers present practice to be adequate in the light of the existence of chironomidae in water supplies in south-west London; whether he considers Thames Water complied fully with the recommended procedures; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what advice or instructions his Department gives to water undertakings to check their filter beds and other elements in the processing cycle for water supplies against physical objects which might lead to the entry and multiplication of unwanted organisms in the water supply; whether such instructions or advice were complied with by Thames Water in the light of the presence of contaminated water supplies in south-west London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My Department has received a report from Thames Water that chironomid larvae are present in the water supply to parts of the boroughs of Hammersmith, Fulham, Hounslow, Kingston, Lambeth, Merton, Richmond, Southwark and Wandsworth supplied from the Hampton treatment works.

Thames Water found that two sand filters were passing larvae into the supply. These filters have been isolated for inspection and, if necessary, repair. Thames Water is also draining and cleaning the filtered water storage tank at the works. This cleaning operation is expected to take several days to complete. Thames Water is still investigating the cause of the incident.

My Department has not issued specific advice on the monitoring of water supplies or the checking of filter beds for the presence of unwanted organisms such as chironomidae. It is the water undertaker's responsibility to check that processes are operating efficiently and to monitor the quality of water entering supply. My Department's standing committee of analysts has published methods of biological sampling for macro-invertebrates which includes chironomidae. I understand that many water undertakers use these methods to monitor certain water supplies at times of the year when the presence of chironomidae is possible.

My Department will urgently review current practice with water undertakers when the cause of this incident is known.

Drinking Water Quality

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place a copy of the Government's response to the European Community's reasoned opinion on drinking water quality in the Library.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) on 30 June, Official Report, Vol. 155, column 580.

Land Development Managers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many water authorities have now an officially designated land development manager or a post carrying such specific responsibilities.

Mr. Howard: All the nine water authorities in England have property or estates managers whose responsibilities include the disposal of surplus land.

Hospitals (Radioactive Waste)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many hospitals currently store solid radioactive waste on site; and what controls exist for monitoring and ensuring safety.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Four hundred and eighty eight hospitals in England are authorised to store radioactive waste under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 and under the Radioactive Substances (Hospitals' Waste) Exemption Order 1963. Monitoring and safety are ensured by inspectors from both Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of hospitals licensed under the Radioactive Substances Act 1966 to discharge radioactive wastes into the atmosphere or into the sewers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Hospitals authorised to discharge radioactive wastes are given in the list of registrations in England and Wales issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 for the keeping and use of radioactive materials and mobile sources. A copy is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish figures for the amount of radioactive waste released into the atmosphere or down drains or stored on site at hospitals in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information about the quantities of radioactive waste discharged and stored at hospitals is not kept centrally; records are kept at individual premises.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what access local people and their representatives have to information about the level and potential dangers of the discharge of radioactive wastes from hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Monitoring and safety are ensured by inspectors from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Health and Safety Executive who visit the premises. Details of any hazards found are published in the inspectorate of pollution's annual report which is available in the Library of the House.

Cyanide

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures his Department intends to take in order to protect the environment from the use of cyanide in prospective gold mining.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have been asked to reply. Cyanide is not used in any gold mining operation in Scotland, nor are there any plans for its use in Scotland. The use of cyanide in mining would be subject to existing controls which apply, for example, to the use of substances hazardous to health and safety, to discharges to rivers or sewers and to the disposal of waste. I am not aware that any further controls are needed.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has commissioned research on the environmental effects of cyanide in prospective gold mining; and if he will publish the results.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have been asked to reply. Cyanide is not used in any gold mining operation in Scotland, nor are there any plans for its use in Scotland. The dangers of cyanide to human health are well known and its use is thus strictly controlled. I am not aware of any need for research in this area.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of land within the Argyll and Bute district council area is designated as sites of special scientific interest or otherwise protected.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have been asked to reply. The Nature Conservancy Council has advised me that 7 per cent. of land within Argyll and Bute district council area is designated SSSI or otherwise protected.

Community Charge

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 198, how many copies of the community charge practice notes have been issued to people or organisations other than local authorities.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 29 June 1989]: In the case of the community charge practice note No. 19 "Exemptions from the Personal Community Charge (2)", published earlier this month, 2,700 copies were distributed to practitioners in local government and a further 700 copies were circulated to other organisations and individuals. Detailed records of distribution are not available for previous practice notes, but the proportion of local authority to other recipients was similar.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 11 May to the hon. Member for Copeland, Official Report, column 521, he will state how many requests have been received from the public by the private company, contracted by the Central Office of Information, for the leaflets on the community charge listed on page 2 of "The Community Charge (The So-Called Poll Tax): How It Will Work For You" delivered to all households in England: what is the average time taken to deal with a request for one or more leaflets; what monitoring of this company's performance is being undertaken by the Central Office of Information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 28 June 1989]: There has been exceptionally high demand for these further leaflets with over 235,000 requests received so far. Many requests are for more than one leaflet. It was thought right to delay distribution until the outcome of court action by Greenwich borough council against the short leaflet "The Community Charge (the so-called Poll Tax)" was known and the implications of the judgment could be fully assessed. This and the level of demand has led to delays, both factors beyond my control, which I naturally regret. Orders arising for the short leaflet are, however, now being met and an explanatory letter is being sent to people who have placed orders which cannot be fulfilled until stocks have been replenished. Reprinting to meet the high demand is under way. The usual monitoring procedures are in place. All orders will be fulfilled as quickly as possible.

Felixstowe Dock and Railway Company

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure compliance by the Felixstowe Dock and Railway company with the terms of his consent issued under section 6 of the Felixstowe Dock and Railway Act 1988, for the phase one reclamation by the company of lands at Fagbury.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 30 June 1989]: The Department's primary concern for limiting the consent under section 6(3) of the Felixstowe Dock and Railway Act 1988 to phase one reclamation by the Felixstowe Dock and Railway company was to ensure that the environmental effects, in particular the damage and disturbance to the birds, were minimised.

Before issuing the consent, I had regard to the various agreements and undertakings entered into by or on behalf of the company during the passage of the Act in respect of the establishment of a nature reserve at Trimley marshes, landscaping and other matters. I also had regard to the agreement reached between the Nature Conservancy Council and the company subsequent to the passage of the Act for a programme of ornithological and hydrological monitoring studies within the Orwell estuary to identify changes in the bird population and their habitats resulting from phase one of the works.

It is up to the parties to the various agreements to monitor the situation and seek compliance with the terms of the agreement. It is understood from the Nature Conservancy Council that the ornithological monitoring studies are progressing satisfactorily.

Water Supplies

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the monitoring arrangements he has made in respect of derogations of water supplies granted by him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 30 June 1989]: Where a derogation has been granted by my Department to water undertakers under the terms of the EC drinking water directive my officials carry out periodic reviews. Where improvements are necessary, my officials check on progress made by water undertakers.

Sewage Discharges (North West)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the monitoring arrangements he has made in respect of any derogation of sewerage either in force or under consideration in the north west; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer, 30 June 1989]: At present, consents to discharge effluent from sewage treatment works issued under part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 contain conditions which require that discharges are sampled by the water authority on the basis of agreed sampling guidelines. Under the Water Bill, it will become the responsibility of the National Rivers Authority to issue discharge consents and to determine appropriate sampling and monitoring arrangements.

Rating Reform

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what alternative method to the rating valuation list he proposes to use after the introduction of the poll tax in England and Wales in April 1990 to calculate home loss payments.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 30 June 1989]: There are no plans to introduce a poll tax but instead a charge for the services provided locally.

In paragraph 8 of the consultation paper on land compensation and compulsory purchase legislation which my Department issued on 7 March 1989, we have proposed provision for the Secretary of State to prescribe a single flat rate of home loss payable to all qualifying claimants at broadly the present level. However, the paper invited comments on whether, in the light of the general operation of the land compensation code, some further provision would be appropriate in the case of owner-occupiers who are displaced as a result of compulsory purchase. We are currently studying the responses of the consultation papers, a copy of which I am sending to the hon. Member.

Water Supply (Yorkshire)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the water supply in Yorkshire meets the European Community guidelines for aluminium content, and for any other additives, metals or pesticides.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 29 June 1989]: Most supplies in the Yorkshire water authority area regularly comply with the standards set in the EC drinking water directive. Those supplies which regularly exceed the directive's standards, including those for aluminium, manganese and iron, and for which the Department has granted derogations under article 9 of the directive, are included in the list which I placed in the Library on 22 June. Derogations under article 9 can be granted only where the situation is due to the nature and structure of the ground and there is no risk to public health.

I also refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 8 March, Official Report, column 521-22.

HMS Cambridge, Wembury

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive notification under circular 18/84 of proposal, for new boundary fencing at HMS Cambridge, Wembury; and when he is planning to hold a public inquiry.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 20 June 1989]: My hon. Friend the then Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces undertook to follow the procedures for Crown development laid down in circular 18/84. But it is for his Department to decide how to proceed within the terms of that circular. If the proposal is referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State he will then decide whether the proposal should proceed by way of a non-statutory local inquiry, an informal hearing or the exchange of written representations.

River Pollution

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sewage treatment works within Northumbria water authority's boundaries and the number of times each sewage treatment works has failed the discharge consent standard in each of the last two years.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 21 June 1989]: Details of the sewage treatment works in the Northumbrian water authority area are held on the public register, which is maintained by the authority and is available for public inspection, free of charge, at all reasonable hours. The register includes information about any breaches of discharge consents.

Water Companies (Deemed Consent)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes his Department will make to the procedure of granting deemed consent to companies following the privatisation of water authorities.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 26 June 1989]: The arrangement for granting deemed consents to companies was a transitional provision under part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 related to those categories of discharge brought under control for the first time. This applied only to applications received by 14 October 1987. There are no plans to reintroduce the procedure for granting deemed consents following privatisation of the water industry.

Burnley Inner Area Programme

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to issue approval for Burnley inner area programme protect HS 205—Council for Voluntary Service single homeless project.

Mr. Trippier: Urban programme funding was approved for the project on 29 June.

Water Privatisation

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to the answer to the hon. Member for Dewsbury, 26 June, Official Report, column 299, if he will specify the exact amount which was allowed for expenditure on the water authorities' current corporate awareness advertising compaigns when approving the water authorities' overall financing limits.

Mr. Howard: No. To do so would prejudice the authorities' media buying negotiations.

EMPLOYMENT

Industry Training Boards

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to publish his proposals on the future of the industry training boards.

Mr. Nicholls: I have asked the chairman of each ITB to bring forward proposals for future training arrangements in the industry by the end of July.

Restart

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people have (a) been called for a restart interview, (b) attended a restart interview, (c) been referred to UBO for failing to attend interview, (d) been disallowed, (e) been called for restart follow-up interview, (f) attended a restart follow-up interview, (g) been referred to UBO for failing to attend follow-up interview and (h) been disallowed after referral to UBO for the Training Agency covering the Doncaster area, for each of the latest four three monthly periods available.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is given in the table. The figures relate to the employment service, Humberside south area.

(h) Disallowed for failing to attend	Not available in form requested—included in (d) above

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people have been referred to the following outcomes as a result of their restart interviews and, for each of the outcomes, how many people started or attended (a) job, (b) restart course, (c) ET, (d) CP, (e) new JTS, (f) jobclub, (g) EAS, (h) voluntary work/VPP, (i) ERC, (j) DRO and (k) claimant adviser for the Training Agency covering the Doncaster area, for each of the latest four three monthly periods available.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is given in the table. The figures relate to the employment service, Humberside south area. We do not know how many people ultimately obtain a job or other opportunity as a result of the restart interview.

	April-June 88	July-September	October-December	January-March 89

Tourism (Yorkshire and Humberside)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the top 20 tourist attractions in numbers of tourists attending or visiting Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Lee: The English tourist board's annual survey of visits to attractions gives the following figures for the Yorkshire and Humberside regional tourist board area in 1988:

	Number of visits
York Minster	2,100,000
Flamingo Land	1,001,000
Jorvik Viking Centre	865,909
National Museum of Photography	824,811
Rother Valley Country Park	689,329
Castle Museum, York	640,705

Jobcentres (Doncaster and Mexborough)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what checks are carried out by his Department's staff in the jobcentres at Doncaster and Mexborough, to establish whether vacancies advertised are offering rates of pay which fall below wages council rates.

Mr. Lee: Jobcentres have full details of wages council minimum rates of pay and instructions that, where vacancies are notified for occupations affected by wages council orders, rates must not be less than those specified.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether any vacancies advertised by his Department's jobcentres in Doncaster and Mexborough on 26 June were offering rates of pay which fall below wages council rates.

Mr. Lee: On 26 June, Doncaster jobcentre was displaying five vacancies and Mexborough jobcentre had three vacancies which were covered by wages council orders. I am informed that none of the vacancies concerned was advertising rates of pay below the minimum wages council rates.

Tourism (Cambridgeshire)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total value of tourism in Cambridgeshire at current prices in each of the years from 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Lee: The available information for Cambridgeshire is shown in table 1 and relates to expenditure by overseas visitors to the United Kingdom who made a trip of at least one night to Cambridgeshire. Information about spending by domestic residents is available only for the whole of the East Anglia tourist board region, and is shown in table 2 together with the equivalent information for overseas visitors. Figures for tourist expenditure by United Kingdom residents on day trips to Cambridgeshire or East Anglia are not available.

Employment Rehabilitation Centres

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 14 June, Official Report, column 436, he will publish in the Official Report any changes to policy or guidelines which have caused a 50 per cent. reduction in the average length of attendance at employment rehabilitation centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The average length of stay of all clients in ERCs has reduced because many more people are finding short courses of assessment and guidance are meeting their needs. However, in 1989 the length of stay on rehabilitation courses was 35 days and has remained consistent over the last five years. I am also pleased to report that the number of people helped by the ERS has increased from 12,000 in 1984-85 to about 26,000 in 1988-89.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of the employment rehabilitation centres which share sites with skillcentres, when the Skills Training Agency is moved into the private sector.

Mr. Lee: The employment rehabilitation service, which includes employment rehabilitation centres, will continue. Contingency plans are being drawn up for individual centres on shared sites which may be affected in varying degrees by the move of the Skills Training Agency into the private sector.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many letters and representations he has received concerning the future of the construction industry training board and its statutory levy since the publication of his paper "Employment for the 1990s".

Mr. Nicholls: A total of 253 letters and representations have been received by my Department.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give (a) the number of YTS places available and (b) the number of young people in training in each region, Scotland and Wales for each month from October 1988 to May 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Cope: The information is shown in the table.

Training Agency

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed in his Department's Training Agency; and if he will give a breakdown of their main responsibilities.

Mr. Lee: On 1 June 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, the numbers of permanent staff employed in the Department's Training Agency were 11,893. Of these, 9,501 (including 2,623 Skills Training Agency staff) were employed in field offices on delivery and administration of the various programmes for which the Department is responsible. The remaining 2,392 were employed in head office; of these, 984·5 were employed in central services, 1,266·5 in policy and programmes division and the training standards advisory service and 141 in the Skills Training Agency head office.

Employment Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many referrals there have been on a monthly basis from the employment service to employment training agents (a) nationally, and (b) by training area since September 1988.

Mr. Cope: Information on the level of employment service (ES) referrals to training agents on a national basis is given in table 1. Information on levels of referrals on a Training Agency area office basis is not available.

Referrals to employment training training agents

Month	Total referrals
6 September 1988	96,525
October 1988	82,866
November 1988	80,407

January 1989	91,606
February 1989	89,863
March 1989[1]	95,765
April 1989	82,323
May 1989	74,284

[1] Five week month.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training managers, by training agency area, were receiving either (i) the standard, (ii) special, (iii) high level, (iv) extended introduction or further assessment supplementary grants for trainees on a monthly basis since September 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available without disproportionate cost. Supplementary grants are a matter of negotiation between the Training Agency area office and the individual training manager.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement as to the progress of trainees from their initial referral to the ET training agent and a placement with a training manager.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest evidence we have on the referral of trainees into employment training shows that 51 per cent. of initial referrals attend the training agent and 79 per cent. of these are placed with a training manager.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a list of local authorities that have refused to co-operate with employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay) on 20 June 1989 at column 137.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the total budget spent on advertising employment training; and if he will provide a breakdown as to the nature of this spending.

Mr. Nicholls: The total spent on advertising employment training in the last financial year, 1988-89 was £9,654,954 and this financial year 1989-90 for the current campaign £4,375,750. This is broken down as follows:

Television	11,366,822
Press	1,423,132
Posters	1,240,750

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when his Department will have completed the examination of ET training managers for approved status; and how many staff within the Training Agency are working on this exercise.

Mr. Nicholls: It is planned to complete the examination of employment training managers by 5 September 1990. The number of Training Agency staff dedicated to this purpose varies from area office to area office depending on local demand.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give (a) the number of employment training places available in 1989-90, (b) the number of people in ET on the latest date for which information is available and (c) an estimate of the planned ET places in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Nicholls: In May 1989 there were 255,000 available places on employment training. On 23 June, the latest date for which information is available, there were 192,000 people on the programme. Operational plans for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are not yet available.

Sullom Voe (Explosion)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the explosion at the Sullom Voe oil terminal on Thursday 22 June.

Mr. Nicholls: On 22 June 1989, the Health and Safety Executive was informed that due to the failure of a length of weld on a steel pipe drain at the Sullom Voe oil terminal, oily water was released causing an eruption of water and gravel. There were no injuries.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give (a) the total numbers of long-term unemployed and (b) the long-term unemployed as a percentage of the total unemployed in June of each year from 1979 to 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment is analysed by duration quarterly. Direct comparisons of unemployment by duration since 1979 are not possible because of the changes from a count of registrants at jobcentres to a count based on unemployed claimants in 1983 and other changes in coverage of the count. Following is the available information, which is also in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed over 12 months and these as a percentage of the total for each April from 1979 to 1989.

April 1979-1989

April	Unemployed over 12 months	Percentage of total
1988	1,029,206	40·6
1989	744,120	39·5

[1] Figures for 1979-82 are for unemployed registrants at Jobcentres; those for 1983-89 relate to claimants unemployed.

Minimum Trainee Allowance

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his reply to hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, of Monday 19 June, Official Report, columns 10-11, he will list those employers known to his Department who supplement the minimum trainee allowance; what percentage of YTS trainees are so covered; what is the average supplement paid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: There is no list of employers who supplement the minimum trainee allowance. Twenty-four per cent. of trainees had employed status in May 1989, and were paid a wage by their employer. Survey evidence suggests that in addition about 14 per cent. of non-employed trainees receive an average supplement of £7 a week from their work experience provider on top of their trainee allowance. Payments above the minimum level are at the discretion of the employer, and reflect the value to the company of acquiring skilled workers.

European Tourism Year

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures are being taken to help handicapped, disabled and disadvantaged tourists coming to Britain in European Tourism Year 1990.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 30 June 1989]: Specific initiatives to mark European Tourism Year are in the planning stage. Measures to help handicapped, disabled and disadvantaged tourists are being considered by the British tourist authority which is responsible for planning and co-ordinating the United Kingdom campaign.

Remploy

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make available the surveyor's report on Remploy's Rutherglen factory which resulted in the recommendation to close it down.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 29 June 1989]: The board of Remploy is responsible for making decisions relating to the day-to-day business of the company. The information requested is commercial and confidential to the board.

Health and Safety

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the level of fines imposed on each of the largest 100 companies for health and safety offences in the last five years; what was the nature of the accident and the date in each case; and how many persons were killed or seriously injured or suffered minor injuries on each occasion.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 29 June 1989]: The information requested could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each year since 1974 (a) the number of prosecutions of (i) managers, (ii) supervisors and (iii) company directors and (b) the fines under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 29 June 1989]: Available data do not differentiate between offences committed by managers, supervisors and company directors. The tables list the convictions obtained under section 36 and section 37 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. Section 36 provides for the prosecution of a person whose act, or inaction, has led another individual to commit an offence under the Act. Section 37 provides for the prosecution of a director, manager, secretary or similar officer of a body corporate for offence committed by that body corporate. Information is not available for years before 1981.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 29 June 1989]: Since 1 April 1976 the number of female factory inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive, the total number of factory inspectors employed, and the number of female inspectors expressed as a percentage of the total are as follows. PRIME MINISTER

Inner Cities

Q30. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received about the Government's inner cities policy.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations, many of them in support of the Government's inner cities policies. Under the comprehensive range of measures, costing £3·5 billion this year which makes up the action for cities initiative, good progress continues to be made in the regeneration of our inner cities. In the 57 inner city target areas, unemployment fell by almost 24 per cent. in the 12 months to May 1989. Recorded crime in the Metropolitan police force areas fell by 6 per cent. in 1988. Involvement of private companies continues to grow—over the last six months the number of companies working with the Government's inner city task forces has increased from 450 to 500.

USSR

Q51. Mr. Page: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the United Kingdom's relations with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The Prime Minister: We receive many representations about relations with the Soviet Union from individual members of the public, as well as from interested organisations and their representatives. The Government's desire to strengthen these relations, and our support for Mr. Gorbachev's reforms are widely shared.

United States of America

The Prime Minister: No.

Road Safety

Q67. Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding safety on the roads.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of such representations. There is understandable and widespread concern about the needless suffering and unnecessary economic cost caused by road accidents. Cutting the toll of road casualties is a high priority. Our target, which we set in 1987, is a one third reduction in casualties by the year 2000. We are well on course for achieving that.

Coal Industry

Q70. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the coal industry.

The Prime Minister: I have received several recent representations regarding the coal industry.

Scotland

Q71. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Scotland.

The Prime Minister: Probably in September.

Pollution

Q79. Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the reduction of pollution.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations regarding the environment. I share the concern that it should be protected and pollution reduced. The Government have undertaken many measures to improve the quality of the environment. We intend to bring forward further legislative proposals on pollution control shortly.

Crawley

Q80. Mr. Soames: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Crawley.

The Prime Minister: I have not recently received any particular representations regarding the pharmaceutical industry. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health has regular contact with the representatives of the industry.

Water Privatisation

Q95. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received on water privatisation.

Q139. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received any recent representations about water privatisation.

The Prime Minister: Many individuals and organisations have commented on a wide range of water privatisation matters, which are being considered in the context of the Water Bill currently before Parliament.

Disabled People (Legislation)

Q102. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Prime Minister what consultations she has had with Sir Roy Griffiths on the relevance of section 7 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Representation and Consultation) Act 1986 as a strategy for community care.

The Prime Minister: Sir Roy Griffiths has been involved in the Government's consideration of his report "Community Care Agenda for Action". The Government's considerations are wide ranging and are taking account of existing relevant legislation.

European Council (Madrid)

Q106. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish a White Paper outlining the conclusions and the matters considered at the Madrid meeting of the European Council; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made on 29 June on the outcome of the European Council in Madrid.

Cyprus

Q168. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the United Kingdom's relations with Cyprus.

The Prime Minister: I receive representations on the United Kingdom's relations with Cyprus from time to time from various quarters. I am happy to say that relations are excellent. I have met President Vassiliou three times in the last year and I hope to see him again on 10 July.

West Germany

Q206. Mr. Malins: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the United Kingdom's relationship with West Germany.

The Prime Minister: No.

Agricultural Policy

Q218. Mr. Marland: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding agricultural policy.

The Prime Minister: The Government frequently receive representations about agricultural policy. The United Kingdom agricultural industry is widely respected for its efficiency and competitiveness. It is well placed to benefit from the opportunities for fair competition which completion of the EC's single internal market will bring. And I was pleased yesterday at the royal show to pay tribute to the enormous contribution the agriculture industry and the thousands of individual farmers make to our national life.

Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), Official Report, 2 May, column 114, if she will now list by name the participants present at the seminar on environmental policies and the greenhouse effect which she organised on 26 April.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 2 May at column 114.

Bristol Channel (Sewage)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister when she will restrict or refuse local authorities the opportunity of new raw sewage outfalls into the Bristol channel.

The Prime Minister: The Secretary of State will consider on their merits any proposals which come before him related to the discharge of sewage into the Bristol channel. Discharge consents for long sea outfall schemes are granted only when they enable bathing waters in the vicinity to meet the requirements of the EC directive standards and where they are designed to take full account of local conditions.

Bathing Water (Pollution)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to take personal control of the co-ordination work to stop the dumping of raw sewage into the English Channel and to work towards these beaches attaining the standards of the EC bathing water directive 76/160/EEC.

The Prime Minister: The discharge of raw sewage through short sea outfalls is an unsatisfactory legacy from the past; and a substantial programme of improving the sewerage systems of coastal towns is under way. Replacement systems of whatever type are designed to bring identified bathing waters up to the standards set in the EC bathing water directive 76/160/EEC. Long sea outfalls, which discharge some 2 km to sea, are a safe and effective means for the disposal of screened sewage. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution grants discharge consents for long sea outfall schemes only when they enable bathing waters in the vicinity to meet the requirements of the EC directive standards and where they are designed to take full account of local conditions. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will continue to seek environmentally sound solutions for each location on the basis of the best available scientific evidence.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 4 July.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 4 July.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 4 July.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 4 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

ENERGY

Electricity

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the total consumption of electricity in (a) England, and (b) Wales in a full year recorded over the last five years for which figures are available, and the percentage consumption for domestic, industrial, and commercial sectors;

(2) what was the average demand for electricity measured in megawatts in England and Wales, shown separately, for the winter period and summer period for each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(3) what was the maximum demand for electricity measured in megawatts in England and Wales, separately, during 1988-89; and at what time of which day it occurred in each case.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These are matters for the Electricity Council. I shall ask the chairman of the council to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total generating capacity of electricity in Wales measured in megawatts; and what is the percentage component in the total generated by (a) nuclear, (b) coal, (c) oil, (d) hydro, (e) pumped storage and (f) other.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I shall ask the chairman of the CEGB to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Power Stations (Emergency Planning Zones)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will make a statement on the nuclear installations inspectorate's plans for reducing emergency planning zones around nuclear power stations;

(2) what changes are proposed to the size of emergency planning zones around nuclear power stations;

(3) what is the size of emergency planning zones around nuclear power stations;

(4) what is the stipulated evacuation area around British nuclear power stations in the event of a radiation emission.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 20 June 1989 at column 93.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been reported to him by the Welsh Language board; and what steps he is taking to implement any of its recommendations.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Language board published its strategy document on 22 June and will in the near future be publishing voluntary guidelines governing the use of Welsh in the public and private sectors. My right hon. Friend will give very careful consideration to all the board's recommendations.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what review he has undertaken of the availability of staff to provide medical and post-medical services in Welsh-speaking areas through the medium of the Welsh language; and whether he has any proposals to extend training courses in Wales to meet these requirements.

Mr. Grist: Information on the number of staff employed in the National Health Service in Wales who are bilingual in English and Welsh is not available centrally; the exception to this is information relating to speech therapists concerning which I wrote to the hon. Gentleman on 24 October 1988, placing a copy of my letter in the Library of the House. District health authorities in Wales are currently engaged in the second round of an annual manpower resource planning exercise to determine future manpower requirements in the National Health Service in Wales. Discussions of these plans with individual health authorities will include the demand for and availability of Welsh-speaking staff. Consideration will be given to the question of extending training courses in Wales to meet any such demand in the light of the outcome of that exercise.

Health Studies Centre

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the establishment of a health studies centre in North Wales; what consideration has been given to this issue; and what conclusions have been reached.

Mr. Grist: The Department has been asked by Clwyd health authority to provide financial support for the establishment of a centre for health studies in north Wales, fuller details of which have just been received. Consideration is being given to that request within the context of a recent report on the role of the combined training institute in Cardiff, which has examined the issue of training provision generally from the National Health Service in Wales. Representations in support of the proposal have been received from the Plaid Cymru spokesman on health and from the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas).

Urban Investment Grant

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library details of the criteria which applicants must meet to qualify for the urban investment grant.

Mr. Peter Walker: Urban investment grants (UIGs) are designed to support projects costing more than £150,000, which are brought forward by private sector developers and which, because likely costs would exceed likely values on completion, would not otherwise proceed. To qualify for UIGs, which are site specific, developments must be located in an urban area in Wales and bring back into use derelict or rundown land and—or buildings. Projects must also produce benefits which contribute to alleviating urban deprivation. Copies of the UIG guidance notes, which set out these criteria, have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report, on a county basis, the value of the urban investment grant for each month since its inception.

Mr. Peter Walker: Since the introduction of urban investment grants (UIG) on 1 April 1989, five schemes have been approved for support involving £2·033 million grant. The geographical distribution is as follows:

	Scheme	£ million grant
Gwynedd	1	0·066
Mid Glamorgan	4	1·967

In addition, eight applications are currently being considered, but all applications for UIG are treated in confidence.

River Pollution

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to increase funding for research into pollution of the river ecosystem with particular reference to the rivers of Wales before privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. Grist: This will be a matter for the National Rivers Authority.

Hospital Facilities

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, pursuant to his reply dated 20 June, Official Report, column 84, he will list the range of facilities available in each of the hospitals mentioned in the reply.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Health district and community hospital	Facilities available
Clwyd
Chirk	GP Medical, GP Post-natal, Outpatient, Casualty, Rehabilitation, X-ray, Day hospital
Colwyn Bay	GP Medical, Outpatient, Casualty, Rehabilitation, X-ray
Denbigh	GP Medical, Outpatient, Casualty, Rehabilitation, Day hospital
Mold	GP Medical, Outpatient, Casualty, Rehabilitation, X-ray, Day hospital
Prestatyn	GP Medical, Rehabilitation
Royal Alexandra, Rhyl	GP Medical, Geriatric, Outpatient, Rehabilitation, X-ray, Day hospital
Ruthin	GP Medical, Outpatient, Casualty, Rehabilitation, X-ray, Day hospital
Gwynedd
Bryn Beryl, Pwllheli	GP Medical, Geriatric, Maternity, Casualty, Physiotherapy, Day hospital
Dolgellau	GP Medical, Geriatric, Maternity, Outpatient, Casualty, X-ray, Occupational Therapy, Physiotherapy, Day hospital
Tywyn	GP Medical, Geriatric, Maternity, Outpatient, Casualty, Operating, X-ray, Physiotherapy, Day hospital, Ambulance station

Meat Inspections

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of European Community directives and regulations on the inspection in Wales of meat and meat products in the run-up to the single European market and on the likely changes in terms of staffing and finance that will be required to meet these requirements.

Mr. Peter Walker: The arrangements for meat inspection in the single market will depend upon decisions still to be taken by the Council of Ministers and it is not yet possible, therefore, to estimate the effects on staffing and costs. It is clear, however, that we shall need to move towards a unified supervision system in all our meat plants and we shall be discussing with the interests concerned how this should be achieved.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of the veterinary presence in export slaughterhouses in Wales on the protection of public health.

Mr. Peter Walker: Veterinary supervision is required if slaughterhouses are to engage in intra-Community trade or export to third countries. If this requirement were not met our industry would not be able to export meat and meat products. I have never accepted, however, that veterinary supervision is essential to guarantee satisfactory standards of hygiene.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has made regarding EC document 8062/88; and whether he has urged the EC to recognise the role of district councils in Wales in the inspection of slaughterhouses and food hygiene duties.

Mr. Peter Walker: My officials have made it clear in discussions on this proposal that it is premature to consider arrangements for veterinary checks in advance of agreement on more fundamental aspects of the animal health arrangements to apply within the single market. I am not aware of any proposals that would seek to change the existing role of district councils in slaughterhouse inspections or food law enforcement.

Food Controls

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy that controls over food for human consumption in Wales should continue to come under the care of environmental health officers; and whether he will press the EC to recognise this approach.

Mr. Grist: The importance of the role that environmental health officers have in the area of food inspection and control is recognised by the Government. Our EC partners have been regularly pressed to indicate their recognition that environmental health officers will continue to have a role to play in the food hygiene field and discussions on this point are continuing.

Sewage Treatment Works (Rhymney Valley)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish details of those sewage treatment works in the Rhymney valley which require capital investment to bring the quality of discharges up to that stipulated in their discharge consents.

Mr. Grist: The sewage treatment works at Draethen and Rudry are included in the programme of capital investment.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Balance of Payments

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of British investment overseas; what was the level in 1979; and what impact it has on the balance of payments.

Mr. Major: In the year to 1989, United Kingdom direct investment and portfolio investment in overseas assets were £19·8 billion and £12·9 billion, respectively. Comparable figures for 1979 were £5·9 billion and £0·9 billion. Further details of the figures are available in the United Kingdom balance of payments press release of 15 June 1989.

The effect of these outflows on the make-up of the balance of payments cannot be measured precisely as, without them, inflows into the United Kingdom of interest, profits and dividends would be lower and, more generally, sterling's exchange rate would be different.

Economic Growth

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate for economic growth in 1989-90.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor forecast at Budget time that real gross domestic product would grow by 2¼ per cent. in 1989-90.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of (a) all premium bond purchases and (b) purchases under £100 are made by pensioners.

Mr. Lilley: It is estimated that about 21 per cent. of all purchases and about 19 per cent. of purchases under £100 are made by people of pensionable age.

Investment

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the total investment growth figures for each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The figures for total investment growth in the United Kingdom at 1985 prices, over the last 10 years, are shown in the table.

United Kingdom total Gross Domestic Fixed Capital Formation (1985 prices) per cent. change on a year earlier

	Per cent. change
1979	2·80
1980	−5·37
1981	−9·58
1982	5·42
1983	5·03
1984	8·60
1985	3·80
1986	1·66
1988	12·25

Between 1980 and 1988 the United Kingdom had the fastest growth of total investment of all the EC countries.

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of investment in United Kingdom industry over the past 10 years can be accounted for by internally generated funds.

Mr. Major: Companies' undistributed income is used to finance a variety of expenditure, including investment, but it is not possible to say to what extent investment has been financed by internally or externally generated funds.

Village Halls (VAT)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has yet received clarification from the European Commission of the effect on village halls of the European Court of Justice's judgment on value added tax zero rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I have now received a letter from Mrs. Christiane Scrivener, the EC Commissioner, which indicates that the Commission believes the European Court's judgment, while prohibiting the zero-rating of supplies of fuel and power to village halls, does not rule out zero-rating for the construction of village halls. I therefore propose to bring forward amendments to the Finance Bill at Report stage to reinstate the zero rate for the construction of new village halls and similar charitable buildings. These will be tabled as soon as possible.

Non-domestic Rates

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will announce his decision on possible abatement of the increase in national non-domestic rates by powers given under sub-paragraph 5(3) of schedule 7 to the Local Government Finance Act 1988; what criteria he will take into account when taking that decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major [holding answer 21 June 1989]: The initial NNDR multipliers will be specified in the revenue support grant reports for 1990-91. For succeeding years, the presumption is that the NNDR multiplier will be increased in line with the indexation provisions in the Local Government Finance Act 1988. However, if I did decide to increase the multipliers by less than the RPI, this would be announced before the revenue support grant reports for the year in question had to be approved by Parliament. All relevant considerations would be taken into account: for example, if improved efficiency led to a significant reduction in the amount local authorities needed to spend, some of the efficiency gains should be reflected in the burden which falls on the business community through non-domestic rates.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in the negotiations on the harmonisation of value added tax and excise duties.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 29 June 1989]: At its meeting on 19 June the Economic and Finance Council (Ecofin) agreed to set up an ad hoc group to examine the Commission's revised proposals, described in my answer to my hon. Friend on 23 May 1989 at column 440, and the alternative approaches put forward by a number of member states including the United Kingdom. The group is due to report back to Ecofin in time for its meeting on 9 October.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many registered value added tax payers keep detailed records as described in paragraph 3 (D) of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, excise notice 700, appendix C, in order to avoid payment of scale charges for input value added tax on road fuel.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 3 July 1989]: I regret that the information requested is not available.

TRANSPORT

Signposting

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for improving signposting in London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am currently consulting the public and interested parties on proposals for a new system of primary route signing for the area within the M25. The proposed system uses compass-based areas to create a consistent and logical set of signs which would be easier for motorists to follow. Copies of the consultation document "Primary Route Signing-Proposals for Change" have been placed in the Library.

Thamesline

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newham, South of 4 April, Official Report, column 20, what sums (a) have been paid and (b) will be paid in the current financial year to Thamesline; what proportion of income such payments are expected to provide; what conditions he has placed on any such payments in respect of maintenance of the service to all piers for which services were advertised; and if he will make a statement concerning the withdrawal of any such service.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I have given today to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould). Riverbus Limited expects to be seeking the whole of the Government grant of £500,000 during the current financial year. The income forecasts of the business are commercially confidential.

Submarine Incident

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has concerning an incident involving the fishing vessel Huntress and a Royal Naval submarine Ocelot on 28 June; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: On the afternoon of 28 June off the Isle of Arran a submarine towed the fishing vessel Huntress astern after fouling her nets. No serious damage occurred and there were no reports of injuries. One of the Department's marine surveyors is investigating the incident.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received regarding transport links to the Channel tunnel from the north-west.

Mr. Portillo: There have been some representations, mainly about improvements to road and rail networks between the north west and other regions and the tunnel. Our national roads planning takes account of requirements of road traffic to and from the tunnel. British Rail is responsible for rail links to the Tunnel, and following the recent completion of its regional consultations, we are now awaiting the plan which the railways board has to produce by the end of this year under section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act setting out its proposals for international services to the regions.

Air Ventilation (Passenger Aircraft)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information his Department has regarding the reduction of air ventilation on passenger aircraft;

(2) what research his Department has conducted into the effects arising from reduction of air ventilation on passenger aircraft.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These are technical matters pertinent to the certification standards of British-registered passenger aircraft. As such they are the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority. I have drawn the hon. Member's interest in this subject to the attention of the chairman of the authority.

Aircraft Evacuation

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what are the grounds on which minimum safety standards for emergency evacuation of aircraft are established;

(2) what consideration is given in setting minimum standards for emergency evacuation of aircraft to the particular needs of travellers with mobility difficulties.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of United Kingdom civil aviation rests with the Civil Aviation Authority. I am asking the chairman of the authority to write to my hon. Friend.

Diesel Pollution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to reduce pollution from vehicles using diesel fuel; and what regulations will be introduced with the introduction of the 40-tonne lorries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We shall be consulting shortly on regulations which will apply emission limits on exhaust fumes from diesel-engined vehicles for the first time.

For cars, the regulations will apply European standards in two stages. The first stage (directive 83/351/EEC) sets standards identical to those that currently apply to petrol-engined vehicles. It will take effect on 1 October 1990. Our current plans are to apply a second stage of more stringent limits (directive 88/76/EEC) by 1 October 1993 to cars with an engine capacity of at least 1·4 litres, whether petrol or diesel.

A further stage of exhaust fume emission limits for small cars has now been agreed within the European Community. It will affect all new cars under 1·4 litres from 1992. The agreement also gives an outline commitment to tougher standards for larger cars to be implemented at the same time.

On 1 October 1990 we shall also apply the European particulate limits for diesel-engined cars (directive 88/436/EEC). Special arrangements in line with all the directives will be made for direct-injection diesel-engined cars.

For all other diesel-engined vehicles we shall apply the recently agreed European standard on emission limits (directive 88/77/EEC) at the earliest date permitted, 1 October 1990.

Discussions are continuing in the European Community on a tightening of the 88/77/EEC standards and on the introduction of particulate limits for these categories of vehicle. Both the 88/77/EEC standards and any later standards will apply to the heaviest lorries.

Road Accidents (Deaths)

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the number of British people who die each year from road accidents; and what are the Government's plans to reduce that number.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Over 5,000 people are needlessly killed on our roads each year. Two years ago we set a target of reducing the number of casualties by a third by the year 2000. We are on course for doing so. We are now saving over 550 lives a year compared with the position two years ago, even though traffic has increased greatly.

A total of 75 per cent. of casualties occur on local roads. At a meeting with local authority political leaders today we reviewed our commitment to joint action to reduce casualties. We agreed that casualty reduction targets would in future be set at local and regional level, and we endorsed a package of measures to increase the number of low cost road engineering schemes which are so effective in saving lives.

This will give a fresh impetus to efforts to reduce the number of people killed and injured.

Thames Riverbus

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what public money has been paid to the Thames riverbus service; under what authority it was paid; what conditions were imposed; and what has been done to protect the public interest and to ensure that the service to the paying public is continued.

Mr. Portillo: The Government have not yet received a formal request for the first payment under the agreement governing their grant for the riverbus service. Grant will be paid under section 17 of the Ministry of Transport Act 1919. Payment of grant is limited to its application to the promotion and improvement of the service, and is conditional on payment of a private sector contribution of four times the grant and on the provision of appropriate management reports and accounts. The Government may terminate the grant agreement in the event that a regular service is not maintained to Charing Cross, Festival, Swan Lane and West India piers. The recent inauguration of new services to Greenwich and Greenland piers and suspension of the services to Cherry Garden pier are matters for the operator.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lebanon

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the Arab League's initiative towards the Lebanon.

Mr. Waldegrave: We and our European partners fully support the Arab League's efforts to find a solution to the crisis in Lebanon.

Namibia

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information Her Majesty's Government have from the United Nations regarding the procedures for registration and voting in the election to be held in Namibia in accord with resolution 435; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The administrator general's proclamation on registration of voters, agreed with the United Nation's special representative for Namibia, issued on 30 June.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has from the United Nations on the effect of the implementation of resolution 435 of the former Koevet forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Nation's special representative has expressed concern about unacceptable conduct by counter-insurgency elements in SWAPO. We are supporting UN efforts to reach a satisfactory solution to the problem.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has from the United Nations regarding the deployment of the additional 500 United Nations police in Namibia; whether the United Nations now proposes to further increase that number; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The additional group of 500 police monitors has begun to arrive in Namibia. The United Nations's Secretary-General, who has responsibility for the strength of the UN force in Namibia, has not requested a further increase in the number of police monitors.

Cambodia

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policies on the future role of the Khmer Rouge army in the Government of Cambodia; whether Her Majesty's Government will be represented at the Paris peace conference on Cambodia in July; and if Her Majesty's Government's representatives will oppose a solution permitting the return of the Khmer Rouge to Cambodia.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 11 April 1989. A central objective of our policy is to prevent the Khmer Rouge returning to power by force. In principle we expect to attend the international conference on Cambodia in Paris.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of men on rule 43 in Wandsworth prison on 27 June.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Four hundred and nineteen.

Inquests

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to make it mandatory for coroners to require all relevant medical records to be supplied to them before an inquest is concluded.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Coroners are independent judicial officers. In accordance with the Coroners Act 1988 they make thorough inquiries into all deaths referred to them, but it is for the coroners to decide how to conduct their inquiries. My right hon. Friend is not persuaded that it would be appropriate to adopt the hon. Member's suggestion.

Cremation Certificates

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the current fee recommended by the British Medical Association for the completion of a confirmatory cremation certificate; if he is intending to implement the recommendations of the Broderick report to end the requirement for two doctors to sign cremation certificates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the fee currently recommended by the British Medical Association for the confirmatory medical certificate for cremation is £23·50. After carefully considering the results of wide consultation, my right hon. Friend has decided that the confirmatory certificate should be retained, at least for the time being.

Immigration (Turkey)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration officers are operating in Turkey; what is the purpose of their presence there; and what are their duties.

Mr. Renton: One chief immigration officer and seven immigration officers are working in Istanbul and three immigration officers are working in Ankara. They are serving as entry clearance officers dealing with visa applications at the consulate general and embassy respectively.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of applications made for asylum by persons coming from Turkey in each week since 1 April to the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Information is not readily available about asylum applications from persons coming from Turkey. The number of applications made by Turkish nationals on or shortly after arrival in this country from all countries was as follows:

Week ending	Number
8 April	23
15 April	29
22 April	83
29 April	74
6 May	326
13 May	198
20 May	366
27 May	335
3 June	345
10 June	482
17 June	579
24 June	883

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions have been issued to immigration officers (a) operating in Turkey and (b) on boarding planes recently arrived from Turkey before passengers disembark; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Immigration officers operating in Turkey are working to the same instructions as entry clearance officers in other diplomatic posts abroad. During the period when immigration officers were boarding aircraft on arrival from Turkey their instructions were to ensure first that all British and other European Community nationals were able to disembark immediately. They were then to identify, as far as possible, those remaining passengers who seemed unlikely to require lengthy examination with a view to allowing them to proceed quickly to the main immigration control. Those likely to require lengthy examination were disembarked and dealt with separately, so as to avoid excessive delays and inconvenience to other passengers arriving at the main control.

Mail Interception

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) under what powers he authorises the interception of mail within the United Kingdom; what agencies he authorises to carry out the interception of mail; to what extent officials of such agencies convey information obtained from interception of mail to third parties; and if he will make a statement;

(2) under what powers immigration officers intercept letters sent by post within the United Kingdom; from whom immigration officers seek authorisation to intercept such mail; and if he will make a statement;

(3) under what powers the police intercept letters sent by post within the United Kingdom; from whom police have to obtain authorisation to intercept mail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The Interception of Communications Act 1985 makes provision for the interception of a communication in the course of its transmission by post in accordance with a warrant issued by the Secretary of State and provides for safeguards as to the disclosure of information obtained in this way. Information about the arrangements for interception is included in the annual reports of the commissioner appointed under the Act, which are laid before Parliament.

Prisons (Food Hygiene)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Government have any plans to lift the exemption of the Crown, as regards prisons, to the Food Hygiene (General) Regulations 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans at present for the removal of Crown immunity under the Food Hygiene (General) Regulations 1970 from prison establishments. Existing internal arrangements within the prison service are considered to be sufficient to set and monitor standards required by the regulations. The position on Crown immunity is kept under regular review.

Parole Decisions

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners were informed of their parole decision after their eligibility date (a) in 1988, and (b) the latest available figure for 1989; what was the average delay period for each year; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what percentage of prisoners who received their parole decision after their parole eligibility date were refused parole (a) in 1988, and (b) for the latest date available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Statistics are not readily available in the form requested. However, at present there are unacceptable delays in the parole scheme which are an unnecessary source of anxiety to inmates and their families, and present problems to prison service staff. These delays result from increases in the longer sentenced prison population and a growing workload for the parole unit. Cases needing to be referred to the Parole Board, requiring the most detailed consideration and thus taking longest to complete, are delayed on average by two or three months. About a third of cases not seen by the Parole Board are also subject to delays, averaging about a month.

A number of steps have been taken to combat the delays. Overtime working and a significant increase in parole unit staffing have been authorised. Our target is for significant reductions in the delays by the end of the year. The Parole Board has helped by increasing the number of panels held and the cases considered at each one; and its membership has also been increased. Parole unit procedures are being streamlined and further consideration is being given to other measures to tackle the problem.

Radio Station (Coventry)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider the decision not to allocate a medium wave frequency to the BBC local radio station due to cover Coventry and Warwickshire; what is the difference in area and quality of reception between the allocated VHF frequency and a medium wave frequency for the proposed station; what estimate he has of the population of Coventry who can receive only medium wave, as opposed to VHF, transmissions; whether the option of split frequency transmission to cater for the city's ethnic population was considered when deciding whether or not to award a medium wave frequency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Paragraph 8.2 of the Broadcasting White Paper (Cm 517, November 1988) confirmed our proposal that radio broadcasting should increasingly take place without unnecessary simulcasting. This will enable more frequencies to be released for additional services, such as community radio stations, thus enhancing listener choice. Recent plans have therefore been made on the basis that both new independent and BBC stations should broadcast on single frequencies. BBC Radio Warwickshire will accordingly broadcast on VHF/FM only.

Details of its coverage are not yet available, since the technical arrangements for the service have not yet been finalised. In comparison with medium wave, the VHF/FM signal is subject to much less interference, especially during hours of darkness, and provides better quality for stereo and data transmission. The BBC has launched an FM listening campaign to make listeners more aware of the benefits of FM broadcasts.

Racial Harassment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what basis boroughs were chosen to be, or excluded from being, targeted in the campaign on racial harassment launched in February.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Metropolitan police's campaign to tackle racial harassment launched in February 1989 was the third part of an initiative which had started with pilots in Newham, Tower Hamlets and Redbridge in the two preceding years. I understand from the commissioner that in the 1989 campaign, 19 London boroughs were targeted; and that they were chosen on the basis of the perceived need for a campaign in the area.

Airports (Policing)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the findings of the working party established to review arrangements for the policing of airports.

Mr. Hurd: The working party on the policing of airports was established, under Home Office chairmanship, as part of the Government response to the report of the fourth session of the Transport Select Committee.

The working party comprised representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland), the Aerodrome Owners Association, the Joint Airports Committee of Local Authorities, BAA plc, Heathrow and Manchester airports, the Department of Transport, the Ministry of Defence, the Scottish Home and Health Department, and Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary. Their task was to examine arrangements for policing airports, including the way costs are met, and to consider whether any changes should be made.

The Transport Committee's inquiry covered the whole field of airport security, currently governed by the Aviation Security Act 1982. Many of its recommendations dealt with the arrangements for checking passengers and baggage which are not direct police responsibilities at airports, and which were not therefore addressed directly by the working party. Part of the Transport Committee's study necessarily focused on the role of the police at airports, in particular the relationship between the functions performed by the police and the national aviation security programme administered by the Department of Transport. The Committee recommended that means be found to employ the undoubted expertise of the police to the best effect in airport security procedures, and that the present system of designation, under the Aviation Security Act, be abolished and replaced with one which allows flexibility of response without imposing uncontrollable financial costs on airport operators. The working party therefore concentrated on these two issues.

The main recommendations of the working party are for a better-informed means of assessing the need for, and nature and level of, policing at an airport; the provision of a suitable forum in which policing issues can be effectively discussed at airports; and a central arbitral system to assist in the resolution of any differences which cannot be resolved at the local airport level.

The working party examined, but rejected, the idea that the first of these matters could be based on mathematical formulae; the nature of, and variation between, airports, as well as the nature of policing itself, make such an approach unworkable. It did, however, conclude that there was some scope for the introduction of more objectivity and consistency in assessing an airport's policing needs. The report contains a list of considerations upon which such assessments should be based and recommends that, using this list as guidance, police and airport managements should jointly draw up an "airport policing profile".

The working party also proposes a more effective formal means by which policing issues can be fully aired at airports by means of small committees comprising representatives only of police and airport managements. These should not be bound by rigid terms of reference but should be able to discuss any airport policing matters including costs and should be able to meet as frequently as necessary at the instigation of either party.

The working party recommends that in the event of unresolvable local disputes between airport authorities and police the professional advisers of the two principal Departments concerned—Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary and the Department of Transport's chief aviation security inspector—should provide the airport policing committee with an indication of the advice they would give to the Secretary of State in the event of a request for designation, de-designation or a determination on policing costs. If agreement still proves impossible either side is left with the option of an appeal to the Secretary of State.

Following the Lockerbie disaster, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and I invited the working party to reconvene to consider whether, in the light of that tragedy, any changes should be made to the proposals or any further recommendations made. After careful discussion, the working party has concluded that the original proposals should stand. The working party was concerned with the relationship between the responsibilities of police and airport managements. It was neither composed nor tasked to assess detailed physical security arrangements, about which the Lockerbie incident raised questions which are being addressed separately by my right hon. Friend.

The working party's proposals are aimed at practical improvements in co-operation between police and airport authorities. They do not require new legislation. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and I commend them to chief officers of police. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will similarly commend them to representatives of the aviation industry.

I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of the working party's report and supplementary note.

Independent Radio

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on his legislative proposals for the allocation and ownership of independent radio licences, and for combating unlicensed broadcasting.

Mr. Hurd: Our proposals for the allocation of independent radio licences were set out in paragraph 8.4 of the White Paper "Broadcasing in the '90s: Competition, Choice and Quality" (Cm. 517, November 1988). For national stations they envisaged allocation by competitive tender, subject to a requirement that each service should provide a diverse programme service calculated to appeal to a variety of tastes and interests and not limited to a single narrow format. We now propose that the form of competitive tender for independent national radio licences should in its main essentials follow that proposed for Channels 3 and 5 in my statement on commercial television on 13 June at columns 710-13.

Independent national and local radio licences will be awarded for periods up to a maximum of eight years. The presumption is that on the expiry of a licence the service will fall to be readvertised; but we propose that the Radio Authority should have discretion not to readvertise a service where it believes that this would not serve to broaden listener choice.

Paragraph 8.4 of the White Paper envisaged that no one would be able to control more than one national licence and more than six local licences. These limits will be capable of variation in subordinate legislation. In order to prevent, for instance, one person from gaining control of the six largest local stations we propose that the rules on concentration of radio ownership should be capable of being supplemented, in subordinate legislation, by reference to the coverage or size of stations. We also propose that there should be power for limits to be set in subordinate legislation on degrees of financial interest not amounting to control.

My noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I are considering a range of measures to strengthen the legislation on unlicensed broadcasting. Among these, we propose to broaden the offence in section 1(1) of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 of using wireless telegraphy apparatus without a licence, and to make it an offence to advertise on, or supply certain goods and services to, an unlicensed broadcasting station. We propose that these offences should be triable either way, and that on indictment the maximum penalties should be two years' imprisonment, or an unlimited fine, or both. We also intend to strengthen present search, seizure and forfeiture powers.

Night Hours Broadcasting

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the proposal in the broadcasting White Paper that the night hours of one BBC channel should be assigned to the ITC.

Mr. Hurd: We have considered carefully the comments we have received on this proposal. We have decided on balance that it would be better to leave the BBC with both sets of night hours in order to enable a faster start to be made with the development of subscription services. The BBC will, therefore, be permitted to retain both sets, on condition that it makes the fullest possible use of them for raising subscription income, consistent with its public service obligations.

When we come to consider the level of the licence fee from April 1991 onwards we will review the use which the BBC is making of the night hours. The level at which the licence fee is set will take account of the BBC's capacity to generate subscription revenue from two sets of night hours.

Liverpool Passport Office

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the industrial dispute at the Liverpool passport office has now been settled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Following meetings between management and unions, a conditional offer has been made to the unions and has been accepted by them. As part of the settlement the unions have undertaken to co-operate over the transfer of work between offices and in special measures to clear the current backlog of passport applications. For its part, management has agreed to an increase of 45 posts on top of the increase of 158 already agreed in the number of permanent staff. This total of 203 on a complement of 1,000 compares with the 381 requested by the unions and will be found by converting an equivalent number of temporary posts. All the new posts are subject to further scrutiny and examination in a full staffing review to be undertaken later this year by the Home Office staff inspectors supported by work measurement and other experts from the Treasury.

Those members of the Liverpool passport office who were on strike have now returned to work. The main task now is to clear the very large backlog of unprocessed passport applications that were sent to the Liverpool passport office. Arrangements are being made for some of this work to be transferred to other passport offices, but it will be many weeks before all the applications that have been received are dealt with. In addition, arrangements are being made to provide free two-year extensions to expired passports submitted by post to other passport offices.

To assist travellers whose applications have been delayed, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has contacted other Governments to see whether, in the special circumstances in which we find ourselves, they would accept expired British passports or (where they do not already do so) British visitor's passports (BVPs). The Bahamas, West Germany, Hong Kong, Israel, Jamaica, Spain, the United States of America and Yugoslavia, have indicated that they will accept expired standard passports for a period up to 30 September 1989. The Bahamas, Barbados, Cyprus, Hong Kong, Jamaica and the Seychelles will accept BVPs for the same period. Travellers with an urgent need to travel in western Europe or one of the other countries for which a BVP is acceptable can obtain a BVP from any main post office in England, Scotland or Wales. BVPs are now available on Mondays to Fridays and on Saturday mornings. Where a standard passport has been applied for in good time and has not been processed, BVP fees will be refunded on application. For countries where a BVP is not acceptable, travellers who have an urgent requirement should call in person at the most convenient passport office, where every effort will be made to ensure that a suitable travel document is provided.

The settlement of this damaging dispute paves the way for the necessary long-term measures to improve this service to the public.

Terrestrial Broadcasting

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the privatisation of the terrestrial broadcasting transmission system in the light of the Price Waterhouse report.

Mr. Hurd: In the White Paper on broadcasting we stated that our objective was to move the terrestrial transmission system progressively into the private sector. The Price Waterhouse report analysed the various ways in which this could be achieved. In the light of that report, we confirm that our intention is to privatise the transmission networks owned and operated by the BBC and the IBA as soon as we are in a position to do so. We believe that a move into the private sector will reinforce the pressures for efficiency, and will enable more intensive use to be made of the valuable transmission infrastructure.

We have considered carefully the different possible options for the structure of a privatised transmission industry. On balance we have decided that the best approach would be to set up two national transmission networks, rather than to restructure the system in the way proposed in the Price Waterhouse report.

The BBC's transmission responsibilities are rooted in its royal charter which lasts until the end of 1996. It has indicated that it does not wish to have these responsibilities transferred to a private transmission operator. We have therefore decided that the BBC should retain its transmission responsibilities, including for the world service, until the expiry of the charter, unless it wishes to divest itself of those responsibilities earlier. The position will be reviewed at that point with a view to privatisation. In the meantime the BBC will be confined to transmitting its own services, and will not be permitted to compete for the transmission of new broadcasting or telecommunications services. We are concerned that the private transmission market should develop in a fair manner; and, while the BBC's transmission operation remains in the public sector, there would be insuperable difficulties in ensuring that the BBC entered this market in a way which would be perceived to be fair to its competitors.

The IBA has welcomed the proposal that its transmission operation should be privatised, and we will be including the necessary provisions in our legislative proposals on broadcasting. We shall be considering further the time scale for privatisation, bearing in mind the possible implications for the ITV contracts. We have taken note of the wide regional variations in the cost of transmission, and of the possible consequences of these variations for the smaller Channel 3 companies. We propose that there should be a uniform tariff for Channel 3 companies based on their share of the total Channel 3 income, taking account of any subscription and sponsorship revenue as well as net advertising revenue. This arrangement would be reviewed following decisions to be taken on the future of the BBC transmission system after 1996.

The private transmission company which takes over the IBA's transmission operation will have a powerful market position and the transmission market is likely to be dominated by a small number of major players for the foreseeable future. We therefore consider that economic as well as technical regulation will be necessary. We propose to amend the Telecommunications Act 1984 to enable this regulation to be carried out by the Director General of Telecommunications. This regulatory framework will be designed to ensure that the transmission market operates fairly, and also that the coverage, quality and reliability of transmission systems is maintained.

DEFENCE

Naval Personnel (Shore Postings)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have occurred and are planned in the proportion of naval seagoing personnel in shore postings.

Mr. Neubert: Since 1980 the proportion of naval seagoing personnel in shore postings has reduced from about 60 per cent. to about 50 per cent. The planned proportion is expected to remain at approximately this level.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes in allowances have been made affecting those naval personnel working away from their families both at sea and on shore postings.

Mr. Neubert: I take it that my hon. Friend's question is in relation to the changes that have occurred as a result of the joint Ministry of Defence-Treasury review of armed forces allowances which was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 9 May 1988, column 2, and which took effect from 1 October 1988.

As a result of the review, the various allowances for which personnel can qualify have been related more closely to the accommodation policies of the services. Because service in a seagoing ship inevitably results in separation from family, the Royal Navy has traditionally operated a policy of flexibility with regard to accompanied service. Personnel could choose whether their families should follow them from place to place on each new appointment or draft, or whether the family should settle in one place while only the husband moved about.

As a result of the review, the Royal Navy's flexible approach has been formalised to the extent that an individual must explicitly declare his option of "family mobility" or "family stability" on the occasion of each new appointment or draft. This will determine eligibility for a range of appropriate allowances. The man who is separated or at sea will be eligible for the following: the longer service at sea bonus when serving in a seagoing ship; separation allowance, if separated by more than 200 miles ashore; and free travel warrants to return home from his place of duty (15 per year if serving in a seagoing ship, 12 if serving ashore plus any additional warrants earned during former sea service). He also receives the benefit of free accommodation on board ship and when living ashore in barracks or in mess.

Sailors (Families)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what impact competitive tendering for repairs has had and is expected to have on sailors' access to their families during periods when ships are undergoing repairs.

Mr. Neubert: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to repairs undertaken away from the port at which the ship is normally based. We have had only one major experience of this so far with HMS Penelope (base port Portsmouth) being repaired at Southampton. It is thus too early to be definitive. A variety of circumstances could exist, and separation from families could be increased, but the following measures are designed to minimise it:

(a) If naval married quarters are available in the area where the ship is being repaired families can, if the repairs are expected to take six months or more, take up residence with the husband at the repair location, thus maintaining family unity.

(b) If the repair is likely to last more than 12 months, personnel would be eligible for assistance to sell or let their existing private property and purchase or rent a new house at the repair location. This, again, would maintain family unity.

(c) In cases where a family move would not be appropriate, personnel are entitled, subject to certain conditions, to 24 free travel warrants per year. In addition, personnel who serve at sea accrue warrant credits of one free travel warrant for every two months' sea service. These warrants could also be used, in addition to the 24 mentioned above, for journeys home during the repair period. In addition, separation allowance may become payable, dependent on the distance between the man's home and the location of the refit.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are being taken to reduce the problems of separation from families in the Royal Navy.

Mr. Neubert: Because of its seagoing commitments, some separation is inevitable in the Royal Navy. However, personnel who opt for "family mobility" are provided with a range of measures to assist in keeping the family together. These include: (a) the provision of naval married quarters in all the main port areas; (b) the introduction of a new home owners "mobility package" which provides for the reimbursement of certain expenses on sale and purchase of a private house, or alternatively for certain expenses incurred in letting or repossessing it; and (c) the payment of removal expenses and disturbance allowance; and the payment of boarding school allowance to provide continuity of education for children in the face of frequent parental moves.

Defence Quality Assurance

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether consultations with the trade unions are now complete regarding the proposed move to Teesside of headquarters and laboratories of the Directorate General of Defence Quality Assurance now at Woolwich and Bromley.

Mr. Sainsbury: Consultations have taken place and I have carefully considered the points made by the trade unions. None of the points was new to me and I can confirm that planning will now proceed with the aim of transferring some 1,500 jobs to Teesside during 1993 to 1995. I am establishing a joint consultative committee which will be a forum for consultations with the trade unions as the work proceeds.

F111 Aircraft

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much expenditure has been incurred to date on design work at RAF Upper Heyford to assess the cost of deploying different types of F111 aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No design work has been undertaken to assess the cost of deploying different types of F111 aircraft at RAF Upper Heyford.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his reply of 13 June to the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) Official Report, column 689, how much expenditure has been incurred to date on design work at RAF Upper Heyford to assess the cost of deploying additional F111 aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No design work has been undertaken to assess the cost of deploying additional F111 aircraft at RAF Upper Heyford.

WE 177 Nuclear Bomb

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his reply of 29 June Official Report, column 531, to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright), whether any agreements have been concluded with (a) the United States Government, (b) Boeing Aerospace, (c) Martin Marietta, (d) British Aerospace and (e) Hunting Engineering regarding the study of procurement options for the possible replacement of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 29 June at column 531.

HMS Southampton

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will make a decision on awarding the contract for the repair and refit of HMS Southampton.

Mr. Sainsbury: Shortly.

ROF, Enfield

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings were held by his Department with subcontractors who worked for the former Royal Ordnance Factory at Enfield, in the 12 months prior to the announcement of its sale to British Aerospace; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 30 June 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him during the Adjournment debate on Friday 23 June at column 676.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the monthly statistics for the latest available four months for employment training for the Training Agency covering the Doncaster area, showing (a) entrants in each monthly period, and the number of cumulative entrants, broken down by sex, (b) the length of time they had been out of work, their ethnic backgrounds and whether or not they had any disabilities, (c) the total number of currently filled places and (d) the number of trainees in each monthly period on project and employer placements.

Mr. Nicholls: Information for entrants to Employment Training in the latest available four months is provided in Table 1. The other information requested on duration of unemployment prior to joining the programme and the ethnic background of entrants is provided in Table 2. There were 5,436 filled places in the Training Agency area including Doncaster at 23 June 1989, the latest date for which information is available. Information for trainees on project and employer placements on the last Friday of each month is provided in Table 3.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to change the full extent normal rule; when these will be implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply from my right hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 16 December 1988 at columns 752-53. We intend to introduce these measures in the autumn.

Employment Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) training managers and (b) training agents have been refused approved status for employment training since its inception in September 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: None. All training agents and training managers are currently working towards full approved status and have until September 1990 to achieve it.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people (a) have refused to participate in employment training and (b) have left employment training before completing the training (i) nationally and (ii) by training agency area.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Tourism

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will notify the (a) House, (b) British Tourist Authority and (c) national boards of his conclusions after studying the report of the review of tourism he initiated in July 1988.

Mr. Fowler: I expect soon to be able to let the House know the outcome of my review of Government support for the tourism industry. I will write to the chairman of the English Tourist Board and the British Tourist Authority as soon as the House has been informed.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

"Nuclear Accidents and the Farmer"

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why his Department's publications office at Alnwick, Northumberland was out of stock of the leaflet entitled "Nuclear Accidents and the Farmer" at the beginning of June; and what is the present position.

Mr. Ryder: A heavy initial demand meant that the Department's publications store was temporarily out of stock of the leaflet at the beginning of June. Following a further reprint, supplies have now been replenished.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why his Department's area offices in Yorkshire and Humberside have not yet received any supplies of his Department's leaflet entitled "Nuclear Accidents and the Farmer"; if he will list by region and location what area offices (a) have this leaflet and (b) do not have this leaflet; and when he expects all his offices will have this in stock.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 10 April, column 365. Stocks were originally held by the Ministry's publications unit at Alnwick and at regional and divisional offices. Following a recent reprint, supplies are being distributed to all area offices.

Potato Stocks

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list by region, the estimated stocks of potatoes for this year's current growing season; what were the comparable figures last year; and what assessment he has made as to whether this year's stock will meet demand;

(2) if he will make a statement as to what reviews and discussions he is having in respect of this year's potato crop in England and Wales due to the lack of rain and a possible consequent potato shortage.

Mr. Ryder: It is too early to make an assessment of the 1989 potato crop. I have asked the Potato Marketing Board to send information on stocks to the hon. Member.

Lead in Food

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he is conducting into lead levels in food produced adjacent to motorways or other main roads.

Mr. Ryder: My Department is not conducting research into lead levels in food produced adjacent to motorways or other main roads. My Department did fund research on this between 1980 and 1983 at the university of Nottingham. This showed that only a small proportion of vegetables grown next to the M1 exceeded statutory lead levels before washing. Washing and removal of outer leaves halves deposited lead levels which means that the vegetables in this study have been below the statutory level once treated for human consumption. My officials will be studying the results of the recent research carried out by Dr. Ward at the university of Surrey.

Torry Research Station

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the projects at the Torry research station in Aberdeen which will be discontinued as a result of the Barnes review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The projects which are to be discontinued are as follows:

Plant design—the development of monitoring and control systems
The design and development of a multipass freezer
Energy utilisation in fish processing
A study of fundamental principles in the design and development of new smoking processes
Development of a machine to produce uncoated formed fillets
Processing machinery—separation of meat from shell fish to improve yield
Microbial spoilage of packaged fish and shell fish with a view to devising and applying methods of extending shelflife
Innovation of fish and shell fish products and relevant process technology
Shell fish processing with a view to more efficient utilisation
Textural modification of recovered flesh
Improved chilling and handling of sea fish and farmed fish to improve yield and quality
Innovation and characterisation of added value products from industrial and waste fish resources and development of relevant new pilot plant processes or existing processes
Improvements in the efficiency of processing fish and smoking
Investigation of chemical/physical methods of reducing the rate of deterioration of bulk-stored fish at sea
Assessment of the requirements for the introduction of freezing-at-sea on small fishing vessels
Study of cultured fish in relation to general quality aspects and to their suitability for processing
The efficient use of recovered fish flesh for human consumption
Applications of electronics and physical sensors in fish processing

Detailed information on these was placed in the Library on 20 February 1989 and steps are now being taken to implement the decisions announced in the reply given on 28 June 1989 to my right hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Buchanan-Smith), c. 466.

Food Inspection

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made regarding EC document 8062/88; and whether he has urged the EC to recognise the role of United Kingdom district councils in the inspection of slaughterhouses and food hygiene duties.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My officials have made it clear in discussion on this proposal that it is premature to consider arrangements for veterinary checks in advance of agreement on more fundamental aspects of the animal health arrangements to apply within the single market.

I am not aware of any proposals which would seek to change the existing role of district councils in slaughterhouse inspections or food law enforcement.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the findings of the Association of District Councils that there is no evidence to suggest that the veterinary presence in export slaughterhouses has contributed to any significant improvement in the protection of public health.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have always maintained that the presence of veterinary surgeons is not essential to guarantee satisfactory standards of hygiene in abattoirs. Veterinary supervision is required if plants are to be approved to export. This is not an additional requirement but a different one. Domestic slaughterhouses rely largely on environmental health officers whose professional status is of the highest order.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is his policy towards placing total reliance on the inspection and certification of meat by veterinarians in other European Community countries as against the practice of inspection of incoming meat consignments by environmental health officers in the United Kingdom;

(2) what assessment he has made of the health implications of placing total reliance on the inspection and certification of meat by veterinarians in other EC countries and of the current practice of inspection of incoming meat consignments by environmental health officers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In accordance with Community rules, enforcement authorities physically inspect only a sample of consignments of meat from other member states. Meat traded between member states must be covered by a certificate signed by an authorised veterinary officer confirming that the Community's strict hygiene rules have been observed. These arrangements work well and in negotiations on the single market I shall seek to ensure that adequate provision for such sample checks is retained.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of European Community directives and regulations on the inspection of meat and meat products in the run-up to the single European market and on the likely changes in terms of staffing and finance that will be required to meet these requirements;

(2) What assessment he has had made of the impact of European Community directives and regulations on monitoring for health purposes of meat and meat products in the run-up to the single European market and on the likely changes in terms of staffing and finance that will be required to meet these requirements.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The arrangements for meat inspection in the single market will depend upon decisions still to be taken by the Council of Ministers and it is not yet possible therefore to estimate the effects on staffing and costs. It is clear, however, that we shall need to move towards a well-understood supervision system in all meat plants and we shall be discussing how this should be achieved with the interests concerned.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of the veterinary presence in export slaughterhouses on the protection of public health;

(2) what assessment he has made of the health implications of the veterinary presence in export slaughterhouses.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Veterinary supervision is required if slaughterhouses are to engage in intra-Community trade or export to third countries. If this requirement was not met our industry would not be able to export meat and meat products. Last year this trade was worth £590 million. I have never accepted, however, that veterinary supervision is essential to guarantee satisfactory standards of hygiene.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what assessment he has made of the consistency of inspections in respect of food and food production in each member state of the European Community; and what steps he will take to ensure that the public of the United Kingdom is protected during the approach to the integrated single European market and after its completion.

Mr. Ryder: No detailed assessment has been made of the consistency of inspections of food and food production in each member state. However, we are aware, from the negotiations on the European Community directive on the official control of foodstuffs, of the different types of inspection systems in operation in other member states. The United Kingdom supported the EC directive on official control, adopted on 14 June 1989, which lays down general principles for food inspection across the Community, including the provision that inspections shall be carried out regularly and where non-compliance is suspected and that they shall cover all stages of the manufacturing and distributive cycle. The directive also provides for the Commission to make recommendations for co-ordinated inspection programmes to ensure a consistent approach. It is regarded as a first step towards the building of mutual confidence between member states in this very important area. Together with other measures envisaged, for example on food hygiene, this should ensure that the public is fully protected. In the meantime, the preamble to the official control directive indicates that there should be no changes to well-tried systems of food inspection; we consider that the United Kingdom system is in that category.

Price Fixing

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his reply to the hon. Member for South Shields of 22 June, Official Report, column 251, if he will list the organisations invited to attend meetings to discuss the European Community price proposals in 1988, but which declined to do so; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 3 July 1989]: Each year a wide range of bodies and individuals submit representations on the Commission's price fixing proposals. These are made not only at meetings, which was the subject of the hon. Member's earlier question, but in writing. Organisations which choose not to attend meetings are on occasions among those who write, but I do not think it would be appropriate to list them.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Business Establishment Grants

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many companies in receipt of a cash grant from his Department to establish business in a particular place have discontinued such business within five years of establishment.

Mr. Newton: Information in the form requested is not available. However, it is possible to provide some figures for companies which have received regional selective assistance. Since the introduction of the current guidelines for RSA in November 1984, 24 companies which received RSA towards establishing new businesses in England are known to have discontinued such business. These companies received some £659,000. Recovery of grant is pursued in appropriate cases. By comparison, over 600 projects in total have received RSA to establish businesses in England over the same period with associated grant payments to date of £43·6 million.

Home Accidents (Deaths)

Sir David Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest estimate of the number of British people who die each year from accidents in their homes; and what are the Government's plans to reduce that number.

Mr. Forth: The latest available figure for deaths in the United Kingdom is for 1987, in which year there were 4,919 deaths from accidents in the home. There is a comprehensive legal framework which deals with the safety of consumer goods primarily, enforced by local authority trading standards departments, including the general safety requirement in the Consumer Protection Act 1987 which requires consumer goods to be reasonably safe, and specific regulations dealing with particular products or problems. This is complemented by safety awareness campaigns to alert people to the dangers they face every day in their own houses. The Government seek to co-operate with non-governmental safety organisations whose aim is to promote safety awareness and safe products.

Palatine Graphic Arts Company

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all financial assistance, including that from the European Community, approved by his Department for Palatine Graphic Arts Company Limited, Liverpool, over the past five years, giving the name and amount of the grant or assistance, the date of approval and payment, the purpose of each and the terms and conditions imposed; and if he will take steps to ensure those terms have been and are being met in full.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 3 July 1989]: During the past five years my Department has made the following grants to Palatine Graphic Arts Co. Ltd., Liverpool:

Regional Development Grant I
Purpose of grant—towards the provision of approved plant and machinery and building works

Date paid	Amount of grant £
6 November 1984	2,967
5 December 1984	7,697
11 January 1985	8,461
5 July 1985	227
19 July 1985	359
25 October 1985	3,572
15 November 1985	8,572
26 January 1986	22,165
	87,229

Regional development grant I was not dependent on the creation of jobs, but disposal of grant-aided assets within the conditions period must be notified and could result in the repayment of grant.

Regional Development Grant II

Purpose of grant	Amount approved £	Date approved	Amount paid £	Date paid
Provision of Chemotinex Etching bath, sanding machine moulding press and Chromalin processor and laminator. The creation of eight jobs formed part of this project[1]	33,000	15 December 1986	21,897	17 March 1987
Provision of exposure unit	1,688	13 July 1987	1,688	5 August 1987
Provision of stop and repeat machine	3,255	14 July 1987	3,255	5 August 1987
Provision of copper, etching bath[2]	6,356	23 March 1988	6,471	23 September 1988
Provision of scitex electronic scanning and page composition system	75,000	15 September 1988	75,000	24 February 1989

[1] The offer was based on the proposed creation of 11 jobs at £3,000 each, but in the event, only eight new jobs were created. As the total capital grant for the project, which included £8,250 payable to a leasing company, was the greater of the two, the grant was based on capital expenditure. However, the creation of the eight jobs formed part of the project.

[2] The discrepancy is due to the fact that the application was based on estimated costs and prices had increased at the time the claim was submitted.

Regional development grant II is made under standard conditions, including the obligation to notify my Department if jobs or assets are disposed of within the condition period and to repay such grant as may be required if the conditions are breached. Projects are subject to inspection.

Regional Selective Assistance

30 October 1984
Amount Offered	100,000
Amount Paid	6,461

The purpose of this grant was to assist with the purchase of new equipment which would provide time savings in artwork and make-up. The difference between the cost of the equipment and the amount of regional selective assistance paid was made up by regional development grant and the balance of RSA was not claimed.

Total grants paid were £212, 989.

My Department has not approved the payment of any grants involving EC funding and I am not aware of any EC funds being provided to the company from any other sources.

The relevant projects at this company have been inspected, most recently in August 1988 and again in June 1989, and I am satisfied that the terms and conditions under which grant assistance has been given are at present being met.

I understand that six of the eight jobs created under the grant approved on 15 December 1986 are at present vacant but that efforts to refill them are in hand. Under the terms and conditions under which grant is paid, the company is expected to refill such posts within two months—or longer at the Department's discretion—and a proportion of the grant can be reclaimed if this is not done.

Shipbuilding (Redundancies)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total number of redundancies in the shipbuilding and shiprepair industries in Plymouth during the period 1 January 1979 to 31 December 1988.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 30 June 1989]: The information is not available.

Waste Paper

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received suggesting he should impose restrictions on the subsidised imports of waste paper from the United States of America and Canada.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 3 July 1989]: I have received a small number of letters expressing concern at the level of imports of de-inking grades of waste paper from the USA and Canada. I am not aware of any evidence to suggest that the current low levels of imports are having an adverse effect on the United Kingdom waste paper market, but I will continue to ensure that the situation is carefully monitored.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps are being taken to avert the expected shortfall in supply of waste paper, expected to be at its peak in 1993; what response has already been forthcoming from local authorities, paper merchants, newsprint producers and voluntary groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 3 July 1989]: A shortfall in the supply of de-inking grades of waste paper used as a raw material in the manufacture in the United Kingdom of newsprint is expected to build up over the next few years, possibly peaking in 1993, as additional manufacturing capacity comes on stream. Accordingly, my Department has organised a national series of 11 seminars to bring to the attention of local authorities and voluntary organisations the increasing number of opportunities which will become available to them to assist over the next three to four years in the collection of more newsprint grade waste paper. This programme of seminars is still under way. So far the response has been encouraging.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Attorney-General how many immigration appeals are outstanding in Scotland.

The Attorney-General: On 30 June 1989, 33 Scottish immigration appeals were awaiting listing, In a further 183 appeals, the papers have been sent to the parties and responses are awaited from the appellants' representatives.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any proposals to improve the waiting time for immigration appeals in Scotland.

The Attorney-General: Responsibility for the administration of the immigration appellate authorities rests with the Lord Chancellor. Immigration appeals that are to be heard in Scotland are processed by the Leeds office of the IAA. As soon as case papers are received at Leeds they are copied to the parties. Thereafter the time taken for cases to come on for hearing depends on the parties, rather than the IAA. Once the parties indicate that they are ready to proceed, cases are listed for hearing within six to eight weeks, which is considered a reasonable time. Nevertheless, the Lord Chancellor's Department and the IAA will continue to monitor the number of Scottish cases sent to the parties or their representatives in the United Kingdom for which hearings have not been requested.

Visas

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Attorney-General what change there has been in the number of appeals from visitors refused entry clearance since the introduction of visa requirements for nationals of certain Commonwealth countries.

The Attorney-General: The numbers of appeals against refusal of entry clearance for temporary purposes, including visitors' and students' entry clearances in the last three years were as follows:

	Numbers
1986	1,522
1987	2,801
1988	6,138

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Community Charge

11. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will increase the level of students' grants to enable them to pay the poll tax.

Mr. Jackson: The rates of student grant for 1989-90 have already been announced. Students' discounted liability for the community charge was one of the factors considered in setting those rates.

National Curriculum

13. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has had any meeting during the last six months with representatives of science teachers to discuss the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and I have met science teachers informally on several occasions and discussed various topics. No ministerial meetings have been arranged with their representatives specifically on the national curriculum.

29. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to publish translations of the national curriculum attainment targets and programmes of study in mathematics, science and English.

43. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to publish translations of the national curriculum attainment targets and programmes of study in mathematics, science and English.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has made available the mathematics and science national curriculum documents in Welsh. There are no plans to publish translations of these or the documents for English into any other languages. A short leaflet for parents on the national curriculum generally will however be published in ethnic minority community languages this autumn.

32. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress being made in implementing the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: Preparations continue to advance. My right hon. Friend has recently published his proposals for design and technology for all four key stages and English for key stages 2 to 4. A statutory order for English key stage 1 was made on 31 May.

Teacher Appraisal

14. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made on agreeing a system of teacher appraisal and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The national steering group overseeing the current pilot projects, on which the local authority and teacher associations are represented, will be submitting recommendations to my right hon. Friend next month for a national framework for teacher appraisal. In the light of these recommendations my right hon. Friend intends to make regulations in the autumn under section 49 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, requiring LEAs to implement schemes of appraisal covering all their teachers over the next few years.

Teachers (Resignations)

15. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the number of teachers who had submitted their resignations by 31 May.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the level of resignations from teachers submitted by 31 May.

Mr. Butcher: The latest available data are for the year ending March 1987. A total of 28,960 teachers left full-time service in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector in England. Of these, 1,760 transferred to full-time service elsewhere in the maintained sector in England and Wales and 2,900 to part-time service in the maintained sector. A further 8,500 retired and 450 died.

Student Loans

16. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what the cost of introducing top-up loans for students will be over the next 15 years assuming a yearly average inflation rate of 8 per cent.

Mr. Jackson: The Government do not expect inflation to remain at that level. The table shows the costs and savings associated with the introduction of top-up loans, on the hypothetical basis of 8 per cent. inflation annually from 1990. It is otherwise on the same basis and in the same format as the figures set out in annex E of Cm 520.

18. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the costs of the proposed student loan scheme in respect of administration, defaults and interest subsidy.

48. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the costs of the proposed student loan scheme in respect of administration, defaults and interest subsidy.

62. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the costs of the proposed student loan scheme in respect of administration, defaults and interest subsidy.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Members to my answer of 26 June to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) at columns 290-91.

26. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received further representations on student loans following his statement of 19 June, Official Report, columns 21-33.

Mr. Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) earlier today.

39. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to make public the participants in, and detailed proposals of, the arrangements for administering top-up loans for students.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend will announce further details of the arrangements for administering top-up loans in due course.

44. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has made of the cost of administering in its first year his student loan scheme.

Mr. Jackson: The preparatory work mentioned in my right hon. Friend's statement on 19 June, Official Report, columns 21-22 indicates administrative costs, excluding start-up costs, of between £8·5 million and £11·5 million in the first year in which top-up loans are available.

58. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the representations he has received in relation to the effect of the proposed student loans scheme on higher education in Scotland.

Mr. Jackson: We have considered carefully the representations we have received, particularly in relation to the longer Scottish courses. We have concluded that a loan facility for each year of a course is the right approach. Many students opt for higher education in Scotland rather than the shorter English degree, and we have no doubt that that will continue to be the case.

59. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement regarding the likely effect of top-up loans on access to higher education.

Mr. Jackson: The Government's education policies are designed to increase educational attainment at all levels, and to increase access to higher education. Top-up loans will offer students an additional source of funds while they are studying, and combined with the effect of the Government's other policies will enable there to be increased participation in higher education in the future.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how the proposed company for the administration of private sector loans to students is to be publicly accountable.

Mr. Jackson: The Department will have a permanent directorship on the board of the company, and we shall take such other steps as may be appropriate to ensure accountability.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make available a copy of the Price Waterhouse study of his proposed student top-up loans scheme.

Mr. Jackson: The document was commissioned by the Committee of London and Scottish Bankers as an initial feasibility study. I hope to place copies of the report in the Library shortly.

School Discipline

17. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the implementation of the recommendations of the Elton report on school discipline.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has announced a range of measures in response to the Elton report. These include two planned education support grant activities, to tackle truancy and to address the problem of difficult pupils. In each case expenditure of up to £2·5 million will be supported in 1990-91. In addition, we are proposing that the management of pupil behaviour should be a national priority area within the local education authority training grants scheme for 1990-91, with grant to support £1·7 million of expenditure.

Higher Education (Students)

19. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase access for students to higher education.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has consistently made clear the Government's commitment to increasing participation in higher education. Our school reforms are designed to equip more pupils with the qualifications and motivation to enter higher education. We also want to widen access for those who do not hold traditional entry qualifications or are currently under-represented in higher education. Our objective, without sacrificing quality, is to promote a more flexible and more accessible system of higher education.

21. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students were in higher education at the beginning of the academic years 1978-79 and 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The available information is as follows:

Students in higher education: Great Britain

	Thousands
1987-88	968

Data for 1988-89 are not yet available, but the figure is expected to be in the range 980,000 to 1 million.

Conductive Education

20. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for the future of conductive education in this country.

Mr. Butcher: Conductive education in Hungary is closely linked to the Hungarian system of education. It is, therefore, important for the approach to be tried out in the context of our education system. For that reason we are funding the evaluation of the experimental conductive education project in Birmingham. In time we would like to see conductive education added to the range of options available to disabled children in this country.

65. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he or officials from his Department last visited the conductive education centres in (a) Birmingham and (b) Budapest, Hungary.

Mr. Butcher: Members of Her Majesty's inspectorate, officials from the Department and the Department's senior medical adviser visited the Birmingham institute last November. A member of Her Majesty's inspectorate and an official from the Department will be visiting the institute in September. The Department's senior medical adviser visited the Peto institute in May 1988.

Teacher Shortages

22. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the measures he is taking to reduce teacher shortages.

25. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the measures he is taking to reduce teacher shortages.

56. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on teacher shortages.

61. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the measures to reduce teacher shortages.

Mr. Butcher: Our action programme to combat teacher shortages was launched three years ago at a cost so far of £50 million. The programme includes a £1,300 bursary for trainee teachers in maths, physics, CDT and, from this September, in chemistry; an energetic teacher recruitment publicity campaign spearheaded by the teaching as a career unit; in-service training for under-qualified teachers and new courses of initial teacher training. From next April, under the education support grant programme, we shall be supporting expenditure of up to £2 million on local measures to boost the recruitment of former teachers and mature entrants to teaching.

34. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the measures he is taking to reduce teacher shortages in London and the south-east.

63. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the measures he is taking to reduce teacher shortages in London and the south-east.

Mrs. Rumbold: Our action programme to combat teacher shortages has cost some £50 million over the last three years. Many of the measures have been targeted specifically at tackling the problems in London and the south-east. That action programme is continuing and will be reinforced as necessary. We have recently announced that the education support grant programme for 1990-91 will include support for up to £2 million on measures to boost the recruitment of mature entrants and teachers returning to the profession. I would expect many of the local authorities in London and the south-east to bid for inclusion within this programme.

Grant-maintained Schools

23. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the latest figures for the number of schools requesting grant-maintained status.

37. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement indicating the number of schools which have opted for grant-maintained status and the number of schools which are considering seeking grant-maintained status.

Mrs. Rumbold: To date, parents of pupils at 47 schools have voted to apply for grant-maintained status, and my right hon. Friend has approved 20 formal applications. I expect a good many more to follow.

Teachers (Local Pay Agreements)

24. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next intends to meet the teaching unions to discuss the introduction of localised pay agreements.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Howells) and for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery).

Commission for Racial Equality

27. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met with representatives of the Commission for Racial Equality; and what was discussed.

Mr. Butcher: My hon. Friend the Minister of State last met representatives of the Commission for Racial Equality on 14 June 1988. They discussed aspects of the Education Reform Bill and the commission's proposals for a code of practice for the elimination of racial discrimination in education.

School Activities (Charges)

28. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the implementation of the legislation regarding charging for activities by schools.

35. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the implementation of the legislation regarding charging for activities by schools.

36. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has received from local authorities about difficulties arising from the new provisions relating to charging for school expeditions.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the working of regulations relating to charges for school trips.

54. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the implementation of the legislation regarding charging for activities by schools.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on the subject of charging for school activities. He has invited the local authorities and others to assist in monitoring the impact of the new arrangements. The legislation was drafted following consultation with the education service, and reflects the concern of respondents to confirm the principle of free education. We believe that it provides a sound framework for the continuation of a wide range of school activities, provided these are valued by parents as a worthwhile part of their children's education.

Institute of Horticultural Research

30. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next proposes to visit the Institute of Horticultural Research, Wellesbourne, at East Malling, Kent.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to do so.

School Libraries

31. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce an educational support grant for both primary and secondary school libraries.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend's proposed education support grant programme for 1990-91 which was announced in May does not include a specific activity related to school libraries. He will, however, consider the inclusion of such an activity in a future programme.

Postgraduate Research

33. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the subsistence allowance paid by research councils to postgraduate research students.

Mr. Jackson: The principal rates of postgraduate maintenance grant paid by the research councils in the academic year 1988-89 and to be paid in 1989-90 are as follows:

	1988-89 £	1989-90 £
a. Students living away from home and attending an establishment in London	3,630	3,970
b. Students living away from home and attending an establishment outside London	2,975	3,125
c. Students living in the parental home	2,160	2,270

The Medical Research Council and the Agricultural and Food Research Council have decided to supplement maintenance grants to postgraduate students supported by them by an average of £500 per student with effect from 1989-90. Research students working on MRC's programme of AIDS research will receive a further supplement of £500.

All research councils make additional payments to disabled and older students and to those with dependants. They also pay approved fees and expenses for daily and end-of-term travel, fieldwork and conference attendance.

London Nautical School

38. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that the London nautical school in the London borough of Southwark continues to be available as a choice to parents throughout London for their children's education.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend on 30 June approved the application for grant-maintained status from the London nautical school, to take effect from 1 April 1990.

Nursery Schools

40. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to increase the funding for local education authority run nursery school places.

Mrs. Rumbold: Our plans for the current financial year allow for a continuation of the steady expansion of provision for the under-fives which has marked the last decade. Provision for local education authorities' spending on education in 1990-91 is still to be determined.

Biological Sciences (Research Assistants)

41. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the proportion of post-doctoral research assistants in biological sciences in the United Kingdom who are not British Nationals, and the availability of post-doctoral staff likely to remain in research careers in Britain.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not held centrally.

Primary Curriculum

42. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has received from the National Curriculum Council about the primary curriculum.

50. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has received from the National Curriculum Council about mixed ability classes in primary schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: At my right hon. Friend's request, the National Curriculum Council has been considering the framework for the primary curriculum. The council published non-statutory guidance on 30 June and copies have been sent to all maintained schools, local education authorities and others. The organisation of classes is a matter for local discretion. The council's guidance explains that there is a variety of ways in which pupils may be grouped, depending on the circumstances in each case.

Brain Drain

45. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a comprehensive evaluation of the effects of the brain drain on the quality of research in British universities.

Mr. Jackson: My reply of 17 February to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) at column 417, showed that, over the last eight years, there has been a net inflow of academic staff to British universities. The Government recognise that concern has been expressed about the academic quality of those leaving the United Kingdom, but believe that it is for the universities themselves to be more rigorous in monitoring the flows, and to use the more flexible arrangements for academic pay now in place to help forestall and counteract them as necessary.

Universities (Research Contracts)

46. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of university income now comes from research contracts; and what was the comparable figure 10 years ago.

Mr. Jackson: Comparable information is not available over the period requested. However, between the academic years 1981-82 and 1987-88, the proportion of universities' total recurrent income derived from research grants and contracts rose from 12·9 to 19·6 per cent.

Secondary Education

47. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will detail the advantages which a genuine choice in secondary education brings.

Mr. Butcher: Greater parental choice encourages competition between schools and allows parents to influence decisions which determine the quality of education. I believe that parents have a legitimate interest which they should be trusted to express and that competition encourages good schools to do even better and poorer schools to raise their sights.

Teachers (Southend)

49. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress is being made in securing the teachers required for secondary and junior schools in the Southend-on-Sea area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Responsibility for securing teachers for maintained schools rests with the local education authority which needs to take appropriate recruitment measures. Our action programme to combat teacher shortages, which has cost £50 million over the last three years, is designed to help authorities to that end.

LEAs (Training Grants)

51. Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the financial support available to local education authorities through the local education authority training grants scheme.

57. Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the financial support available to local education authorities through the local education authority training grants scheme.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) earlier today.

Gateshead CTC

52. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the target number of pupils for the proposed Gateshead city technology college.

Mr. Butcher: The proposed Gateshead city technology college is planning for an eventual enrolment of 900 pupils.

Teachers (European Community)

53. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department is taking any steps to recruit teachers from other EC member states.

Mr. Butcher: On 21 December 1988 the Council of Ministers of the European Communities adopted a directive that will enable a range of professionals, including teachers, to have their professional qualifications recognised for the purposes of practice in member states other than their own. The directive must be implemented by 1991. My right hon. Friend proposes to make regulations according the benefits of the directive to members of the teaching profession qualified in other member states from September this year. This should assist LEAs in their recruitment of teachers from other member states.

The Department is also supporting a project at the university of York which is recruiting and training teachers from France and Germany.

City Technology Colleges

60. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on progress to date in respect of city technology colleges.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 6 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) at column 10.

London Docklands

64. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to improve the provision of primary school places arising out of developments in the London docklands.

Mrs. Rumbold: Developments in the London docklands are increasing the demand for primary school places. The provision of those places is a matter for the London borough of Newham, the Inner London education authority and, from 1 April 1990, the boroughs of Southwark and Tower Hamlets. My right hon. Friend, in determining annual capital guidelines, will continue to give a high priority to plans for additional school places from these and other local education authorities.

River Pollution

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to increase funding for research into pollution of the river ecosystem before privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend will as usual consider expenditure on all areas of scientific research sponsored by this Department later this year, after studying advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils. I understand that my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment is discussing, with the water industry and the National Rivers Authority advisory committee, future research arrangements in the water sector.

Natural Environment Research Council

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he will make it his policy to give the Natural Environment Research Council the necessary funds to develop work on environmental microbiology;

(2) whether he will make it his policy to give the Natural Environment Research Council the necessary funds to develop work into the risks and opportunities of modifying natural micro-organisms.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend will as usual consider expenditure on all areas of scientific research sponsored by this Department later this year, after studying advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether, in transferring funds for scientific research from universities to research councils, he will make it his policy to give the Natural Environment Research Council the necessary funds to develop work in the interactions of the land and atmosphere;

(2) whether, in transferring funds for scientific research to research counils, he will make it his policy to give the Natural Environment Research Council the necessary funds to develop work in atmospheric sciences.

Mr. Jackson: The planned transfer of funds from the Universities Funding Council to the research councils, recently announced by my right hon. Friend, corresponds to a change in the balance of funding responsibilities for university research projects sponsored by research councils. It is not intended that this will lead to any change in the total funding provided for university research through the two sides of the dual support system, nor to any change in the research council's scientific priorities.

Licensed Teachers

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what limit he is placing on the percentage of licensed teachers to be allowed on the staff of any one school.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has not set any predetermined limits. This will in each case be a matter for the school and the LEA concerned.

Local Management of Schools

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the implications of the local management scheme on staffing levels of the education departments in local authorities.

Mrs. Rumbold: As more decision-making is delegated to schools there should certainly be scope for economies in LEAs' central administration costs, but authorities will have a continuing strategic role under local management and will be able to hold back resources for key central services. Each authority will determine its own staffing needs for these.

ENVIRONMENT

Football Membership Scheme

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation took place with the football clubs, the Football League, the Football Association and the Football Supporters Association over the structure, membership and powers of the Football Membership Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The role of the Football Membership Authority was considered by the working party which I chaired last summer on the national membership scheme and which included representatives of the Football Association and the Football League. I have had discussions with the football authorities about their wish to form the FMA. I have also had discussions about the FMA with the Football Supporters Association and the National Federation of Football Supporters Clubs.

Water

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment with reference to his announcement of charges to be introduced through a new clause in the Water Bill, how the figure of £800 per dwelling for new water and sewerage infrastructure and services was calculated; how soon he will be able to make more accurate figures available; and how these charges will vary across the United Kingdom.

Mr. Howard: The figure was an estimate of the average cost per new connection of investment in additional water supply and sewerage capacity, excluding infrastructure which could be requisitioned under clause 40 or clause 70 of the Water Bill (as amended by the House of Lords). Individual limits for water authorities will be included in their instruments of appointment published in August, and it is intended to give provisional figures for statutory water companies at the same stage with firm limits following in the autumn.

Waste Disposal

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available in the Library the responses so far to the Green Paper on the role and functions of waste disposal authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We will shortly deposit in the Library copies of all responses so far received, where the authors have given permission so to do. I will write to the hon. Member at that time.

Nature Reserves

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those nature reserves assisted by grant from the Nature Conservancy Council, where it has been made a condition of grant that the shooting of birds or other creatures will continue.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is not available in the form requested and could be collected only at disproportionate cost. In considering land purchase proposals whether for themselves or by grant aid to NGO's the Nature Conservancy Council will normally expect the new owners to allow the traditional rights or uses of the land to continue and to alter the level or practice of these activities only when they are in conflict with the interests of conservation.

Reconnection Costs

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to amend section 33 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976 in order that local authorities can recover costs of reconnection of supplies of gas and electricity incurred in paying arrears from landlords who then sell the house to evade debts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. I refer the hon. Member to amendment No. 158, passed at Report stage of the Local Government and Housing Bill on 14 June at column 1090.

Housing in Multiple Occupancy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department plans to simplify the powers and procedures referred to in the consultation paper on housing in multiple occupancy published last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: We shall be introducing amendments on a number of matters referred to in the consultation paper.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the proposed housing in multiple occupancy fitness standard referred to in Standing Committee on the Local Government and Housing Bill will include comprehensive fire safety provision such as means of detection and warning systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: We propose that the fitness standard should include means of escape from fire and fire prevention measures.

Baton Twirling

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received seeking the classification of baton twirling as a sport.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received no such representations. The recognition of a sport is a matter for the Sports Council to consider.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what appointments have recently been made to the Nature Conservancy Council; what relevant experience these people have that qualifies them for membership; whether he has received any representations concerning the appointments from pressure groups or other interested bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Five new members of the Nature Conservancy Council were appointed with effect from 1 April 1989—the Earl of Dalkeith, Dr. Bill Mutch, Earl Peel, Mr. Lindsay Waddell and Mr. William Wilder. They have a range of relevant qualifications and experience. More details are given in the press release issued by my noble Friend, the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside on 29 March 1989, a copy of which I have sent to the hon. Member.

My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has received a small number of letters commenting on the recent appointments. Members are appointed for the personal contribution that they can bring to the work of the council.

Countryside (Access)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those individual and organisations who have been lobbying him and other Ministers in his Department about common land footpaths, and access to the countryside during the last two months.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A large number of representations have been received during the last two months, covering a wide range of views on access issues. They have arisen primarily from the Ramblers' Association's footpaths appeal, the Countryside Commission's "Enjoying the Countryside" initiative, the Government's proposals for privatising the water industry and for legislation in the Rubinstein case, and the question of future access to upland commons. Also, on 7 June, I met the hon. Member for a useful discussion of current concerns on these matters.

Pollution (North Sea)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies the North sea task force is undertaking to evaluate the impact of pollutants on marine mammals and seabirds; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The role of the North sea task force is principally to co-ordinate and assess the marine environmental research and monitoring carried out by member states and to identify gaps in knowledge. It is for member states to give effect to task force priorities and objectives and in the United Kingdom, this falls to the research programmes of relevant Departments, and other agencies such as the Natural Environment Research Council (NERC), the Nature Conservancy Council (NCC) and universities. In the case of marine mammals, studies are currently under way sponsored by the Department of the Environment, with assistance from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, on the impact of contaminants on seals. Similar work on cetaceans is under consideration and studies of contaminant effects on sea birds are carried out by NERC and sponsored by NCC.

Rhinoceros and Ivory Products

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many licences have been issued under the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild flora and fauna for the importation of rhinoceros products for each of the last five years for which records are available;

(2) how many licences have been issued under the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild flora and fauna for the importation of ivory or ivory products for each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Drinking Water

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of which standards set in the European Community drinking water directive are regularly exceeded by water suppliers in England which have not been granted derogations.

Mr. Howard: The standard for nitrates in the EC drinking water directive is regularly exceeded in some water supplies in England. Remedial programmes are in hand to ensure compliance as quickly as possible taking account of practicalities.

The pesticides standard in the EC directive is also exceeded in some water supplies. Current medical advice is that pesticide levels detected do not constitute a risk to health.

Rose Theatre

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sums in archaeological fees have been received by the museum of London for work done at the site of the Rose theatre.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 30 June 1989]: The fees paid to the Museum of London for work on the Rose theatre are a matter for English Heritage and Imry Merchant Developers plc.

British Steel, Redcar

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on dust emissions from British Steel, Redcar.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 3 July 1989]: Control of emissions to atmosphere from British Steel, Redcar including dust are the responsibility of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. Standards are set and are currently being met. There have been a number of complaints about dust arising from stockpiles particularly in high wind conditions. Work is in hand to minimise such occurrences.

Sewage Discharges (North-West)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the precise locations of each application made for derogation of sewage discharges in the north-west; if he will list also any other derogation currently in force in the north-west; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will state for each sewage derogation site currently approved or under consideration by his Department in the north-west (a) what improvement programmes for effluent at each location has been submitted, (b) what are the commencement and finishing dates for such improvement programmes and (c) what are the target levels for achievement of the improvement of effluent at the point of discharge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 30 June 1989]: I announced on 7 December 1988 at column 199, an accelerated capital investment programme of about £1 billion to bring sub-standard sewage treatment works into compliance with their discharge consents. Water authorities may apply for time-limited discharge consents to regularise the present discharge whilst these improvements are carried out.

A list of the applications made for time-limited consents where improvements are planned has been placed in the Library. Details of these applications are on the register maintained by each water authority and are available for public inspection. The applications have also been advertised by the authorities concerned.

In some cases improvements have already commenced and in others will commence shortly. In general, I expect the improvements to be completed, by March 1992, but in some cases because of the scale of design and construction work which is necessary, works will be completed as soon as practically possible thereafter.

The time-limited consents will not permit deterioration in the current performance of these works and consent conditions no less stringent than those which currently apply will be reintroduced once the work is complete. The programme is expected to produce significant improvements in river quality both in the north-west and more generally.

Details of all discharge consents, including any derogations currently in force, are available on the authority's public register.

Property Revaluation

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, column 347, he will state (a) whether draft valuation lists deposited with charging authorities will be open to public inspection, and (b) what steps he will take to advise non-domestic ratepayers to ascertain the proposed new rateable values of their property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The draft rating lists which the valuation office is to deposit with charging authorities will be open to public inspection. Non-domestic ratepayers might be well advised to check their proposed rateable values, though they should of course bear in mind that their 1990-91 rate bill will also be affected by the introduction of a uniform poundage and, in many cases, by the transitional arrangements for phasing in the new system.

Community Charge

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the estimated community charge, assuming the grant regime and expenditure current at the time, payable in each of the Somerset districts for the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90; and what estimate he has for 1990-91 assuming no changes in grant regime or spending plans.

Mr. Gummer: Illustrative 1988-89 community charges were placed in the Library on 23 June 1988. These assumed that the total grant available was the same as with rates. Illustrative 1989-90 figures will be published in due course. The 1988-89 community charges, disregarding the effects of the transitional safety nets, are as follows:

Mendip	209
Sedgemoor	222
Taunton Deane	211
West Somerset	214
South Somerset	214

NORTHERN IRELAND

NIE (Privatisation)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to appoint consultants to advise on the privatisation of the Northern Ireland Electricity.

Mr. Viggers: Steps are being taken at present to recruit a financial adviser. Consultants in other disciplines will be appointed as they are required.

Payments for Debt

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the total deductions made from (a) invalidity benefit, (b) child benefit, (c) widow's benefit, (d) supplementary benefit, (e) unemployment benefit, (f) sickness benefit and (g) retirement pensions in each year from 1979 to 1989 under the Payment for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1971.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 20 June 1989]: The information requested for the year 1989-90 is estimated as follows:

Financial year 1989-90	£'s
Income support	245,280·97
Child benefit	6,773·19
Unemployment benefit	6,553·67

Financial year 1989-90	£'s
Sickness benefit	991·33
Invalidity benefit	46,862·64
Retirement benefit	29,805·48
Widow's benefit	14,660·93
Severe disablement allowance (effective from April 1988)	94·47

For earlier years I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 25 October 1988 at column 137.

The figures are not however directly comparable with the earlier figures because the effect from April 1988 the major proportion of deductions from benefits against arrears of rent, rates, electricity and gas charges are made under the provisions of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations (NI) 1987. The figures relate only to deductions, which have been made in 1988-89 under the Payment for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (NI) 1971. The interim information given for 1988-89 in the answer on 25 October 1988 was compiled on the basis used in the years up to and including 1987-88 as the data had not at that stage been refined.

SCOTLAND

Timber

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he can give details of the total value of Scottish timber sold in the last five years; and what was the value of timber products sold to English-based customers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total value, delivered at mill, of the timber harvested from Scottish forests during the five years to 31 March 1988 is estimated to be over £300 million at current prices. Some of this will have been delivered to English mills.

It is estimated that over the same period Scottish manufacturers sold timber products worth about £7,000 million at current prices, made from both home-grown and imported timber. It is not known how much of this was sold to English-based customers.

EDRP Inquiry

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will make a statement on the outcome of the European demonstration reprocessing plant inquiry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is still considering the report of the public local inquiry into the proposed development and he is not yet in a position to predict a date for the announcement of his decision.

Health Boards

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much money the Scottish Home and Health Department indicated it expected each health board to commit to support finance purposes in each year since 1985-86;

(2) how much was spent by each Scottish health board for support finance purposes in each year since 1985-86.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is given in the table:

General Practitioners (Disciplinary Measures)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the details of Scottish general practitioners who, in the last 10 years, have been in breach of their services and conditions and who have been subjected to disciplinary measures; and if he will list where they were in practice at the time and where they are in practice today.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 June 1989]: Complaints about practitioners who are in contract with health boards to provide general medical or dental services are dealt with through the service committee procedures set out in the National Health Service (Service Committee and Tribunal) (Scotland) Regulations 1974. Service committee procedures are not disciplinary measures as such, but provide for the investigation of complaints that practitioners may have breached the terms of service of their contract. These complaints cover a wide variety of cases, ranging from breaches which are of a minor or vicarious nature to significant failures by practitioners to comply with their terms of service.

Since 1 January 1979, 98 general medical practitioners and 65 general dental practitioners in Scotland have been found to be in breach of their terms of service under the service committee procedures.

It is not the normal practice to publish information about individual cases.

Public Transport Accidents

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of notified accidents in each mode of public transport for each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 June 1989]: The available information on notified accidents is given in the following table. Casualty figures are also provided. The definitions of notified accidents differ by mode of transport, and footnotes describe the coverage.

	Bus/coach	Taxi	Rail	Glasgow Underground	Ferry services	Air
(a) Number of accidents
1984	1,565	627	59	n/a	37	7
1985	1,667	614	72	n/a	43	4
1986	1,508	711	53	49	33	7
1987	1,506	674	76	55	42	6
1988	1,624	670	104	52	24	3
(b) Number of casualties
1984	2,047	833	111	n/a	37	1
1985	2,274	797	69	n/a	43	0
1986	2,065	922	54	49	33	64
1987	2,047	858	40	55	42	0
1988	2,119	930	23	52	24	270

Notes:

Casualties: Include all fatal, serious and slight injury casualties.

Bus and Taxi: Only injury accidents are notified centrally. Casualty numbers include casualties in other vehicles and pedestrians.

Rail: Includes both passenger and normal freight services and covers all notified accidents, including non-injury accidents. 1984 includes the Polmont disaster.

Glasgow Underground: Includes all accidents on the premises as well as trains.

Air: All notified accidents over Scottish airspace and includes operations to gas and oil installations. 1986 includes the Chinook helicopter disaster and 1988 the Lockerbie air disaster.

Contracts (Tendering)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the costs of preparing an in-house bid for multi-service contracts either wholly or individually, within the health boards in Scotland, are assessed; and what advantage these in-house tenders have over that of a private contractor bidding for the same contract.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 July 1989]: No assessment of the cost of preparing an in-house bid is made for the purposes of comparing tenders which, whether in or out-house, are treated on an equal footing.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions an in-house tender has been awarded by health boards in Scotland for catering contracts where a private contractor submitted a lower tender; if he approved this action; if he will call upon the appropriate health board to reconsider its decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 July 1989]: Boards have reported two cases of a catering contract being awarded to an in-house team where a private contractor has submitted a lower bid. Boards report the circumstances of such an award, but there is no requirement for boards to seek the approval of the Secretary of State for such an action and no health board has been asked to reconsider its decison.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take to draw the attention of health boards to Government policy on competitive tendering.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 July 1989]: Boards are already well aware of the Government's policy on competitive tendering and I do not propose to issue any additional advice at this time.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from private contractors regarding the award of multi-service contracts, either as a whole, or in part, within the National Health Service in Scotland; and what was his response.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 July 1989]: None.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what system operates in his Department to monitor in-house contracts which have been awarded within the National Health boards in Scotland, to ensure that the operations carried out are up to the prescribed conditions in the tender documents; and if he will make a statement,

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 July 1989]: It is for health boards to monitor standards of performance in respect of contracts whether in or out-house.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure on community care grants for pensioners in the year 1988-89; and what was the average amount received by way of community care grant by each pensioner in receipt of income support.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Total community care grant expenditure on pensioners in 1988-89 was provisonally £7·217 million. The average size of award was £212.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure on single payments for pensioners in the year 1987-88; and what was the average amount received by way of single payments by each pensioner in receipt of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Total single payment expenditure on pensioners in 1987-88 was £26 million. The average size of award was £62.

Income Support

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis the personal allowance and premium rates in the income support applicable amounts are calculated.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As a first step in setting the benefit levels, illustrative rates were constructed which delivered roughly the same amounts of money to various types of claimants as they had been receiving under supplementary benefit. These were then adjusted up or down and the effects on claimants were studied using a computer model. The outcome of this process was the illustrative rates given in the technical annex to the 1985 White Paper. The personal allowance and premium rates for income support, on its introduction in April 1988, were obtained by a similar process using the latest statistics on numbers of beneficiaries and with adjustments to provide help towards the requirement to make a minimum contribution to domestic rates. Further adjustments have been made as part of this year's uprating.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he added a phrase to the Department of Social Security notification of award form which states that the applicable amount is the total amount that the law says you need to live on.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The current wording on the notice of assessment (form A14N), which advises claimants how their income support is calculated, dates from the introduction of income support in April 1988.

Widow's Benefit

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will investigate the case of Mrs. Christine Noden, JP, of 9 Wood crescent, Walton Stone, Staffordshire, and her entitlement to widow's benefit and request the relevant office in his Department to send forthwith a substantive reply following their last letter to her of 13 March.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Arrears of widow's benefit from 10 May 1988 and an explanatory letter were sent to Mrs. Noden on 30 June 1989.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the Doncaster and Mexborough area of South Yorkshire receive severe disablement allowance; and what are the comparable figures for (a) five years ago and (b) 10 years ago.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in the precise form requested. Severe disablement allowance was introduced in November 1984 and figures for five and 10 years ago are not held.

The table shows, at the latest date available, the numbers of severe disablement allowance claimants at the Department's local social security offices at Doncaster, East, Doncaster, West and Mexborough which serve the Don Valley constituency, although their boundaries are not conterminous.

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action. The figures quoted may include a small number of cases not actually in receipt of benefit. Data are provisional and subject to amendment.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing how much expenditure was allocated for community care grants in each local office in (a) 1988-89 and (b) 1989-90; and how much each local office over or underspent its budget for community care grants in 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is available in the Library.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will introduce regulations to give immediate entitlement to the severe disability premium to people claiming income support whose doctor certifies that they have a medical condition which is terminal or which will last at least six months and which gives rise to substantial identifiable extra costs; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce regulations to give immediate entitlement to the disability premium to people claiming income support whose doctor certifies that they have a medical condition which is terminal or which will last at least six months and which gives rise to significant identifiable extra costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We are considering what action we might take to provide help for terminally ill people through an amendment of the rules governing the award of attendance allowance.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how he proposes to seek the views of disabled people in his forthcoming review of their benefits; when he expects to decide the terms of reference for that review; and whether he intends to appoint independent experts.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 3 July at column 7.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will bring forward legislation to ensure that a spouse remaining at home can continue to have a share of the occupational pension of someone admitted to permanent residential or nursing home care who is in receipt of income support.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. An individual who enters permanent residential or nursing home care remains entitled to an occupational pension. Whether part of a member's pension may be commuted to provide pension for a spouse is a matter for determination in accordance with the rules of the scheme.

Private Nursing Care (Claimants)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, in view of the concern regarding the handling of residents' moneys by proprietors or staff in private residential or nursing homes, he will review his policy of not making income support payments direct to claimants' bank accounts.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The facility to have benefit paid directly into a bank account is restricted to beneficiaries paid by computer because a transfer of magnetic tapes is required to effect the payment to the bank. Income support is paid clerically in local social security offices and the direct payment facility cannot be made available at present.

However, it is anticipated that payment of income support will be computerised by the early 1990s and direct payment to bank accounts will then be offered as an option.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice his Department offers to income support claimants who are admitted temporarily to private residential or nursing care in meeting their liability for rates and other charges on their own homes when their personal expenses allowance is used up on meeting their residential costs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Income support is available to help temporary and permanent residents of residential care and nursing homes meet the fees. People in homes temporarily can continue to receive housing benefit in respect of their own homes or can claim help with certain other housing costs such as mortgage interest, ground rent and service charges.

Mr. David Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy regarding the handling of claims for income support from residents of private residential or nursing care where they are required to contribute non-returnable deposits, payments of one month's fees in advance or payments in advance of funeral costs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Income support is available to help people in independent residential care homes and nursing homes meet the fees they have to pay on a weekly basis. However, the terms on which people enter homes are a matter between themselves and the home's proprietors.

Benefit is not paid until the claimant is resident in the home but claims for help with fees can be made up to one month in advance. Income support is not available to meet deposits or funeral costs.

Social fund funeral payments are available subject to a capital limit, to people who are responsible, for the cost of a funeral and who are receiving income support, family credit, housing benefit or community charge rebate at the time of claim. They cannot be paid in advance.

Mr. David Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy regarding the realisation of the sale of the former home of an applicant for income support in private residential care where such a sale would render the resident's previous carer homeless.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Owners of property should be able to receive the full benefit of the capital invested in their former homes before looking to public funds for their support. However, claimants for income support are not required to realise that property when it is occupied by a partner, or by a relative who is aged 60 or over or is incapacitated. Carers who occupy the claimant's former home in any of these circumstances will gain from these concessions. We are continuing to monitor the effects of this policy.

Mr. David Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether the nearest relatives of income support claimants in private residential or nursing care can refuse requests to top up the claimants' fees for care where the claimants' total income does not meet the full costs of care provided;

(2) which agency is responsible for meeting the difference between the fees for private residential and nursing care and the total income of an income support claimant when their resources fall short of the costs of residence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Income support is available to help people in independent homes meet the fees. The level of fees charged in private homes and the way fees are paid are matters wholly between proprietors and residents, or people acting on residents' behalf. Local authorities can meet a shortfall where people under pension age are in residential care homes, and local and health authorities can meet the full cost of care in certain circumstances.

Personal Pensions

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people had taken out a personal pension up to 5 April; and how many have done so subsequently.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Almost 3·4 million people took out a personal pension before the end of 1988-89 tax year, and about 17,000 have done so subsequently.

National Insurance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the most recent estimate of the cost to the national insurance fund of the 2 per cent. inducement under sections 1 and 7, respectively, of the Social Security Act 1986 in 1989-90; and how much of the cost relates to contributions in respect of 1987-88 and 1988-89, respectively.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Precise information is not yet available on the number of persons who will be eligible for incentive payments in 1989-90. The latest estimate is that incentive payments paid in 1989-90 will be £920 million, of which £370 million relates to 1987-88 and £550 million to 1988-89.

Source: Government Actuary's Department.

Agency Status

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish details of the surveys carried out prior to the publication of the report which proposed agency status for much of his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There were no surveys carried out specifically in relation to the production of the agency study report. The study team which produced the report did, however, draw on existing survey material and numerous other sources. The methodology of the team is listed in annex B of the report which is available in the Library.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to introduce the over-18 rate of housing benefit for under-18s; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 10 July 1989.

Benefits

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish in the Official Report a revised version of the table in leaflet AB11 of net incomes qualifying for help with National Health Service costs, including examples of persons receiving attendance allowance, mobility allowance, or invalidity benefit; and whether he will insert a correction slip in leaflet AB11 giving similar examples.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 12 June 1989]: A revised version of the table would be as follows:

Single people without children

	£	If receiving attendance allowance, mobility allowance or invalidity benefit £
Under 18	20·80	34·50
18 to 24	27·40	41·10
25 and over	34·90	48·60
60 to 79	46·10	48·60
80 and over	48·60	48·60

Couples without children

Both under 18	41·60	61·10
At least one of the couple 18 or over	54·80	74·30
At least one of the couple aged 60 to 79	71·85	74·30
At least one over age 80	74·30	74·30

Lone parents

	£	If the parent is receiving one of the above benefits £
Under 18	31·20	41·00
18 and over	45·30	55·10

Couples with children

Both under 18	48·10	67·60
At least one of the couple 18 or over	61·30	80·80

Children

To the amount shown above that applies to you, add one of the following amounts for each additional child in your family:
Under 11	11·75
11 to 15	17·35
16 to 17, doing a full-time further education course not above A-level or equivalent standard	20·80
18 and over, doing a full-time further education course not above A-level or equivalent standard	27·40

Add a further £6·50 for any child who is getting attendance allowance or mobility allowance.

Such a table would still not cover people who qualify for a disability premium on other grounds, nor reflect that some people receiving attendance allowance may qualify for the severe disability premium. The Department is considering, with the Department of Health, how best to clarify the position for all those who may be affected, in the light of the effect on the existing table of forthcoming changes in the income support pensioner premiums.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what benefits are covered by the payment of national insurance contributions; what percentage of the total sum is each one, assuming the person is on average weekly wage; and what percentage of each benefit is covered by taxation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 13 June 1989]: National insurance contributions, less the allocation to the National Health Service, are paid into the national insurance fund, which pays for all contributory benefits. These include: retirement pension including the Christmas bonus and the earnings-related additional component, widow's benefits and industrial injuries benefits. National insurance contribution rates are fixed each year to balance very broadly contributions into and benefit expenditure out of the fund; they are not fixed by adding up components relevant to the cost of each benefit. Assuming the abolition of the Treasury supplement from April 1989 the fund will receive no income from taxation. Entitlement to the state earnings-related part of the retirement pension is fixed by reference to the movement of earnings since the year in which the relevant contributions were made.

In 1989-90 the share of breakdown of contributory benefit expenditure, and the remaining information is expected to be as follows:

Breakdown of Contributory Benefit Expenditure

	£ billion	Percentage share	Breakdown of net contributions[3] (per week) Pre-October 1989 £	Post-October 1989 £
Retirement pensions[1]	20,766	73·2	16·00	14·13
Widow's Benefits	930	3·3	0·72	0·64
Unemployment, incapacity and other benefits	5,160	18·2	3·98	3·51
Other[2]	566	2·0	0·44	0·39
Administration	960	3·4	0·74	0·66
TOTAL	28,382	100	21·87	19·33

[1] Including Christmas bonus and earnings-related benefits.
[2] Including Industrial Injuries benefits and Maternity Allowance.
[3] A man on average male earnings is assumed to earn £275·10 a week in 1989-90. On the basis of the current NIC system in force until October 1989 he will pay £24·76 a week if he is not contracted-out of the State Earnings Related Pension Scheme (SERPS). £2·89 of the £24·76 is allocated to the National Health Service, giving a net contribution to the National Insurance Fund of £21·87 a week. Under the system that will operate from October 1989 the not contracted out contribution will be £21·75 of which £2·44 will be allocated to the NHS leaving a net contribution of £19·31 to the Fund. These net figures are further broken down by reference to the percentage shares quoted in the table. (Components do not add to the totals because of rounding).

Disability

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report a table equivalent to table 2.15 of the second report of the surveys of disability in Great Britain by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys indicating the working status of disabled adults under pension age in each English region, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 14 June 1989]: The information requested is as follows:

2. Further breakdown of the data shown in the table is not possible: sample numbers are too smal for the figures to be statistically reliable.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report a table equivalent to table 5.4 of the second report of the surveys of disability in Great Britain by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, indicating the average equivalent resources of disabled adults compared with the average equivalent income of the general population in each English region, Scotland and Wales.

HEALTH

Medical Staff (Pay)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the percentage increase in average earnings since May 1979, to the latest date for which figures are available of (a) doctors, (b) nurses, and (c) medical scientific officers.

Mr. Mellor: The following is the information:

Average earnings

	Medical Practitioners	Nurses and Midwives
Percentage increase April 1980—April 1988	211·2	195·0

Notes:

1. Source: New Earnings Survey 1988.
2. Directly comparable data is not available for National Health Service scientific officers.
3. Earnings are for employees on adult rates of pay whose pay was not affected by absence.
4. The figures do not include increases paid from 1 April 1988.
5. Medical practitioners include hospital medical staff, consultants and community physicians as well as general practitioners.
6. Nurses and midwives figure is based on earnings of female staff (currently 90 per cent. of nurses).

Wheelchairs

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy that in the event of a successful pilot study he will make additional money available to the Disablement Services Authority for the provision of battery powered indoor-outdoor wheelchairs.

Mr. Mellor: The Disablement Services Authority is financing the present pilot study from within its present resources. If the authority concludes that additional resources are needed it will no doubt justify such a request to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State which will be considered in the public expenditure survey process.

Elderly People

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he is giving to alternative uses of available resources to fund care for frail, elderly people.

Mr. Mellor: We have already published our proposals for the organisation of health services in the White Paper "Working for Patients". The pattern of care for frail elderly people will evolve over the next few years as these proposals are implemented. We will announce our proposals for future policies on community care, following Sir Roy Griffiths' report "Community Care—An Agenda for Action" before the recess.

Live Births (Hemel Hempstead)

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of live births in St. Paul's hospital, Hemel Hempstead, in each of the last four calendar years.

Mr. Freeman: The available information is given in the table. 1986 is the latest year for which information is available centrally.

Live births occurring at St. Pauls Wing, Hemel Hempstead General Hospital, 1983-86.

Year	Live births
1984	1,080
1985	1,096
1986	1,136

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his reply of 14 June, Official Report, column 424, what is the rationale of replacing chairmen of family practitioner committees who have long service on that committee with chairmen who have no service on that committee.

Mr. Mellor: It has been our policy to recruit a proportion of new chairmen for family practitioner committees at each biennial appointments round. A total of 25 new chairmen were appointed as part of the 1989 round and a further 29 existing chairmen were re-appointed. The two vacancies referred to in my earlier reply have since been filled by Mr. D. Kleeman (Enfield and Haringey) and Mr. L. G. Knox (Redbridge and Waltham Forest) who are lay persons new to service in FPCs. The 36 other chairmanships had previously been made for a period—in most cases of four years—ending on 31 March 1991. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on a decision relating to a particular chairmanship.

Death Statistics

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the number of British people who die each year from infectious diseases; and what are the Government's plans to reduce that number.

Mr. Freeman: The provisional figure for the number of people who died from infectious diseases in 1988 is 2,733.

The Government are pursuing a number of measures to reduce this rate of mortality and, in particular, are taking action to ensure that immunisation uptake rates increase.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the number of British people who die each year from food poisoning; and what are the Government's plans to reduce that number.

Mr. Freeman: The provisional estimate for the number of deaths in 1988 associated with food poisoning is 62. The Government's commitment to a comprehensive range of measures on food safety was made again in the Opposition day debate on 21 June at columns 342-90.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the number of British people who die each year from sexually related diseases; and what are the Government's plans to reduce that number.

Mr. Freeman: The provisional estimate of the number of people who died from sexually related diseases (excluding AIDS) in 1988 is 32.

To improve the treatment and prevent the spread of sexually transmitted diseases the Government have made available extra resources for the upgrading of genito-urinary clinics.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the number of British people who die each year from smoking-related diseases; and what are the Government's plans to reduce that number.

Mr. Mellor: It is estimated that at least 110,000 people died from smoking-related diseases in Great Britain in 1987. The Government's health education programme is designed to inform people about the risks of smoking and to encourage them to give up the habit. The system of voluntary agreements with the tobacco industry provides controls over the advertising and promotion of cigarettes and has resulted in a reduction of average cigarette tar yields from 21mg in 1972 to 13mg now. In January of this year the Prime Minister announced a major new teenage smoking campaign, aimed specifically at teenagers, which will cost over £2 million per year for the next three years.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the number of British people who die each year from alcohol-related diseases; and what are the Government's plans to reduce that number.

Mr. Freeman: The provisional figure for deaths where the underlying cause was alcohol dependence, non-dependent abuse of alcohol, chronic liver disease and cirrhosis and toxic effect of alcohol for 1988 in England, Wales and Scotland is 3,933.

Government action to tackle health and social alcohol-related harm is co-ordinated by the ministerial group on alcohol misuse. Action taken by the group is set out in its first annual report, copies of which are available in the Library.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the number of British people who die each year from heart diseases; and what are the Government's plans to reduce that number.

Mr. Freeman: The latest provisional figure for 1988 for the number of people who died from heart disease in Great Britain is 202,000.

The risk of heart disease can be lessened by changes in lifestyle. Together with the Health Education Authority, the Department is supporting and developing the "Look After Your Heart" campaign as an ongoing initiative to combat the high level of heart disease in England. "Look After Your Heart" has two main aims—to increase awareness about the risk of heart disease and to encourage people to avoid it; and to provide practical help with regard to a healthy diet, stopping smoking, taking more exercise and making other changes to the way they live.

Much other work is going on, particularly to discourage smoking—which is a key factor in causing heart disease—and excessive consumption of alcohol. Under changes to general practitioners' terms of service, they will be required to offer patients regular check-ups and personal advice on health issues, including those directly related to heart disease.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the number of British people who die each year from drugs and from drug-related diseases; and what are the Government's plans to reduce that number.

Mr. Freeman: The provisional figure for deaths where the underlying cause was drug dependence and non-dependent abuse of drugs is 221 for 1988 in England, Wales and Scotland. The Government are actively pursuing a wide-ranging strategy to reduce the supply of and the demand for drugs.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the number of British people who die each year from cancer; and what are the Government's plans to reduce that number.

Mr. Freeman: Cancer was registered as the primary cause of death of 160,661 people in the United Kingdom in 1987. The incidence of cancer increases with age, and the death rate tends to reflect the increasing age of the population. The goal of the Europe Against Cancer programme, which the Government are supporting, is to reduce the number of cancer deaths in the Community projected for the year 2000 by 15 per cent. This is being taken forward through programmes of public and professional information on prevention and detection, the evaluation and implementation of screening techniques, and through the co-ordination of research into the causes and treatment of cancer. It is also important to acknowledge the progress made by the Health Service and voluntary organisations in lengthening the survival and improving the care and support of people who eventually die from cancer. The Government will continue to encourage them to achieve the highest possible standards in this field.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to enable district health authorities or local authorities to top up the financial contributions that residents in private residential or nursing care pay towards the costs of their care where the residents concerned have entered private care because the authorities cannot provide such care.

Mr. Mellor: In his report on community care, Sir Roy Griffiths made recommendations for the future funding of patients in private nursing and residential care homes. We are considering these and will bring forward our proposals before the summer recess.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce provisions for a right to stay in private residential or nursing home care for residents whose financial resources are no longer sufficient to meet their residential fees.

Mr. Mellor: No. The arrangements for people living in a private residential care or nursing home are for the proprietor and the individual concerned. Statutory services remain as an alternative source of care.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will take action to deal with the practice of private residential and nursing homes charging for extras over and above their quoted fees and imposing such charges after people have been in residence for a considerable time;

(2) what is his policy on allowing private residential and nursing homes to obtain medical requisites from the National Health Service and selling them to residents at a profit.

Mr. Freeman: The level of fees in private nursing or residential care homes is a matter for the proprietor and the patient and not something on which we would wish to intervene. However we would expect the fees to cover all necessary services, including medical requisites. It makes sense for proprietors to buy requisites at the best possible price and for the patient to share in any consequent savings.

Mr. David Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action he is taking to ensure that the full hospital discharge procedure, outlined in his Department's draft circular issued during early 1988, is followed when hospitals are discharging patients into private residential or nursing homes;

(2) what guidance his Department offers to authorities in relation to patients discharged from hospitals whose only option on discharge is to enter private residential or nursing care which they cannot afford;

(3) what rights an individual patient who is being discharged from hospital care has to dispute his allocation to private residential or nursing care;

(4) who is responsible for arranging the care of a patient whom a hospital consultant states must be discharged but needs continuing 24-hour care.

Mr. Freeman: Circular HC(89)5 which was issued to health authorities in February 1989, together with a booklet "Discharge of Patients from Hospital" emphasised that proper arrangements should be made for any necessary continuing care before patients are discharged from hospital. Arrangements, including care in a private residential or nursing home, should be made in good time and be acceptable to the patient and his/her relatives or carers. No NHS patient should be placed in a private nursing or residential care home against his/her wishes if it means that she or he will be personally responsible for the home's charges. Future responsibility for care will be a matter for local arrangement.

Eye Tests

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has on the percentage fall in the number of people having eye tests since charges for tests were introduced in April;

(2) what is the average amount that opticians now charge for eye tests; and what information he has on the number of optometrists who absorb the cost in their charges for treatment.

Mr. Mellor: We do not yet have information either on the number of people having sight tests or on the current level of charges. We expect to have some information later in the year when the market is more stable.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost to date of advertisements to encourage people to have eye tests; whether he has any plans to redirect future advertising costs to the reduction in cost to patients of eye tests; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We agreed early last year to participate with the optical profession in an eye care awareness campaign and we contributed £0·25 million. There is no provision for any funds for further advertising and therefore no re-directing of funds can be considered.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the difference in cost between a patient being seen in hospital as an outpatient, and being seen by an optometrist, for eye tests.

Mr. Mellor: A fee of £10·40 is paid to ophthalmic opticians and £8·69 to ophthalmic medical practitioners for an NHS sight test. We do not collect figures centrally for sight tests undertaken as part of treatment in NHS hospitals.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what savings have resulted from the introduction of eye test charges;

(2) whether the introduction of eye tests has resulted in a saving to public funds.

Mr. Mellor: We estimate that the introduction of sight test charges will result in a saving of some £70 million this financial year.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there has been an increase in the number of patients referred to hospital ophthalmology departments for eye tests since the introduction of charges for eye tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not yet have this information centrally.

Food Safety

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the consistency of health checks in respect of food and food products in each member state of the European Community; and what steps he will take to ensure that the public of the United Kingdom is protected during the approach to the integrated single European market and after its completion.

Mr. Freeman: The Government are wholly supportive of the need for a European-wide food safety policy. We have been a party to the agreement on five "framework" directives on food labelling, additives, food for particular nutritional use, materials and articles in contact with food and official inspection. This last is very relevant because it will require food for export to another member state to be inspected in the same way as food intended for consumption within the member state. More importantly, it will be backed by a proposed directive on food hygiene with the aim of harmonising standards. Even with completion of the single market, the United Kingdom will be able to take action on the ground of public health either under article 36 of the treaty of Rome or guarantees provided under the relevant directive.

Aside from legislation, the Government participate in a number of Europe-wide committees and working groups established to deal with specific food safety issues.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make it his policy that controls over food for human consumption should continue to come under the care of environmental health officers; and whether he will press the European Community to recognise this approach.

Mr. Freeman: Environmental health officers, trading standards officers, veterinary officers and meat inspectors all enforce controls over food for human consumption. Within the European Community the British Government are continuing to make representation when appropriate.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will press for the incorporation into European Community directives and regulations of recognition that the work of environmental health officers in the United Kingdon is geared towards food safety and food hygiene.

Mr. Freeman: Apart from veterinary directives, community legislation to date has not specified the professionals required to enforce EC directives.

Embryo Experimentation

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the Bill on embryo experimentation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: It remains our intention to introduce legislation on human fertilisation and embryology during this Parliament. There will be a free vote on alternative draft clauses on human embryo research, one banning such research completely, the other permitting it under strict controls.

Project 2000

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to change the grants system for student nurses under Project 2000 into a top-up loans scheme, should the latter proceed for students in higher education.

Mr. Mellor: Bursary levels for Project 2000 students will be kept under review in the light of recruitment and retention trends and future changes in student income support arrangements, including loans.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, in relation to the grants system for student nurses under Project 2000, he will list the projected numbers of students, and costs of the grants, with administrative costs itemised separately for each of the first 10 years of operation of the scheme.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available. Thirteen demonstration districts have received approval from the Department to run Project 2000 training from the autumn of 1989. The number of students at any one time, the cost of the grants, and administrative costs will depend on a number of factors including the rate of implementation of Project 2000 in England. No decisions have yet been taken on this.

Health Authority Staff

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each regional health authority, special health authority and district health authority in England for 1987, the numbers of staff in the following groups (a) medical and dental, (b) nursing and midwifery, (c) administrative and clerical, (d) ancillary, (e) other employees and (f) total employees, expressed in terms of (i) the actual number of employees and (ii) wholetime equivalents.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 28 April 1989]: The information requested has now been placed in the Library.

Pharmaceutical Prices

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, in view of the publication by the European Bureau of Consumer Unions of comparative drug costs in European Community states, he has anything to add to his answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 712.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 29 June 1989]: I have nothing of substance to add to my response to the earlier question to which my hon. Friend refers. The latest analysis of prices by the European Bureau of Consumer Unions, which I understand updates the material in an earlier study by the same organisation, is the most recent in a series of such studies by various organisations produced over several years which have generally indicated a similar pattern of overall price differentials for pharmaceutical products in the different member states of the European Community.

Ostomists

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the proposals in the White Paper, "Working for Patients" will result in any disincentive for doctors to have ostomists on their lists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 3 July 1989]: The scheme will be structured to take full account of the fact that some patients, such as ostomists, may need potentially high cost treatment. Indicative prescribing budgets will fully reflect these costs and there will be no disincentive to GPs to accept such patients on their lists.

Ostomy Appliances

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the proposals in the White Paper, "Working for Patients" will result in any restriction on the provision of ostomy appliances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 3 July 1989]: No. Decisions about the provision of appliances for ostomy patients will remain a matter for the clinical and professional judgment of the medical and nursing staff working with the patient.

Nurses

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district appeals against the clinical regrading of nurses had been heard by 30 April; how many were still waiting to be heard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 3 July 1989]: We do not hold this information centrally.

Birmingham Family Practitioner Committee

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he will list in the Official Report the parliamentary constituencies used by the Birmingham family practitioner committee for the purpose of assessing whether there are enough general practitioners in a particular area;

(2) which areas in the city of Birmingham are currently classified as restricted by the medical practices committee.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 3 July 1989]: The practice area classifications used by the Birmingham family practitioner committee are based on the 1974 parliamentary divisions for the city of Birmingham. These are: Edgbaston, Erdington, Hall Green, Handsworth, Ladywood, Northfield, Perry Barr, Selly Oak, Small Heath, Sparkbrook, Stechford, Sutton Coldfield and Yardley. Of these, Erdington, Small Heath and Yardley are classified as restricted.

Overseas Residents (Medical Records)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the medical records of persons intending to reside overseas for up to a year (a) can be transferred to their doctor in the country they are living in temporarily and (b) can be made available to the persons concerned for them to pass to their doctor on arrival; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 3 July 1989]: When people go abroad for more than three months the medical records held by their family doctor are returned to their local family practitioner committee. Most doctors are willing to provide a summary of a patient's relevant medical history for the patient to take to the new doctor overseas. However, they are not required to do this and they may make a charge.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Staff

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many right hon. and hon. Members regularly pay staff via the Fees Office; how many staff employees of Members are paid via the Fees Office; and how many contracts of employment of Members' staff have been lodged with the Fees Office.

Mr. Wakeham: As at 30 June 1989, the figures were 612, 1,287 and 709 respectively.

Members' Cafeteria

Mr. Cox: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make the Members' Cafeteria a non-smoking area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: No. Smoking restrictions have already been introduced in Refreshment Department outlets where they are practicable. It is intended to make further significant improvements in respect of non-smoking areas once the additional facilities in phase I of the new parliamentary buildings are in operation. Until that time the Catering Sub-Committee considers that it would be inappropriate to impose a complete ban on smoking in the Members' Cafeteria and impossible to introduce any non-smoking section within it.

Re-cycled Paper

Mr. Fry: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he has any plans to seek to ensure that all paper used in the House, including stationery available for hon. Members, is made from re-cycled paper.

Mr. Wakeham: Many of the stationery items supplied to the House are already made from re-cycled material. The Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee is fully aware of the need to increase the use of re-cycled paper at every suitable opportunity and has instructed the authorities of the House and HMSO to keep it informed of any significant developments, particularly any that might enable the first-class stationery used by right hon. and hon. Members to be made from re-cycled material.

Clergy (Ordination) Measure

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will authorise the placing in the Vote Office of supporting documents relevant to the Clergy (Ordination) Measure.

Mr. Wakeham: The Vote Office already has copies of those parliamentary documents relevant to this measure and will issue them on demand.

The Library will accept, for reference purposes, other supporting documents which might be considered to be appropriate.

DEFENCE

Marconi

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Marconi or associate company defence contracts are the subject of inquiries by Ministry of Defence police or the special fraud office where charges have not yet been brought;

(2) what inquiries are being undertaken into supply of sonar equipment, radar, J-Tids and the management of Marconi by his Department, including Ministry of Defence police.

Mr. Sainsbury: Inquiries are being made into a number of allegations and it would not be appropriate for me to comment further at this stage; the work of the serious fraud office is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which contracts between his Department and Marconi or its associate companies moneys have been repaid following upon past costing or inquiries by civil servants.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information relating to the Ministry's dealings with individual companies on post-costing activity or related inquiries is subject to commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the United Kingdom annual defence procurement budget was spent with Marconi and its associate companies in each year since 1986.

Mr. Sainsbury: Payments made to the Marconi Co. Ltd. in respect of headquarters contracts in each of the three years since 1986 represent the following proportions of the United Kingdom annual defence procurement budget:

Year	Per cent.
1987-88	7·1
1988-89	5·5

F111 Aircraft

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the safety records of the F111E and the F111A aircraft based at RAF Upper Heyford.

Mr. Neubert: The current safety records of the F111E and the EF111A, to which I assume my hon. Friend refers, are comparable to those of any combat aircraft in the United States air force inventory. There have been no accidents involving EF111A from RAF Upper Heyford and only one accident involving an F111E from RAF Upper Heyford in the 1980s. That was in 1984 when an aircraft suffered a bird strike while on a training flight in Scotland. Both crew members ejected safely.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fair Trading (Report)

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to publish the report by the Director General of Fair Trading for the year 1988.

Mr. Forth: The 15th annual report by the Director General of Fair Trading has been published today. It covers the period from 1 January 1988 to 31 December 1988. Copies of the report have been laid before Parliament.

Coats Viyella

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what public financial assistance has been paid to Coats Viyella in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Information on payments of Government financial assistance to individual companies is commercially confidential except to the extent that it has been published in British Business under standing arrangements. The following information has been published in British Business on financial assistance to Coats Viyella since it was incorporated in April 1986:

Payments of RDG I	Nil
Payments of RDG II	Nil
Offers of RSA	[1]500,000
Offers of Section 8 assistance	Nil

[1] Published in 1987.

This information relates to Coats Viyella plc: information on assistance paid or offered to its subsidiary companies could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Consumer Credit

Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will make a statement on changes to the regime for regulating consumer credit.

Mr. Maude: I have today signed new regulations relating to consumer credit advertisements and quotations and I have also signed a commencement order under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 relating to the licensing of consumer credit businesses.

The new Consumer Credit (Advertisements) Regulations will come into force on 1 February 1990. The regulations have been substantially simplified. This should be a major benefit to both traders and enforcement bodies. At the same time, additional safeguards for consumers have been provided, including a warning about the risk of loss of the borrower's home in the event of default on a secured loan and about the risks of foreign currency mortgages. The new regulations relating to consumer credit quotations will bring them into line with the advertisement regulations.

Consumer credit trade associations, consumer bodies and enforcement authorities were consulted at every stage of the revision.

The commencement order under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 will bring the licensing provisions of the Act into force for individuals, partnerships and other unincorporated businesses which have, until now, been exempt from the Act if they dealt exclusively in loans of £30 or less. From 31 July, it will be an offence to carry on such a business without having applied to the Director General of Fair Trading for a consumer credit licence.

The exemption from licensing was originally intended to reduce the burden on very small firms, but is of little practical benefit to legitimate businesses because there are few businesses which make loans only for amounts of less than £30 and which are not covered by one of the other exemptions from licensing requirement. However, the £30 exemption has proved a significant obstacle to enforcement bodies such as local authority trading standards officers. Not only do they have to prove that the trader has been engaged in moneylending, but that at least some of his agreements have been for sums of more than £30.

Traders who apply to the Director General of Fair Trading for a licence by 31 July will be able to continue to carry on this category of business as they will be deemed to be licensed until the licence application has been finally determined.

Credit brokerage businesses that are carried on by an individual, partnership or unincorporated body and that introduce customers to a source of credit exclusively for sums not exceeding £30 are still exempt from licensing.

Diesel Fuels

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to introduce quality specifications for diesel fuels on the lines of those operated in the United States of America.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have been asked to reply. None. On behalf of the European Commission, the European Central Standards Organisation (CEN) is now working on a quality specification for diesel fuels within the Community.

10. Parish Hall or Community Centres

Leasing of such buildings is exempt in all member states. For purchase (including construction), in other member states the rates in table 8 above generally apply. In the United Kingdom, the construction of new village halls and similar charitable community buildings will remain zero-rated, following clarification by the EC Commission of last year's judgment of the European Court of justice. The leasing of buildings is exempt unless the charities opt to tax the rents or unless the supply includes the admission to sports to other recreational facilities.

Departmental Relocation

Mr. Robert Sheldon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he is receiving for the relocation of activities in Government Departments.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 4 July 1989]: My right hon. Friend the Paymaster General informed the House on 9 February 1989, columns 751-52, that Departments' reports to the Treasury on their relocation reviews during the 1988 public expenditure survey had indicated over 34,000 Civil Service posts under review. Departments are reporting on the progress of their review programmes in the current survey, and my right hon. Friend will be making a further announcement after its conclusion.

Ministers assess the relocation proposals of their own Departments, following Treasury guidelines, and announce their decisions accordingly.

European Monetary System

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the consequences for economic policy of joining the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system at the current exchange rates.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 29 July 1989]: Maintenance of the exchange rate within the agreed limits would become a proximate objective of policy.

British Pensioners (Canada)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider compensating British pensioners in Canada when a high differential between exchange rates exists.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. There are no provisions in the Social Security Acts which allow adjustments to be made when variations occur in exchange rates as between the United Kingdom and other countries. United Kingdom benefit rates are set at levels appropriate to beneficiaries who are in the United Kingdom and it would neither be practicable nor fair to expect the national insurance fund and the Department to meet the costs and administrative difficulties involved in making adjustments to meet the specific situation of pensioners who are living abroad, in some 170 countries, generally as a matter of choice.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Belfast/Dublin Euroroute

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to speed up the dualling of the main Belfast—Dublin Euroroute from the M1 motorway as far as the land frontier with the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Approximately two thirds of the road between the M1 motorway and the border with the Republic of Ireland is already dual carriageway. It is planned to complete the dualling of the last remaining stretch of single carriageway between the M1 and Loughbrickland by May 1992. The Newry bypass, which is being constructed to single carriageway standard, should be completed by August 1994. The remaining stretches of single carriageway will be dualled as and where traffic flows warrant it.

Roads Investment

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he proposes to take to improve investment in roads infrastructure in the Province along the lines of the proposals by the Secretary of State for Transport for England and Wales.

Mr Needham: In keeping with the Government's objective to maintain a sound roads infrastructure in Northern Ireland, I am allocating an additional £28 million for structural maintenance of the existing network over a three-year period. Appropriate priority is being given to the maintenance needs of the main inter-urban routes. We continue to develop the main road system through an annual programme of new construction schemes. In addition, major investment is planned in a new cross-harbour road link to improve traffic conditions in and around central Belfast. Funds have already been made available to enable land and property acquisition to proceed.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

St Helena (Ferry)

Mr Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the circumstances surrounding the Overseas Development Administration involvement in the St Helena ferry construction, and in the decision to give the contract to A and P Appledore.

Mr. Eggar: The aid programme is financing the construction of a new mixed passenger and cargo ship for the Government of St Helena. The contract was placed in December 1987 with Hall Russell Ltd of Aberdeen. This company went into receivership in November 1988, but work on the ship continued. The joint receivers sold Hall Russell's assets in February 1989. A contract to complete the ship was subsequently concluded by the Overseas Development Administration, acting on behalf of the Government of St Helena, with the yard's new owner, A and P Appledore (Aberdeen) Ltd. We are satisfied with both the contract and the good progress that is now being made. The ship is to be launched on 31 October.

EC Expenditure (Developing Countries)

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the European Community Articles under which the Community may co-finance projects in developing countries and development education projects with United Kingdom non-governmental organisations, and the Community's expenditure under each article on projects co-financed with United Kingdom non-governmental organisations in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: European Community co-financing with European non-governmental organisations for projects in developing countries and development education projects is funded from line 941 of the Community budget. In his reply of 16 June, column 546, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development listed the amounts granted to United Kingdom non-governmental organisations under this programme in 1987.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Marconi

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General what inquiries are currently being undertaken by the special fraud office into contracts for sonar equipment supplied by Marconi and its associated companies.

The Attorney-General: The serious fraud office, in conjunction with the Ministry of Defence police, is investigating a number of allegations concerning the Marconi Company Limited and its subsidiaries. It would not be appropriate for me to provide more specific information.

TRANSPORT

Coastal Waters (Chemicals)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to introduce a permanent record of all incidents where chemicals contained in drums or containers sink within 100 miles of the British coast.

Mr. Portillo: The present arrangement is that records are kept of chemical losses where on scientific advice salvage is attempted, within United Kingdom waters or on the United Kingdom continental shelf. I am satisfied that that is appropriate.

European Parliament

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when a Minister or official from his Department last attended a meeting of the Transport Committee of the European Parliament.

Mr. Portillo: The former Secretary of State for Transport appeared before the Committee on 23 April 1986. Government officials maintain contacts with Committees of the European Parliament.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if it is his policy to make responses to proposals made by the Transport Committee of the European Parliament which have been endorsed by vote at the European Parliamentary Assembly.

Mr. Portillo: Proposals made under the co-operation procedure are formally considered by the Council of Ministers.

Microlight Plane (Accidents)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the accidents, including fatalities, involving the microlight plane since its introduction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority has the statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of civil aviation within the United Kingdom. I am asking the chairman of the authority to write to my hon. Friend.

Road Tax

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the outcome was of the intensive crackdown on untaxed vehicles following the roadside checks carried out by the London enforcement office assisted by the Metropolitan and City of London police forces for the period following 16 May.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Three thousand eight hundred motorists were reported for not having a current road fund licence on display. These cases are being investigated. Where it is clear that vehicle excise duty has been evaded, those responsible will be prosecuted.

Coastguard Helicopter (Lee-on-Solent)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the number of operations undertaken by the coastguard helicopter based at Lee-on-Solent during its first year of service.

Mr. Portillo: In the first year of operation, which commenced on 15 May 1988, the helicopter attended 146 incidents and assisted 68 persons. Furthermore, during many of those incidents the aircraft participated in rescues in which lifeboats or other craft landed survivors.

M25

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answers of 24 April, Official Report, column 447, and 15 May, Official Report, column 11, if he will now place a copy of some provisional traffic statistics for M25 main carriageway, entry and exit slip roads collected by or for his Department in the Library in advance of the final statistics to be included in the report of the M25 review.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The M25 review report will be published soon.

Air Traffic Controllers

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss staffing levels of air traffic controllers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State frequently meets the chairman of the authority to discuss a whole range of topics of mutual interest.

Railways (Safety)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to set up an independent inquiry into recent rail accidents and safety conditions on British Rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding reply 30 June 1989]: Three separate independent public inquiries have been held into the recent tragic accidents at Clapham junction, Purley and Bellgrove. I am awaiting the reports, which will be published. Mr. Anthony Hidden QC, who is conducting the Clapham junction inquiry, is considering whether any broader management lessons need to be learnt and will take into account any relevant evidence from the other two inquiries.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Universities Funding Council

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will give the cash and constant price figures for funds made available to the UFC for current grants, excluding changes in the home student fee levels, compensation for redundancy and early retirement, information technology and new blood programmes deflated by the gross domestic product deflator, the retail prices index and the university pay and prices index, for each of the years 1980-81 to 1988-89;

(2) if he will give the cash and constant price figures of funds made available to the UFC for recruitment and capital grants, shown separately and each deflated by the appropriate gross domestic product deflator, and the universities retail pay and prices index for each of the years 1980-81 to 1988-89.

Mr. Jackson: Capital and recurrent grants made to universities in Great Britain on the advice of the University Grants Committee were as follows:

£ million

Financial Years	Capital		Recurrent
	Cash	Real terms	Cash	Real terms
1980-81	97·9	144·6	942·9	1,393·1
1981-82	103·1	138·8	968·0	1,303·2
1982-83	106·8	134·3	1,176·2	1,478·8
1983-84	103·1	123·9	1,222·2	1,468·5
1984-85	106·7	122·2	1,253·2	1,434·9
1985-86	118·2	128·3	1,282·6	1,392·3
1986-87	130·2	136·7	1,320·1	1,386·4
1987-88	128·8	128·8	1,464·0	1,464·0
[1]1988-89	140·1	130·6	1,584·9	1,477·8

This includes cash provision of £50 million in 1982-83 and £30 million in 1983-84 for redundancy and premature retirement compensation: subtracting this from recurrent grant gives real terms figures for those years of £1,415·9 million and £1,432·5 million. Recurrent grant for 1982-83 included provision of over £100 million in compensation for reduced tuition fee income but was not separately identified in later years. Information is not available to make the other adjustments requested.

Real terms are at 1987-88 prices as measured by the GDP deflator which the Government regard as the most appropriate measure of the cost to the economy as a whole and to the public purse of expenditure changes. Over the period in question, this moved from a base of 100 to 158·5. The retail prices index, which relates only to general consumers' expenditure, moved from a base of 100 in January 1981 to 157·9 in January 1989. From November 1980 to January 1989, the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals' university pay and prices index moved from a base of 100 to 167·6, although this does not fully reflect the efficiency gains which have occurred over the period.

Ethnic Minority Education

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make available in the Vote Office the recent report produced for the Department on the education of West Indian or Asian children in state schools; if he will summarise in the Official Report the main findings of the report; and what action he intends to take to implement the finding of the report.

Mr. Butcher: A copy of "The School Effect: A Study of Multiracial Comprehensives" has been placed in the Library. This report is based on research which followed the progress of 3,000 pupils in 20 urban comprehensives, starting in 1981. The research found striking differences between the schools surveyed in what they did and how they did it. The level of achievement of pupils of similar abilities, regardless of their ethnic or social background, varied markedly according to the school they attended. Differences in examination results between ethnic groups were small and very much smaller than the differences between schools.

This report reinforces the Government's determination to press ahead with the implementation of the national curriculum and with the arrangements for assessment and testing so that every child can have the best possible start in life.

Natural Environment Research Council

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he will make it his policy to give the Natural Environment Research Council the necessary funds to develop work into better understanding of water quality in United Kingdom rivers;

(2) whether he will make it his policy to give the Natural Environment Research Council the necessary funds to develop work in the combined geological and biological research needed to investigate the natural effects and the impact of pollution.

Mr. Jackson: As stated in my replies to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth on 4 July, Official Report, columns 124-25, my right hon. Friend will as usual consider expenditure on all areas of scientific research sponsored by this Department later this year, after studying advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils.

Research Grants

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money was provided by his Department for research into the links between pollution and human health (i) each year from 1979-89 and (ii) in the current financial year.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 3 July 1989]: The Medical Research Council, which receives grant-in-aid from this Department, is the main agency through which the Government support medical research. Since 1979-90, the council has spent the following amounts on research into links between pollution and human health, covering research on chemical and physical hazards, sound and vibration, and radiation.

Year	£ million
1979-80	4·3
1980-81	5·8
1981-82	6·1
1982-83	5·8
1983-84	6·1
1984-85	5·5
1985-86	5·4
1986-87	5·2

Figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are not yet available.

A small element of the research carried out by the Natural Environment Research Council is also relevant to links between pollution and human health. It is estimated that over the last 10 years £0·3 million of money provided by this Department has been spent on such work.

Additionally, university departments and medical schools support a range of research from block grants from the Universities Funding Council, some of which may be relevant to links between pollution and human health.

PRIME MINISTER

EC Nuclear Policy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if, during her meeting with heads of governments of the European Community states in Madrid she, or other participants in the meeting, raised the matter of (a) nuclear materials safeguards, (b) a common policy on nuclear fuel reprocessing, (c) the future of the European fast reactor collaborative programme, (d) the role of the Euratom nuclear materials supply agency and (e) recent reports from the European Parliament on nuclear power and radiation protection;

(2) if, during the recent meeting of heads of governments of European Community states held in Madrid, the issue of the transfrontier transport of radioactive and toxic waste under the changes to be implemented under the Single European Act in 1992 was discussed; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the statement that I made to the House on 29 June about the meeting of the European Council in Madrid.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during the recent summit of heads of Government of European Community states held in Madrid, the matter of the Western European Union and an independent nuclear weapons force for western Europe was discussed.

The Prime Minister: No.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during the recent meeting of heads of Governments of the European Community states held in Madrid she raised with the French Prime Minister or Foreign Minister the prospects of France signing the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

The Prime Minister: No.

Hong Kong

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister if she will appoint one Minister to have specific responsibility for Hong Kong.

The Prime Minister: My noble Friend Lord Glenarthur, Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, already has special responsibility for Hong Kong.

Halliburton Manufacturing and Services Ltd.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether any Government Departments have any current contracts with Halliburton Manufacturing and Services Ltd., 17 Hanover Square, London W1R 0FL, or any of its international branches; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No central listing of companies in contract with Government Departments is maintained. A review of the records of the main Government Departments shows no evidence of any current contracts with Halliburton Manufacturing and Services Ltd. or any of its international branches.

Bristol Channel (Sewage)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to take personal control of the co-ordination work required to stop the dumping of raw sewage into the Bristol channel and to work towards these beaches attaining the standards of the EC bathing water directive 76/160/EEC.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave him yesterday, column 82.

Welsh Development Agency (Buy-outs)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she will institute an external inquiry into the proposed management buy-out proposals by senior executives of the Welsh Development Agency west Wales sector; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what is the Government's policy on management buyouts in the regional areas of the Welsh Development Agency; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 3 July at column 16 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

ENERGY

Cold Fusion (Harwell)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress made in research into cold fusion at the Atomic Energy Research Establishment at Harwell.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that following a comprehensive programme of experiments at Harwell, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has decided to end research into cold fusion as the results have shown no evidence of fusion reactions.

Fuel and Energy Supply Industries

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the environmental impact of his Department's policies, in terms of fuel and energy supply industries for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Parkinson: The utilisation of all energy resources has an impact on the environment. The energy supply and use in this country is determined largely by customer choice and market forces within the current regulatory framework, including environmental regulations administered by the Department of the Environment.

The law requires that the environmental impacts of proposed major energy projects, like many other large developments, be assessed. With certain limitations, new power stations and pipelines fall within the ambit of the Electricity and Pipe-lines Works (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1989 which my Department administers.

Dounreay

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the uranium oxide breeder fuel incorporated in the Dounreay fast reactor core fuel sub-assemblies has been reprocessed with, or separate from, the fuel sub-assembly uranium/plutonium oxide fuel pins.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the UKAEA and I will ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Power Stations (Plutonium Waste)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), Official Report, 20 June, columns 92-3, the amounts of residual plutonium in wastes at Harwell, Sellafield and Dounreay are notified to his Department for the purposes of nuclear safeguards records.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The industry notified Euratom, through the Department.

Atomic Energy Agency Safeguards Implementation Report

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), Official Report, 19 June, column 13, if the International Atomic Energy Agency Safeguards Implementation report for 1988 lists any anomalies in regard to United Kingdom facilities;

(2) how many instances of safeguards goals not being met are listed in the 1988 International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards implementation report, a copy of which has been received by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply. The annual safeguards implementation reports of the International Atomic Energy Agency are confidential. A summary will be published in the agency's 1988 annual report, which will be placed in the Library of the House, when it becomes available.

Gas Emissions

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the carbon dioxide emissions due to fossil fuels utilised in the mining and enrichment of uranium are taken account of in his Department's calculations of current and likely future greenhouse gas emissions; what the emission rate per gigawatt year of electricity currently is; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Carbon dioxide emissions from the front end of the nuclear fuel cycle are negligible and vary according to the country in which the activity is undertaken. Such emissions in the United Kingdom are included in the industrial emissions category.

The emission rate of carbon dioxide for the electricity supplied by the CEGB, from all sources, in 1987 was approximately 7 million tonnes of CO_2 per gigawatt year.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimates his Department has produced for the carbon dioxide emissions which occur due to the fossil fuels utilised in the complete nuclear fuel cycle for a Magnox reactor, advance gas-cooled reactor and a pressurised water reactor of the Hinkley C type.

Mr Michael Spicer: My Department has made no detailed estimates of CO_2 emissions from the fuel cycle for nuclear power stations, but in general these will be negligible and depend on the sources of energy supply used to run the individual processes involved.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what specific proposals his Department has put forward for consideration and enactment, in order to reduce greenhouse gas emissions such as carbon dioxide and methane, since the seminar held by the Prime Minister on 26 April.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Current policies and initiatives are intended to limit the emission of CO_2. Further measures to cut such emissions will be considered as further scientific evidence is generated.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how many waste landfill sites produce methane gas in the United Kingdom; how much methane gas is estimated to be produced annually in million tonnes of methane and carbon dioxide equivalent; and what estimates he has of additional sources of methane gas;

(2) what level of methane leaks occurs in natural gas systems in the United Kingdom, in both million tonnes and as a percentage of total gas produced, broken down by (a) that related to natural gas production and pipelines and (b) that related to point of use.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Any site which has taken biodegradeable waste has the potential to produce landfill gas. Records of the types of waste permitted at landfill sites in England and Wales show that there are approximately 3,500 sites which have been licensed to receive waste of the type that can produce landfill gas. In 1988 Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution estimated that some 1,300 of these might require gas management measures. In addition, HMIP is aware of sites producing landfill gas which were licensed to deposit only inert wastes.

My Department has expended £10 million on research and development into biofuels, including £1·1 million on landfill gas up to the end of the financial year 1988-1989. This has resulted in successful demonstrations of landfill gas technology which is leading to increasing commercial exploitation. Recent estimates from the Energy Technology Support Unit suggest that about 0·7 megatonnes of methane are produced annually by landfill sites in the United Kingdom. As molecule for molecule methane is about 25 to 30 times more powerful a greenhouse gas than is carbon dioxide, this represents the equivalent, on a weight for weight basis, of between 50 to 55 megatonnes of CO_2.

We are aware of 14 sites generating electricity from landfill gas with an installed capacity of around 25 MW. We expect the installed capacity to increase to over 40 MW during the next year. The non-fossil fuel obligation in the Electricity Bill should provide an enhanced opportunity for renewable energy, including landfill gas. All economic and practical proposals will be eligible to contribute to the initial obligation to be set towards the end of 1989. Further tranches totalling up to 600 MW reserved exclusively for renewables will be set during the 1990s.

Other significant non-biological sources of methane gas consist of leakages from the natural gas production, distribution and supply system and from the seepage of the gas during coal production—this represented just over 1 megatonnes in 1988 of which about 10 per cent. is utilised and so does not escape to the atmosphere.

Natural gas leakage, together with permitted venting in the United Kingdom continental shelf, amounts to about 1 per cent. of throughput, or about 0·4 megatonnes a year of methane at current levels. The majority of this is attributable to leakage from the distribution system and only a very small proportion relates to the point of use.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gdansk Shipyard

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for the operation in Poland of the Helsinki Final Act of the threat by the managing director of the Anglo-Polish company Durainsul to sack any worker at its leased port of the Gdansk shipyard who joins a trade union.

Mr. Waldegrave: All CSCE states decided in the 1983 Madrid concluding document to ensure the right of workers freely to establish and join trade unions and other rights as laid down in relevant international instruments. We expect states to comply fully with this and all other CSCE commitments.

Angola

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the political situation in Angola and the prospects for the ending of civil war in that country.

Mrs. Chalker: We warmly welcome the progress made towards internal reconciliation in Angola, notably the meeting between President dos Santos and Dr. Savimbi on 22 June and the agreement to implement a ceasefire from 24 June. We are urging both sides to respect the ceasefire and to continue to show flexibility in the difficult negotiations that lie ahead.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many official visits abroad he has made during his tenure of office; how many officials on average accompanied him on each trip; and what was the total cost.

Mr. Eggar: Since June 1983 the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has made the following number of visits abroad:

	Visits
1983	25
1984	43
1985	49
1986	41
1987	42
1988	40
1989 to date	19
TOTAL	259

On average three officials have accompanied him on each trip.

The total cost was £4,200,000 approximately.

Pakistan

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the current state of relations with Pakistan.

Mr. Eggar: Our excellent relations with Pakistan have been reinforced by the restoration of democracy in that country. We look forward to Prime Minister Bhutto's visit here as a guest of the British Government from 5 to 12 July.

Hydrographers Department

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much he paid the hydrographers department for the last complete period for advice on territorial limits and international maritime advice.

Mr. Eggar: The hydrographer's department is part of the Ministry of Defence and is funded by that Ministry. The hydrographer's department does not charge the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for its advice.

EC (Economic and Monetary Union)

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to attend the European Economic Community Council of Ministers to discuss preparations for the proposed inter-governmental conference on economic and monetary union.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I expect to attend the Foreign Affairs Council on 17 and 18 July. The agenda will include follow-up to the Madrid European Council.

Hong Kong

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he had had with representatives of the Government of Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs visited Hong Kong from 2 to 4 July. During his visit he met the Governor, senior officials and representatives of the community of Hong Kong. Their discussions covered the range of current issues in Hong Kong, including recent developments in China and their implications for Hong Kong.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet with his European Community counterparts to discuss the future of Hong Kong citizens.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has already discussed this matter with his EC colleagues at the recent meeting of the European Council in Madrid. We will continue to urge the international community to join us in doing everything possible to restore the confidence of people in Hong Kong following the recent appalling events in China.

Atwah Lufti Sumar Hirzallah

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli local authorities about the killing of Atwah Lufti Sumar Hirzallah; and what response he obtained.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Departmental Interviews

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on recording interviews given by his Department to journalists.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Ministerial interviews are normally recorded.

China

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the common action being taken by the European Community against the Government of the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Eggar: The EC issued a joint statement on 6 June which strongly condemned the violent suppression of the demonstrations in China. On 15 June the presidency carried out a demarche, stressing the Twelve's grave concern at continuing repression and expressing hope that economic and political reform could be put back on course, together with adherence to respect for human rights. On 17 June a further demarche was made, appealing for clemency for the first persons sentenced to death in connection with the demonstrations. On 27 June the European Council agreed a declaration on China which reiterated the Twelve's condemnation and adopted a package of measures to be taken by the Community and its member states.

Non-Proliferation Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the countries that have neither signed nor ratified, acceded or succeeded to the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following states are not parties to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty:

Albania	Kuwait[1]
Algeria	Mauritania
Andorra	Mozambique
Angola	Monaco
Argentina	Nauru
Brazil	Niger
Burma	Oman
Chile	Pakistan
China	St. Christopher and Nevis
Comoros	South Africa
Cuba	United Arab Emirates
Djibouti	United Republic of Tanzania
France	Vanuatu
Guyana	Zambia
India	Zimbabwe
Israel

[1] Signed the Treaty on 22 August 1968, but has not ratified.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries currently party to the non-proliferation treaty with their dates (a) of signature, (b) of subsequent deposit of instrument of ratification, accession or succession and (c) of safeguards agreement in force with the International Atomic Energy Agency under the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am placing in the Library of the House a list of the dates of signature and ratification, accession or succession to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty. Details of safeguards agreements are contained in the publication "Agreements Registered with the International Atomic Energy Agency", a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House. We understand that the publication is currently being updated by the agency, and a copy of the revised edition will be placed in the Library when it is issued.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries that at present have signed the non-proliferation treaty but have not ratified, acceded or succeeded to it, with their dates of signature.

Mr. Waldegrave: Kuwait is the only state in this category—date of signature 22 August 1968.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those occasions since May 1979 when representations concerning the non-proliferation treaty have been made at ministerial level by Her Majesty's Government to those states not party to the non-proliferation treaty at the time of the representation.

Mr. Waldegrave Such representations have been made at a variety of levels on numerous occasions. A detailed list could, however, be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

India (Non-Proliferation)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), Official Report, 14 June, column 475, he will set out in the Official Report the last opportunity deemed suitable when Her Majesty's Government's views on non-proliferation were made clear to the Indian Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs most recently raised non-proliferation issues with members of the Indian Government during his visit to India from 28 March to 1 April.

Poland

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has made to the Government of Poland regarding recent progress in that country towards democracy and individual freedom; and if he will make a statement on the current state of relations with Poland.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs recently had the opportunity to discuss developments in Poland, including the elections, with both General Jaruzelski and Professor Geremek of Solidarity. I, too, had the pleasure of meeting Professor Geremek. May I refer my hon. Friend to my recent statements of 6 April and 14 June, on our relations with Poland.

Hungary

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Hungary regarding recent progress in that country towards democracy and individual freedom; and if he will make a statement on the current state of relations with Hungary.

Mr. Waldegrave: We welcome Hungary's moves towards a multi-party system and a state based on the rule of law. My right hon. and learned Friend discussed these matters with the Hungarian State Minister, Imre Pozsgay, on 25 April. I am visiting Hungary next week, and will meet a wide range of party, Government and opposition figures.

Our bilateral relations with Hungary are excellent, with regular contact at all levels, as befits a country in the vanguard of political reform in Eastern Europe.

Mr. Eggar: In accordance with the recent guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the question to the correspondence unit of migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive a reply from the unit in due course.

Antarctica (French Airstrip)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the purpose of the airstrip being constructed by the French in Antarctica; and what effect this project is having on wildlife in the region.

Mr. Eggar: The airstrip is needed to facilitate glaciological research in a key area of the Antarctic interior. The results of this research will be made available to Antarctic treaty parties.

There have been differing reports from environmentalists and the French authorities on the extent of the effect on wildlife in the region. The French Government have promised to produce a paper on the construction of the airstrip which will give further details.

EEC Budget

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will set out in tabular form the total net payments or total net receipts of each of the member states for the EEC budget since 1979.

ENVIRONMENT

Equity Share Schemes

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities in England and Wales have plans to build houses under equity share schemes.

Mr. Trippier: The information for English local authorities is not available centrally. For information about Wales, I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Valuation and Community Charge Tribunals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reviews his Department is carrying out in respect of the valuation and community charge tribunals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Independent consultants will shortly undertake a review of valuation and community charge tribunals and make recommendations on the pay, conditions of service and grading of their staff.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will delay the water privatisation flotation until 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: No. We plan to offer the industry for sale to the public in November 1989.

Redundant Land

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown both by individual local authorities and the latest available year of the 54,000 acres of council-owned derelict and redundant land referred to in the 1987-88 report on the inner cities programme.

Mr. Trippier: The amount of unused and underused land owned by local authorities and entered on the land register at 30 June 1989 was 49,931 acres. I have arranged for a breakdown of this by individual local authorities to be placed in the Library today.

Sewage Outfalls (North-West)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the intended frequency of routine storm water discharges from the three short sea outfalls along the Fylde coast is within the guidelines for disposal of sewage to the sea agreed in 1988 between Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the water industry.

Mr. Howard: The North West water authority has applied for discharge consents in respect of a proposed long sea outfall and three associated storm water overflows to bring bathing waters along the Fylde coast up to EC standards, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will consider, as part of their assessment, the authority's proposals for dealing with storm water in the light of its published "Guidance on Long Sea Outfalls"—a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contacts his Department has had with the North West water authority over proposals to construct a long sea outfall at Rossall point on the Fylde coast.

Mr. Howard: North West Water applied to my Department on 20 December 1988 for consent to discharge sewage effluent into the Lune Deep off Morecambe Bay from a proposed new long sea outfall at Rossall point. The applications are still being considered by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has on the differences between the top and bottom currents at and around the likely areas of impact in the Lune Deep of the proposed long sea outfall discharge at Rossall point on the Fylde coast.

Mr. Howard: The North West water authority has supplied information to my Department both on top and bottom currents which were measured at locations related to the proposed Lune Deep outfall site. The water authority has pointed out that the measurements are consistent with the hydrodynamic model of the scheme and with observed sediment transport patterns.

Air Conditioning

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what standards are laid down for installation of air conditioning in office buildings;

(2) what standards are laid down for the operation of air conditioning in office buildings.

Mr. Trippier: There are no requirements in the Building Regulations 1985 which relate directly to the installation and operation of air conditioning equipment. The code of practice in widespread use is BS 5750: 1979, which covers the design installation and maintenance of such systems.

River Pollution (North-West)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call for a report on all river pollution incidents in the north-west in the last 12 months; if he will publish (a) details of such incidents and (b) action taken as a result of such incidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Responsibility for the control of river pollution in the north-west rests with the North West water authority. The authority reports incidents in its annual reports, and it is for them to take decisions on the action needed in individual cases. The only exceptions to this would be incidents caused by the authority itself. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution investigates incidents of this kind which are brought to its attention and takes appropriate action. In addition it is, of course, open to anyone to take independent action in any particular case.

Water Authorities (Debt Write-offs)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the proposed debt write-offs for each water authority prior to privatisation.

Mr. Howard: These will be determined nearer to flotation. I refer to the fuller answer that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Meriden (Mr. Mills) on 18 May.

Water Authorities' Accounts

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the water authorities' unaudited accounts for 1988-89 will be made available.

Mr. Howard: The water authorities unaudited accounts for 1988-89 are to be placed on public deposit in accordance with statutory provisions tomorrow morning. I shall arrange for copies to be placed in the Library of the House. The annual reports and audited accounts will be published later in the summer and laid before Parliament at that time.

Business Rate (Suffolk and Norfolk)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he makes of the unified business rate in Suffolk and Norfolk.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer, 3 July 1989]: We estimate that if the uniform business rate had taken effect this year it would have been about 35 pence in the pound in England.

Rating Reform

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to seek to place a duty on local authorities to compensate community charge and business rate payers for service which falls below an agreed minimum standard.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer, 3 July 1989]: No. Simple, clear community charge bills will enable chargepayers to judge the efficiency and value for money with which local authorities provide services. Chargepayers will be able to express in the political and electoral processes any concern that they may feel about standards of service. In future, the business rate poundage will be set nationally, but authorities will have a duty to consult representatives of business in their area about their expenditure proposals and in that way business ratepayers will be able to make their views known.

Community Charge (Rebate)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to announce details of the rebate of up to 80 per cent. of the community charge to be made available to persons on low incomes; and when information on how to apply for such rebates will be sent to local authorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The detailed arrangements for rebating the community charge are set out in the draft Community Charge Benefits (General) Regulations 1989 which were circulated to all authorities at the end of May. Application procedures, within the terms of these regulations, are a matter for local authorities themselves.

WALES

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of all discussions that have taken place between either Mr. Waterstone and Mr. Gwyn Jones of the Welsh Development Agency's office in Cardiff and representatives of merchant banks and large accounting firms concerning management buyouts and other possible ways of privatising the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The chairman and chief executive of the Welsh Development Agency have had no discussions at any stage with merchant banks or large accounting firms about a management buyout of the agency either in whole or in part. The Welsh Development Agency Act 1975 obliges the agency to seek to increase private sector involvement in its operations. To this end, possible means of stimulating such involvement are kept continuously under review and professional advisers of all sorts have been involved in discussions with the agency over a period of several years.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the amount of advance factory building that has taken place by the west Wales region of the Welsh Development Agency for each year from 1983-84 to the present time; what are the future plans; and what percentage each year the figures represent of the total factory building programme throughout Wales by the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

Year	Area completed in West Wales[1] 000' sq ft	Percentage of total Agency build
1983-84	155	19·9
1984-85	70	22·0
1985-86	—	—
1986-87	5	0·1
1988-89	28	2·8

[1] The year on year figures are not comparable due to change in the agency's regional office structure in July 1988 which removed responsibility for urban areas, including Llanelli, from the west Wales region.

As regards future plans the agency intends to start work on 62,000 sq ft of factory space in the current financial year.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if there are any proposals in any of the other regional offices of the Welsh Development Agency similar to the management buy-out proposals revealed in west Wales on 29 June; and whether he will provide details.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will instruct (a) the chairman and (b) the chief executive of the Welsh Development Agency to issue public statements concerning the proposed management buy out proposals of senior executives of the west Wales Welsh Development Agency sector; and if he will make a statement.

(2) if he will publish the documents concerning the proposed west Wales Welsh Development Agency management buyout proposals; and if he will make a statement;

Mr. Peter Walker: No. This is a matter for the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his estimate of the assets of the west Wales sector of the Welsh Development Agency involved in the proposed management buyout; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the value of the Welsh Development Agency property portfolio (a) in west Wales, (b) in each of the subregional sectors of the Welsh Development Agency and (c) in Wales as a whole; and if he will make a statement.

	£ million
West Wales	5·681
South Wales Valleys	75·782
South Wales East	63·305
North East Wales	50·417
North West Wales	6·584
South Wales West	47·946
Wales Total	249·715

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to sell assets of the Welsh Development Agency in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh Development Agency has set itself a property sales target of £15 million for the current financial year.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans there are to increase factory building by the Welsh Development Agency in the west Wales sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh Development Agency intends to start work on 62,000 sq ft of advance factory and workshop space in west Wales in the current financial year. This is more than double the area completed in 1988-89 and compares with an average area of 24,000 sq ft completed in the three years before 1979-80.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of (a) T. R. Jones Ltd., Ammanford, (b) Dinefwr Enterprise Company, (c) Mainport Group, Pembroke Dock, (d) Pembrokeshire Business Initiative, (e) Morgan Marine, Llandybie, (f) Avon Inflatables, Onfen, (g) Milford Haven Port Authority and (h) Delanair Ltd. have received Welsh Development Agency financial or consultancy assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Four of the organisations listed—Dinefwr Enterprise Company, Mainport Group, Pembrokeshire Business Initiative and Morgan Marine—have received financial or consultancy assistance from the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many meetings he has had with the (a) chairman of the Welsh Development Agency, (b) chief executive and (c) west Wales Welsh Development Agency executives in (i) 1988 and (ii) 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I frequently meet the chairman and the chief executive of the Welsh Development Agency. I am not aware of having met the agency's west Wales executives.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received any report of the meeting of west Wales executives and the chairman and chief executive of the Welsh Development Agency in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I received no such report until earlier this week when the chairman of the WDA informed me that the meeting had taken place.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what disciplinary measures he has instituted within his Department on the matter of proposed management buy-outs in the wes: Wales Welsh Development Agency following the suspension of two senior officers in west Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: None, as none is needed.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last visited the (a) headquarters and (b) west Wales offices of the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I last visited the Welsh Development Agency's headquarters on 2 May. I have never visited the agency's west Wales offices.

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was (a) the number and (b) the value of mortgages (£000s) on completed disposals for (i) full ownership and (ii) shared ownership by each local authority in Wales, and for Wales as a whole during (1) 1980-81, (2) 1981-82, (3) 1982-83, (4) 1983-84, (5) 1984-85, (6) 1985-86, (7) 1986-87, (8) 1987-88 and (9) 1988-89;

HEALTH

Census Statistics

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what, further to the Under-Secretary's reply to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury on 26 May, is his policy on the extent to which the presentation of census statistics will be described in terms of postcodes such as to make possible access to individual household data by computer comparison with other registers.

Mr. Freeman: The policy of successive Governments has been to take all practicable steps to protect the confidentiality of census information on individual people and households. In its White Paper on the 1991 Census of Population, Cm 430, published in July 1988, the Government confirmed that, in releasing the statistics from census, whether using postcodes or not, all possible steps will be taken to prevent the inadvertent disclosure of information about identifiable individuals. The means of presenting statistical summaries for small areas from the 1991 census are at present under discussion.

Head Lice

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will initiate a programme of research into the control of head lice infestation in schools.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is currently carrying out a feasibility study to identify the broad issues of concern in the school health services and the problem of head lice infestation is one of the issues that we are looking at. Once this study is complete we shall consider what, if any, action is needed for any or all of these services, including the need for any research or advice on this problem.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he gives to area health authorities concerning the containment of the problem of head lice infestation in schools.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for the control of head lice infestation among pupils lies with individual health authorities through the school health service. No specific advice is given to health authorities; it is for them to determine the policy for dealing with outbreaks of infestation in the light of local circumstances.

Every school has a named school nurse to advise and help on this problem. Many have stopped routine head inspections and are now adopting more positive practices through health education programmes and advice to parents on head lice infestation and how to deal with it. By increasing parental awareness, cases of infestation can be dealt with more promptly.

Abortions (Hemel Hempstead)

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions have been carried out at Hemel Hempstead general hospital in each of the last four calendar years; under which provisions of the Abortion Act they were carried out; and what was (a) the age and marital status of the mother, (b) gestational age of the foetus and (c) the abortion method used.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested cannot be released on the grounds of maintaining confidentiality. The readily available data for usual residents of North-West Hertfordshire district health authority are shown in the tables.

Hospices

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average length of time spent in a hospice by a terminally ill patient.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that the information is not available centrally.

Delta Te Immune Support Therapy

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the sale of Delta Te immune support therapy;

(2) what action is being taken under the Medicines Act 1968 to prohibit the sale of Delta Te immune support therapy;

(3) what representations his Department has received about the sale of Delta Te immune support therapy.

Mr. Mellor: The Department is pursuing inquiries into the supply of Delta Te promoted for the treatment of AIDS, and the managing director of the company concerned has been interviewed. Representations have been received from journal and television reporters, who are currently assisting our inquiries. The product has not been licensed for supply as a medicine in this country, so any sale as a medicine would be illegal. On the information that we have there is no evidence to support the claims being made for the substance. To prevent the sales of such products we shall not hesitate to take prosecution proceedings where, on legal advice, there is prima facie evidence that the terms of the Medicines Act have been breached.

South-East Thames RHA

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action the South-East Thames regional health authority will be taking on the basis of the recommendations of the report it commissioned by Touche Ross Management Consultants into the functions of the salaries and wages department in each of the local authorities in its region; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the cost to the South-East Thames regional health authority of the report it recently commissioned Touche Ross Management Consultants to undertake into the functions of the salaries and wages department in each of the local health authorities in its region.

Mr. Mellor: The report reviewed with district health authorities in the region the paymaster services carried out, covering both payroll and creditor payment functions.

The cost of the report is a matter for the regional health authority. I understand that action plans are being agreed between the region and the district health authorities and the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the regional health authority for more information.

Adverse Drug Reactions

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report those European Community directives which relate to the under-reporting of serious adverse drug reactions.

Mr. Mellor: We are not aware of any specific reference to the under-reporting of adverse drug reactions in the European Community directives concerned with medicinal products.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, Official Report, 2 March, column 319, what investigative action is taken when there is concern about possible under-reporting of serious adverse reactions.

Mr. Mellor: It depends upon the circumstances of the particular case. In general terms, such investigations would include scrutiny of all relevant documentation, obtaining the licence holder's response to salient issues and, where necessary, meetings and interviews with senior representatives of the licence holder.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, Official Report, 2 March, column 319, from what sources his Department has received information which has led to concern about possible under-reporting of serious adverse reactions.

Mr. Mellor: From a television programme, the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South himself and professional analysis by the licensing authority of data submitted by the licence holder in connection with other licensing matters.

Eye Tests

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will conduct an urgent national survey to ascertain the range of charges being made by opticians for eye tests.

Mr. Mellor: The Department hopes to survey various aspects of sight tests, probably later this year.

Immigration

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate where immigrants into the United Kingdom from the New Commonwealth and Pakistan for each year since 1970 have settled within the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 28 June 1989]: I regret that data are not available in the form requested. However, estimates of the numbers of people resident in Great Britain in 1986 and 1987 who were born in the New Commonwealth or Pakistan, and who were of West Indian, African, Indian, Pakistani or Bangladeshi ethnic origin are shown in the following tables.

One table gives these estimated numbers resident in Great Britain who had entered the United Kingdom in each year between 1970 and 1985. The other table gives these estimated numbers by standard region/country and metropolitan county of residence for those who had entered the United Kingdom between 1970 and 1985, inclusive.

These estimates have been obtained by grossing up the results of the 1986 and 1987 labour force surveys. More detailed analyses would be unreliable because of sampling variability.

Death Statistics

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the number of British people who die each year from diseases related to environmental pollution; and what are the Government's plans to reduce that number.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 4 July 1989]: There is no clear evidence that deaths occur as a result of current levels of pollution of the environment by man with chemical agents. Past exposure to high levels of air pollutants may still have some influence on current death rates, but discharges to the environment are now controlled so as to provide large safety margins or, in the case of substances potentially toxic at very low dose, by ensuring a very small risk.

There is no scientific basis for estimating the total impact of many substances occurring simultaneously in the environment at trace levels, but it is considered to be small compared with lifestyle factors such as smoking. The Government, on advice from a number of advisory committees, monitor for possible environmental causes of disease and will act to prevent or limit potentially harmful exposures whenever they are identified. In the meanwhile, the Government encourage prudence in the use of chemicals or potentially polluting technologies. In particular the Government are engaged in updating the arrangements for pollution control to ensure that these are integrated, wide-ranging and effective.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Acid Parties

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement of his policy towards the policing of acid parties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to questions from the hon. Member for Windsor and Maidenhead (Dr. Glyn) on 29 June, at columns 517-18.

Risley Remand Centre

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were transferred from Risley remand centre after the recent disturbances and roof top protests; how many of them were from Liverpool; where they were transferred to; and how many complaints have been received from prisoners or their representatives who have been transferred about their treatment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 255 prisoners were transferred to other prisons:

60 to Leeds
58 to Liverpool
41 to Manchester
35 to Durham
22 to Shrewsbury
20 to Preston
12 to Birmingham
7 to Hull

One of these prisoners has submitted a petition complaining about conditions at Risley and nine others have complained by petition and two by letters to hon. Members about matters related to their transfer. In addition, some transferred prisoners were among those who gave written or oral evidence to the inquiry into the disturbance at Risley.

To establish how many of the transferred prisoners were from Liverpool and how many made complaints about treatment in evidence to the inquiry would entail disproportionate cost. I am advised that when the disturbance started about 45 per cent. of those held in Risley were from Liverpool.

Football Matches

Mr. Eddie Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the figures of football-related arrests (a) for the season 1988-89 for all English clubs and (b) as a percentage of total attendances at football matches during that season.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the Association of Chief Police Officers is collating returns from police forces relating to arrests, ejections and attendances at all Football League matches in England and Wales during the 1988-89 season. These figures are expected to be available soon.

Immigration

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there are any plans afoot to improve the staffing situation at the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service office, based at the Scottish Office in Glasgow, to alleviate the delays in hearing immigration appeals in Scotland.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing to add to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) on 26 June at column 322.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Liverpool Passport Office

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to relocate the Liverpool passport office to an area of the country needing additional jobs.

Mr. Renton: I appreciate the concern and irritation felt generally as a result of recent strike action at the Liverpool passport office. There are, however, no current plans to relocate this office. As I indicated on 14 June in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson) at column 462 we shall be reviewing the location and number of the regional passport offices in general later this year.

West Midlands Police

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands as to what breaches of discipline have been alleged against Superintendent James Kelly; and what action has been taken.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that in October 1986 Detective Superintendent Kelly was charged with four offences of discreditable conduct and was reprimanded on each charge. He was not a member of the serious crime squad.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands as to on how many occasions complaints have been received against Detective Sergeant Michael Hornby; and what action has been taken in each case.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that a number of complaints have been recorded against detective sergeant Hornby since 1974. All the complaints have been fully investigated. In only one instance, in 1980, did he face formal disciplinary proceedings. Disciplinary records are destroyed after seven years.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands as to during which years Detective Sergeant Brian Morton and Detective Constables Martin Lambert and Graham Stephens were members of the West Midlands serious crime squad.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that detective sergeant Morton was a member of the serious crime squad from March 1973 until February 1976. Detective constables Lambert and Stephen were not members of the serious crime squad.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands as to how many of the officers involved in investigations into the Paul Dandy case were also involved in questioning those later convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that no officer was involved in the Paul Dandy case and also in questioning of those later convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands as to how many of the officers involved in investigations into the case of Mr. Ronnie Boldon were involved in questioning those later convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that one officer was involved in the Ronnie Boldon case and also in questioning of those later convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands as to what action was taken against the police officers responsible for assaulting junior Patrick Williams in connection with attempts to procure a confession.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that three officers were convicted at Birmingham crown court on 1 November 1983 of assault occasioning actual bodily harm. Detective sergeant Morton was sentenced to 12 months imprisonment (six months suspended for two years). Detective constables Stephen and Lambert were sentenced to nine months imprisonment (four and a half months suspended for two years). The officers subsequently faced disciplinary proceedings and were dismissed from the force on 4 November 1983.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands as to how many complaints have been received against officers of the West Midlands serious crime squad for each year since 1979; and what action has been taken in each case.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand form the chief constable of the West Midlands police that this information is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands on what action was taken against the officers responsible for obtaining a confession from Mr. Derek Gordon for a murder of which he was subsequently acquitted.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that an investigation into Mr. Gordon's complaint was conducted by a senior officer of the Metropolitan police in 1985 under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority. Two officers were subsequently charged with disciplinary offences and were fined. Other officers were given advice by their supervisory officers in connection with unsatisfactory standards of documentation.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands as to how many of the officers involved in investigations into the case of Derek Gordon were also involved in questioning those later convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that two officers were involved in the Derek Gordon case and also in the questioning of those later convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands as to how long police cadet Adrian Dart remained in the force after testifying against three of his colleagues convicted of trying to extort confessions by violence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that police constable Dart resigned from the West Midlands police force four months after three officers were convicted in November 1983 of assault occasioning actual bodily harm.

Hospital Patients (Voting)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider making arrangements for those admitted to hospital at short notice, who are registered on the appropriate electoral rolls, but do not have sufficient notice of their admission to vote by post, proxy or in person, to vote; what representations he has received about hospital patients being disfranchised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) on 21 June 1989 at column 131. Amendment of the regulations about absent voting so as to cover those unexpectedly admitted to hospital is one of the options that we are considering for easing the application procedures.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost to public funds of the security provided to Mr. Salman Rushdie; and when such security started.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: On 14 February 1989 the Metropolitan police decided to provide Mr. Rushdie with protection. This followed the threat to his life made by the Ayatollah Khomeini. It would not be sensible to disclose information about police protection which would indicate its scale in a particular case.

Football Grounds (Policing)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate his Department has made of the cost of policing football grounds in 1990-91.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made no such estimate. As to earlier years, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on 15 June at column 507.

Privacy

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is in a position to announce the name of the chairman and the terms of reference of the committee to review privacy and related matters.

Mr. Hurd: Mr. David Calcutt QC, Master of Magdalene college, Cambridge has accepted the offer of the chairmanship of the committee to review privacy and related matters. The terms of reference will be:

"In the light of recent public concern about intrusions into the private lives of individuals by certain sections of the press, to consider what measures (whether legislative or otherwise) are needed to give further protection to individual privacy from the activities of the press and improve recourse against the press for the individual citizen, taking account of existing remedies, including the law on defamation and breach of confidence; and to make recommendations."

A further announcement will be made about the membership of the committee. We understand that the chairman will meanwhile be issuing early invitations to submit evidence. We have asked the chairman to complete his report speedily.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of take-up by pensioners of (i) income support and (ii) housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesham and Amersham (Sir I. Gilmour) on 8 February at column 713.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of pensioners in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom who are in receipt of retirement pension and income support, for each year since 1981.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 June 1989]: The number of individuals in receipt of both retirement pension and supplementary benefit for each year since 1981 is as follows:

	Scotland (000s)	Great Britain (000s)
December 1981	141	1,643
December 1982	140	1,698
December 1983	134	1,565
December 1984	140	1,578
February 1986	137	1,599
May 1987	149	1,620

Source: Annual Statistical Enquiries 1981-1987.

Note: Figures for the United Kingdom are not available. The number of persons in receipt of both retirement pension and income support is not yet available.

Benefit Refusals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the Doncaster and Mexborough areas of South Yorkshire all the grounds of refusal of unemployment-related benefits in a manner consistent with the reporting of the chief adjudication officer; and if he will give the number of claims disallowed on each ground for the years 1978, 1983 and 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The grounds of refusal of unemployment-related benefits as listed by the chief adjudication officer in his annual report on adjudication standards are:

Grounds of refusal

1. that the day claimed for is a normal idle day for the employment for which the claimant is registered; that the claimant has worked to the full extent that is normal for that week;
2. that the claimant has left his employment voluntarily;
3. that the claimant has been dismissed from his employment because of misconduct;
4. that the claimant has payment in lieu of notice or remuneration;
5. that the claim to benefit was delayed;
6. that the claimant may not be regarded as unemployed;
7. [1]
8. that the claimant is not available for employment;
9. that the claimant is engaged in employment;
10. that the claimant is placing unreasonable restrictions on his availability for employment;
11. that the claimant has refused suitable employment;
12. that the claimant has terminated a course of training prematurely;
13. that the claimant is claiming for days of a recognised or customary holiday from his employment;
14. that the claimant is a seasonal worker;
15. other categories.

[1] The chief adjudication officer also includes in his list at column 7 "Dependency". This refers to claims made for dependency addition to unemployment benefit and is not a ground for refusal of unemployment benefit.

Notes:

Information about the number of claims for Supplementary Benefit disallowed on each ground is not held for the years 1978 and 1983. Details of Supplementary Benefit an Income Support claims disallowed in 1988 could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Information about the number of disallowed claims for Unemployment Benefit in the Doncaster and Mexborough areas of South Yorkshire is not available. However, the table shows the relevant figures for the Yorkshire and Humberside region, which includes Doncaster and Mexborough.

Family Credit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of families now in receipt of family credit living in areas covered by his Department's Social Security offices in (a) Doncaster and (b) Mexborough; and what were the figures for 12 months ago.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the end of June 1989 the number of families receiving family credit who, at the time their awards were made, were living in the areas covered by the relevant local social security offices was as follows:

	Number
Doncaster (East)	858
Doncaster (West)	553
Wath-on-Dearne	183

Comparable information for 12 months ago is not available.

Social Fund

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will announce the social fund allocation for the new office in New Malden and also the revised allocation for Kingston following the closure of Surbiton local office on 29 June.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 29 June 1989 a new local office in New Malden opened following the closure of Surbiton local office which also affected the boundaries for Kingston. Accordingly the social fund allocation for Kingston has been adjusted. The revised allocations effective from 29 June 1989 are:

	Loans £	Grants £
New Malden	62,213	29,006
Kingston	111,758	52,118

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the average waiting time for claimants' requests for a loan under the social fund to be processed in each social security benefit office in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 23 June 1989]: The table gives details for budgeting and crisis loans of the average clearance times achieved during May 1989.

Hospice Patients

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many questions there are on an income support application form; and how many of them would be relevant to a hospice patient.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Hospice patients will be asked to complete one of two claim forms, depending on their age. These forms contain, on average, some 170 questions. Although every question is relevant to the assessment of entitlement to income support, not all questions will be relevant to individual claimants. Hospice patients or their appointees, like other claimants, will be able to follow the clear signposting throughout the forms which indicate when questions or sections may be missed.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will establish procedures which provide that income support payments for accommodation could be paid directly to hospices when the recipient of the income support is a hospice patient.

Mr. Scott: There are already established procedures for the payment of income support direct to a hospice. These apply when a claimant who is liable for an accommodation charge has fallen into debt due to a failure to budget for that charge, and it is in the best interests of the claimant to make the payment direct.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to amend the regulations so that when hospice patients are awarded income support due to the additional costs, those payments are made from the date of entry to the hospice.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) in the last year for which figures are available, how many hospice patients became entitled to and received income support because of the additional cost of the hospice; and how many hospice patients continued to receive income support for which they had a previous entitlement;

(2) in the last year for which figures are available, how much income support was paid to hospice patients to help with their hospice costs;

(3) what estimates he has of the number of hospice patients who become eligible for income support on entering a hospice but do not receive it because they die before their claim is prepared and processed;

(4) what information he has on the proportion of hospice costs that are met by income support payments to hospice patients.

Mr. Scott: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. Income support is paid to terminally ill people according to the type of care they are receiving, and no distinction is made between hospices and nursing homes.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has for speeding up the process of application for income support for hospice patients.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no plans at present to institute special procedures for people claiming income support from hospices. The process of application for income support is designed to gather the required information to allow for the accurate assessment of benefit entitlement and payment in all cases, wherever the claimant is resident.

Income Support Forms

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated average time required to complete an income support application form.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No estimates have been made.

Mrs. S. E. Hart

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to pay Mrs. S. E. Hart of 21 Greenswood road, Brixham, Devon, the benefits, including widowed mother's allowance and child benefit, to which she is entitled, dating from 16 August 1983.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Mrs. Hart did not claim widow's benefit until 1988. That claim was backdated to 28 July 1987, the maximum period allowed under legislation. The position for the period before that is still being investigated and we will write to my hon. Friend as soon as these investigations are completed.

Mrs. Hart was in receipt of child benefit and one parent benefit from 1983 until her younger child left school.

Disabled Persons

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out in detail the benefits including telephone, travel, car, rates, etc., from public funds available to a registered disabled person over 90 years of age in receipt of a combined state and private pension totalling £68 per week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The help available to a registered disabled person will vary according to the individual's needs and circumstances, and it is not possible to give the information requested. If my hon. Friend has a particular case in mind, he may wish to write to me so that the relevant details can be provided.

Child Benefit

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from British citizens, temporarily absent from the United Kingdom but liable to pay income tax in the United Kingdom, that their children should remain entitled to child benefit during their absence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There have been no recent representations.

People temporarily absent solely because they are in employment outside Great Britain can receive child benefit if at least half their earnings from their employment are liable to United Kingdom income tax.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what he ascribes the fact that the staff effort required to process each application to the housing benefit transitional payments unit was three times as great as had been expected.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 3 July at column 40-41.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will instruct the housing benefit transitional payments unit to accept late applications.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Late applications will be considered by the transitional payments unit if there are good reasons for the delay.

Single Parents

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will introduce measures to enable single mothers to compel financial support from the fathers concerned who are unwilling to make voluntary contributions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Arrangements for single mothers to obtain maintenance orders for their children are the responsibility of the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Home Office. Two measures introduced this year will enable more mothers to obtain maintenance. First, the time limit for starting proceedings has been abolished, and second, DNA testing is available to determine paternity where it is in dispute.

When a mother claims income support the Department tries to obtain a contribution from the father, and can take proceedings if he refuses to make payments which he can afford. However, the Government are concerned that more fathers should meet their responsibility to support their children. We have therefore introduced revised procedures to make this work more effective.

Council House Tenants

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has as to the additional level of benefit entitlement (a) single and (b) married council tenants would receive if their only source of income was the basic state retirement pension, based on the average council house rent and rates in (a) England (b) Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 May 1989]: Information is not available in the exact form requested. However, taking the average council house rent and rates in England and Wales for people with no dependent children, additional income-related benefit for people whose only income is the basic state retirement pension, is set out in the tables.

Table A. Until October 1989

	England and Wales
	Basic RP	Income support	Rent rebate	Rate rebate
	£	£	£	£
Single pensioner aged less than 80	43·60	2·50	17·90	6·32
Single pensioner aged 80 or over	43·85	4·75	17·90	6·32
Pensioner couple, both aged less than 80	69·80	2·05	17·90	6·32
Pensioner couple, both aged 80 or over	70·30	4·00	17·90	6·32
Table B. From October 1989
Single pensioner aged less than 75	43·60	2·50	17·90	6·32
Single pensioner aged 75 to 79	43·60	5·00	17·90	6·32
Single pensioner aged 80 or over	43·85	7·25	17·90	6·32
Pensioner couple, both aged less than 75	69·80	2·05	17·90	6·32
Pensioner couple, at least one aged 75 to 79	69·80	5·55	17·90	6·32
Pensioner couple, both aged 80 or over	70·30	7·50	17·90	6·32

Notes:
1. For the pensioner couples it is assumed that the wife's retirement pension is based on her husband's contributions.
2. No savings over £3,000: no non-dependants; no ineligible items included in rent and rates.
3. From October 1989, an additional pensioner premium will be in force in both housing benefit and income support. This will increase IS entitlement by up to £2·50 a week for single pensioners and £3·50 for couples.
4. All the examples show people entitled to income support. They are, therefore, entitled to maximum housing benefit, which is 100 per cent. of eligible rent and 80 per cent. of eligible rates.

Loans and Community Care Grants

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East of 25 May, Official Report, column 683, and 12 June, Official Report, columns 282-83, he will list the percentages of (a) budgeting loans and (b) community care grants which were awarded to each of the 15 client groups defined by his Department for each of the 21 offices serving the West Midlands county area for the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 June 1989]: The information requested in set out in the table for 23 offices in the West Midlands county area (excluding Coventry). The relevant information for the Coventry offices is given in my reply to the hon. Member on 15 June at columns 531-32.

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Pensions (Housing Benefit)

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will review his policy in relation to war pensions and housing benefit so that local authorities which disregard war pensions when making their assessment would be recompensed from central funds;

(2) what is his estimate of the savings to public funds which he makes by not disregarding war pensions when housing benefit is assessed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 4 July 1989]: When assessing housing benefit local authorities must statutorily disregard £5 of a war widow's pension or a war disablement pension. They receive direct subsidy for the housing benefit arising from this normal calculation.

Where local authorities operate local schemes by which they disregard further amounts of war pensions, the resulting extra housing benefit does not qualify for housing benefit subsidy. The balance is a charge on local rate or community charge payers.

It is estimated that the cost of disregarding war pensions in full would increase public expenditure on housing benefit and community charge benefit by some £40 million. However, support is reflected in the rate support grant for the discretionary schemes operated by local authorities. The resulting net cost of about £30 million would be of very little benefit to the poorest war pensioners, but give considerable extra sums to some who are relatively well off.

Ms. N. Hinchcliffe

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the appeal (CSB1605188) to the Social Security Commissioner on a point of law over the refusal of a single payment for bedding lodged on 21 May 1987 in respect of Ms. N. Hinchcliffe will be heard.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

A Commissioner made a determination in this case on 28 June 1989 and copies of that determination were sent to the parties on 30 June 1989. The Commissioner made his determination on the papers, no oral hearing having been requested.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many visits there have been by the Health and Safety Executive to employment training (a) projects and (b) work placements since its inception in September 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: Health and Safety Executive records do not separately identify inspection to workplaces where employment training participants are present. For the purposes of health and safety legislation, employment training participants have all the same rights and duties as employees.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to encourage more private employers to provide employment training work placements.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department through its marketing campaigns, and training managers through their local contacts, continue to forge links with employers to make them aware of the advantages of ET and to encourage them to offer training opportunities.

Repetitive Strain Injury

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Oxford, East on 4 April, Official Report, column 38, when he expects the Health and Safety Executive to conclude its investigation into repetitive strain injury.

Mr. Nicholls: The main results of the project investigating repetitive strain injury at the Institute of Occupational Medicine in Edinburgh were published by the institute in January 1989. I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library. A small follow-up study of keyboard operators is still in progress and it is hoped that the results will be available in September this year. The project at the university of Birmingham is also expected to report this September.

VDU Operators

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to respond to the recommendations of the Health and Safety Executive in respect of the health and safety of visual display unit operators.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive has not made any recent recommendations on this subject.

Employment Rehabilitation Centres

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 14 June, Official Report, column 436, he will list the factors which have caused the proportion of expenditure on employment rehabilitation centres reimbursed by the European social fund to fall from 42 per cent. in 1985 to 13 per cent. in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 3 July 1989]: The main factors underlying this reduction have been a growth in the total volume of claims on the fund by all member states, resulting in the progressive scaling down of the proportion of successful United Kingdom claims, and changes in the eligibility rules.

SCOTLAND

National Health Service Reform

18. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the hospitals which have expressed an interest in opting out.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have not yet asked hospitals to make any formal expressions of interest in becoming self-governing. I shall be doing so shortly at the same time as I issue more detailed information on what is involved.

47. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received supporting the opting out of hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have received a number of representations on this subject. Many support our aims but have raised questions on points of detail. I shall be issuing further guidance shortly.

42. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospitals he expects to show interest in opting out.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The White Paper indicates that we expect at least two hospitals to become self-governing by 1992.

33. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the first hospital to opt out of health board control.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The White Paper "Working for Patients" and the Scottish working paper 3 on "Self-Governing Hospitals" made it clear that we hope to establish at least two self-governing hospitals by 1992.

29. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions he has given to health boards concerning opt-out hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No instructions have been given to health boards. Scottish working paper 3 "Self-Governing Hospitals" gave information on self-governing status. I shall issue more detailed guidance shortly, inviting those who wish to explore this possibility to express their interest to me.

COSLA

20. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement with regard to the issues which he expects to raise at the next meeting between himself and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend and I met representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on Monday 3 July, when they let us have their views on the revenue support grant settlement for 1990-91 and other related matters.

I hope to meet the convention again in the autumn to discuss grant distribution, and such other matters as may by then be appropriate.

CBI

21. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of the Confederation of British Industry in Scotland; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend and I are in frequent touch with the Confederation of British Industry in Scotland on matters affecting the Scottish economy and industry. We look forward to a continuing exchange of views.

Unemployment

22. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the fall in unemployment in Scotland over the last 12 months.

46. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the underlying trend in unemployment in Scotland over the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: In Scotland, the number of unemployed claimants has fallen by 45,000 over the past 12 months and by almost 90,000 in the last two years. Unemployment has now fallen for 25 months in succession and is now at its lowest level for eight years.

Business Rates

23. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many responses he has had from the business community in Scotland following his speech on business rates in Glasgow on 8 May.

Mr. Lang: Representatives of 13 business organisations have written to my right hon. and learned Friend. All have welcomed his announcement warmly.

AIDS

24. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of prisoners in penal establishments in Scotland who have been diagnosed as suffering from AIDS or are carriers of the disease; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The most recent survey, conducted on 20 April 1989, showed that six inmates in Scottish penal establishments were suffering from AIDS or AIDS-related complex, and 70 were known to be HIV positive. These figures are comparable with those obtained from surveys conducted during 1988, and are monitored on a regular basis.

Crash Barriers

25. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in the installation of crash barriers on Scottish dual carriageways.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: By the end of this financial year at least 90 km, 39 per cent., of the trunk road motorway network and 143 km, 33 per cent., of trunk road dual carriageways will be equipped with central reserve safety fences or will not require such provision due to the wide separation of the carriageways.

High-Rise Flats

26. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to provide extra finance for improving high-rise flats.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: For 1989-90 we have made available £474 million for capital investment in local authority houses; this is an increase of £28·8 million or 6·5 per cent. on the resources announced in March last year. It is for individual authorities as landlords to determine their own policies and priorities for their housing stock and to draw up capital programmes for investment, including any plans for work on high-rise flats.

Drug Abuse

27. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what special resources he plans to make available to the police and appropriate agencies in order to alleviate the social problems which emanate from drug abuse in the city of Glasgow.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government's strategy to combat drug misuse and the specific measures that are being taken are described in the publication "Tackling Drug Misuse—A Summary of the Government's Strategy" (Third Edition, 1988), copies of which are in the Library.

The deployment of police resources is a matter for chief constables. Strathclyde police attaches a very high priority to tackling drug misuse. Since 1979 the force's drug squad, which is based at Glasgow, has been increased from 18 to 34 officers. In addition, since 1986 we have authorised increases totalling 31 officers in the strength of the Scottish crime squad to allow the formation of drugs wings, one of which is based at Glasgow.

As for other agencies, the sum allocated to Greater Glasgow health board for the support of drug misuse services in 1989-90 is £466,861. In addition, from 1989-90 we are making available to health boards generally a further £1 million per annum for the development of these services. The provision of such services is, however, primarily the responsibility of health boards and local authorities.

Electricity Bills

28. Mr. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what authority the South of Scotland electricity board demands repayment of electricity bills which have been estimated due to faulty meters.

Mr. Lang: The South of Scotland electricity board, in accordance with the provisions of the Electricity Supply Acts 1882 to 1936 and the schedule to the Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act 1899, or on the basis of contract, is entitled to charge for electricity which it supplies. In addition, the board relies in appropriate circumstances on section 51 of the South of Scotland Electricity Order Confirmation Act 1956, as amended, for recovery of damage caused to meters. Assessed accounts are issued to seek payment for a supply of electricity which is unrecorded because of a faulty or damaged meter, in accordance with the board's conditions for supply of electricity, and the board has confirmed that this approach has found acceptance in the courts. Moreover, the board has a clear responsibility to seek payment in this way since otherwise the cost would be borne by the general body of its consumers.

Community Charge

30. Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has recently received regarding the impact of the standard community charge in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

36. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the standard community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of such representations.

53. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many changes have been made to the poll tax register in the Strathclyde region since the beginning of 1989.

Mr. Lang: It is the responsibility of community charge registration officers to maintain the community charge registers and the information requested is not held centrally.

39. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of those required to register for the community charge in Scotland have done so; and what percentage of those liable to pay the charge have begun to make payments.

Mr. Lang: It is estimated that almost 99 per cent. of the adult population has been registered. It will be some while before reliable information becomes available from local authorities on payment levels.

Tourism

31. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of tourists from England who visit Scotland; what percentage this is of the total number of visitors to Scotland; and how much they contribute to Scotland's economy.

35. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many tourists visited Scotland over the last 10 years; and what percentage of the total number originated from England.

Mr. Lang: Information for the most recent years for which final figures are available is set out in the following table.

Year	Domestic and Overseas Visitors to Scotland (millions)	Visitors to Scotland from England (millions)	Visitors from England as percentage of total	£ million expenditure by Visitors from England

Gaelic Television

32. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met with Comunn na Gaidhlig to discuss Gaelic television.

Mr. Rifkind: I met representatives of Comunn na Gaidhlig on 17 April to discuss their views on the future of Gaelic broadcasting. My officials have had a further meeting with the council since then.

Development Agency

34. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total expenditure by the Scottish Development Agency since its inception.

Mr. Lang: Taking account of provisional expenditure for 1988-89, the Scottish Development Agency had spent at the end of March a total of £1,304 million in the period since it was formed.

37. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of the Scottish Development Agency; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply by my right hon. and learned Friend to the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. McKelvey) earlier today.

Local Councillors

38. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received concerning the practice of local councillors holding local authority employment in local authorities in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Thirty-four of those who responded to consultation about the Widdicombe report expressed views on this subject, as did seven of those who commented on the Government's response to that report or on the relevant provisions in the Local Government and Housing Bill. In addition, two individuals have made representations about the way in which they would be affected by those provisions.

Deep Coal Mining

40. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact on the Scottish economy of the run down in the deep coal mining industry.

Mr. Lang: The Government are continuing to keep the situation in the deep coal mining industry, including the impact of the rundown on the Scottish economy, under close review.

Forestry

41. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what impact the recent tax changes relating to the forestry industry have had upon the levels of tree planting.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to him on 9 May 1989, Official Report, column 332.

Local Government Services

43. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further progress local authorities in Scotland are making with regard to contracting out of local government services.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities remain fully engaged in implementing the competition provisions of the Local Government Act 1988. The first round of work won in competition has to be under way by 1 August this year with further rounds by 1 January and 1 August in subsequent years.

From the information available it would appear that so far local authorities have themselves been winning contracts in most cases. Where any anti-competitive practice has been alleged my officials are following up the cases with the local authorities concerned.

New Towns

44. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of the Scottish new towns.

Mr. Lang: The Government have now completed their consideration of the issues affecting the future of the Scottish new towns, and our conclusions and proposals will be set out in a White Paper within the next few weeks.

General Practitioner

45. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the increase in the number of general practitioners since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of general medical practitioners in Scotland has risen from 2,921 in 1979 to 3,353 (provisional) in 1988. The corresponding figures for general dental practitioners are 1,204 and 1,523 (provisional).

Hospital Waiting Lists

48. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement on the waiting lists for (a) hip, (b) ear, nose and throat, and (c) varicose vein operations in Scottish hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Waiting list figures are not collected centrally for individual types of operation, but the all-Scotland waiting lists in the relevant specialties of orthopaedic, ENT and general surgery fell by 6 per cent., 15 per cent. and 7 per cent. respectively between March and September 1988. In Lanarkshire the reductions were 13 per cent., 27 per cent. and 28 per cent. respectively. Our wide-ranging waiting list initiatives in 1988-89 have made a substantial contribution to these reductions and the allocation of £3 million helped health boards to treat an extra 8,800 inpatients in the year to March 1989. For 1989-90 I have already allocated £6·5 million of the £7 million which I made available and health boards have set themselves a target to see or treat an extra 26,000 outpatients, 17,250 inpatients and 1,800 day cases. This is in addition to the action which boards themselves are continuing to take to increase the number of patients treated. The biggest allocations have been for orthopaedic and general surgery.

Employment Prospects

49. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to visit Glasgow, Rutherglen constituency to discuss employment prospects.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to visit the Glasgow, Rutherglen constituency.

Inward Investment

50. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's performance regarding the attraction of inward investment to Scotland since 1979.

Mr. Lang: Since 1979 Scotland has enjoyed very significant success as a location for inward investment thanks to Government policies which have re-established the United Kingdom as a place in which enterprise is welcome and can flourish, and to the effectiveness of the one-door approach to inward investment operated by Locate in Scotland since it was set up in 1981.

Fishing Industry

51. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to give immediate aid to the Scottish fishing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Current difficulties in the fishing industry reflect the inevitable consequences of having to cut quotas to secure future stocks and prosperity. It would not be appropriate to provide any immediate financial aid to the industry which has had several successful years under the common fisheries policy.

Nirex

52. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met senior officials from Nirex; and what was discussed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend and the Secretary of State for the Environment met officials of the executive on 15 March 1989 to discuss their report to the Government on sites for investigation for the deep disposal of low and intermediate-level radioactive wastes.

Business Grants

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many companies in receipt of a cash grant from his Department to establish a business in Scotland have discontinued such business within five years of establishment.

Mr. Lang: Information in the form requested is not available. However, it is possible to provide some figures for companies which have received regional selective assistance. Since the introduction of the current guidelines for RSA in November 1984, eight companies which received RSA towards establishing new businesses in Scotland are known to have discontinued such business. These companies receive some £346,000. Recovery of grant is pursued in appropriate cases. By comparison, there have been 91 projects in total which have received RSA to establish new businesses in Scotland over the same period, with associated grant payments to date of £19·2 million.

Football Matches (Arrests)

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the figures of football-related arrests for all Scottish clubs (a) for the seasons 1987-88 and 1988-89 and (b) as a percentage of total attendances at football matches during those seasons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information set out in the table relates to arrests within Scottish league grounds at league and cup matches.

Season	Number of arrests	Percentage of attendance
1987-88	845	0·0163
1988-89	806	0·0169

Central Legal Office

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he or any of his health board general managers has made any proposals for the services provided by the central legal office to be put out to competitive tendering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At the request of the Scottish Home and Health Department, the Common Services Agency, of which the central legal office is part, will shortly put out to tender certain conveyancing and related work.

Consultancy Fees

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each financial year since 1983-84 the amount spent by each health board on consultancy fees at 1983-84 constant prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available from the annual accounts of health boards relates to the total of fees paid by health boards to management consultants, legal firms, other than for legal expenses connected with compensation claims, and to work study consultants. The amounts for each health board are shown in the table. Expenditure for 1984-85 onwards has been converted to 1983-84 prices using the gross domestic product deflator.

Elderly People (Long-term Care)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the proposed provision of long-term care for the elderly at Rutherglen hospital by Takare plc was put out to competitive tendering.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Greater Glasgow health board has not made any final decision on the provision of long-term care for the elderly in the south-east of Glasgow.

Additionality

8. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 3 May, Official Report, column 163, what were the rules on additionality under (a) regulation No. 724/75, (b) regulation No. 1787/84 and (c) regulation No. 4253/88; and what steps he is taking to ensure genuine additionality at the regional level, in accordance with article 9 of regulation 4253/88.

Mr. Lang: Article 9 of regulation 4253/88 calls for the increase in the size of the European Community structural funds to have a genuine additional economic impact in the regions concerned and to result in at least an equivalent increase in the total of public structural aid in the member state concerned. There were no analagous articles in the previous regulations, but they contained provisions about grants supplementing or partially reimbursing national aids.

The impact of the funds in Scotland is clear. Grants are paid to a wide range of local authorities and other bodies, saving them up to 50 per cent. of the cost of qualifying projects. This will continue to be the case, as it has been in the past.

Glenochil Prison (Security Equipment)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the value of security and surveillance equipment supplied to Her Majesty's prison Glenochil and attached establishments in the years 1986 to 1989 to the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: From 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1989 the sum spent on security and surveillance equipment in Her Majesty's prison Glenochil was £59,416·14. Over the same period the sum of £650,181·20 was spent on such equipment specifically for other establishments run by the Scottish prison service.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the procedures for ordering security and surveillance equipment at Her Majesty's prison Glenochil and attached establishments; what were these procedures in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Home and Health Department has a central purchasing policy for security and surveillance equipment to be acquired through its prison building division. The procedures involve multiple tendering. These procedures apply to all establishments and were in force in 1986. In exceptional circumstances, single tender action can be implemented provided that it complies with the rules of public accounting.

Princes Street (Traffic Regulations)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the proposal of Lothian regional council to amend traffic regulations on Princes street, Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under schedule 9, part II of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984, my right hon. and learned Friend is considering Lothian regional council's proposals to facilitate the flow of vehicular traffic on Princes street, Edinburgh, by increasing the restricted hours for waiting, loading and unloading to 24 hours of every day and the prohibited hours to 8 am to 6 pm of every day subsequent to the widening of the north footway. The order includes provisions to facilitate orange badge holders' parking in streets adjacent to Princes street following the removal of the present facility to park on Princes street as a result of footway widening and additional waiting restrictions.

Thirteen representations have been received on this subject. These fall broadly into three categories: (a) objections from disabled people about the exclusion of orange badge holders from Princes street; (b) objections from traders in Princes street about loading/unloading difficulties; (c) objections from people anticipating the possible future complete pedestrianisation of Princes street.

Full consideration is being given to all the representations I have received. I hope to give my decision soon.

Red List Substances (Salmon Farming)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources are being made available to the river purification boards to enable them to fulfil their duty to monitor red list substances including dichlorous in the light of the growth rate of the salmon farming industry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for each river purification board to set annual expenditure in line with its duties, including those relating to the proposed red list, and the necessary resources are obtained by requisition on the regional councils whose areas lie wholly or partly in the area of the board.

British Steel

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of British Steel; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend met the chairman of British Steel on 26 October 1988. A number of matters of current interest were discussed.

Community Charge

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the operation of the standard community charge.

Mr. Rifkind: I have received a number of such representations.

Prisons (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has considered the report by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons for Scotland into conditions and arrangements for accommodating persons detained in Scottish prisons under the Immigration Act 1971 and members of ethnic minority groups.

Mr. Rifkind: I am today publishing my statement in response to this report. Copies of both are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Torness

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the estimated annual marginal costs to the Scottish electricity boards in 1989-90 of generating the equivalent output of Torness by burning Scottish coal in existing Scottish power stations.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 4 July 1989]: Information on the Scottish electricity boards' estimated generation costs for the current financial year is commercially sensitive and confidential to the boards.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the estimated annual interest charges to the Scottish electricity boards from the construction of Torness nuclear power station.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 4 July 1989]: The Scottish electricity boards' total assets are financed by a combination of internally generated funds, borrowings and current liabilities, none of which attaches to individual assets. It is therefore not possible to attribute specific loans or interest charges to Torness nuclear power station.

Shipbuilding (Redundancies)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of redundancies in the shipbuilding and shiprepair industries in Strathclyde during the period 1 January 1979 to 31 December 1988.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 30 June 1989]: Information is not available in the precise form requested. There are no comprehensive statistics on redundancies. The number of redundancies involving 10 or more workers confirmed to the Department of Employment—the Training Agency —as having occurred in Strathclyde region in the shipbuilding and shiprepairing industry between 1 January 1979 and 31 December 1988 was 11,303.

Central Excavations Unit

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been employed by the Scottish Development Department's central excavations unit and its successor body on short-term contracts for periods of more than two years; and why such people have not been offered full-time employment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 June 1989]: In the four years 1985-86 to 1988-89 there have been no contracts of more than two years. No individual contract has been for more than 156 working days, and only five contracts have been for more than 100 working days.

Information on contracts before 1985 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will relieve village and parish halls of liability to value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell) on 4 July at column 88.

124. Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of new value added tax registrations for businesses with registered addresses in south-east Cambridgeshire for the calendar years 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989 to date.

Mr. Lilley: The local VAT office at Harlow covers not only south-east Cambridgeshire, but the area bounded by Harlow, Hertford, Royston, Ely and Saffron Walden. The number of new VAT registrations processed by that office for each of the years in question were:

Year	New registrations
1985	2,219

Mr. Lilley: The annual increase was 4·9 per cent. in 1987-88 and 7·2 per cent. in 1988-89. No forecast has been published for 1989-90 but a target range of 1 to 5 per cent. was set in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Debt

127. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's funding policy on the national debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The Government's funding policy is described in paragraph 2.23 to 2.26 of the 1989-90 "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

132. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the minimum time taken for a United Kingdom customs cutter in hot pursuit of a suspect vessel to obtain clearance to enter (a) French, (b) Belgian and (c) German territorial waters; and if he will make a statement on these arrangements.

Mr. Lilley: Customs and Excise has a memorandum of understanding with the French Customs specifying contact points and the procedures to be followed while operating in each other's waters. Customs has similar close co-operation with other EC countries and has good lines of communication with both the Belgian and German authorities. Clearance for operating in their territorial waters can thus be arranged quickly, usually by telephone.

154. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of civil servants above the level of principal are women; and what was the proportion in 1979.

Mr. Lawson: At 1 January 1989, 9 per cent. of non-industrial civil servants above grade 7 level were women. This compares with 5½ per cent. at 1 April 1979.

Economic Policy

165. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from institutions in the City of London about United Kingdom economic policy.

HEALTH

National Health Service Reform

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his estimates of the extra numbers of accountants required to carry out the new auditing systems proposed in the White Paper "Working for Patients"; and whether these will be funded from existing funds or from an additional special fund.

Mr. Mellor: We expect that staff currently auditing the NHS will transfer to the Audit Commission, as proposed in "Working for Patients". Additional funding has been agreed for this financial year for 22 staff with expertise in various aspects of value for money auditing and for five trainees for general audit work. Future staffing and funding needs are being considered.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any extra consultant posts will be created as a result of consultants' additional duties in carrying out auditing work following National Health Service reforms.

Mr. Mellor: The commitment to medical audit in the White Paper will involve some use of consultants' time. Out of the extra £32 million given to assist in the implementation of the Government proposals for the Health Service this year, an additional £2 million has been allocated to assist in the development of medical audit.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what training will be available to general practitioners on budget management as proposed in his White Paper.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State gave to my hon. Friend for Northampton, South (Mr. Morris) on 8 May at columns 319-20.

Cervical Smears

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are made in (a) the Eccles constituency, (b) the city of Salford, (c) Greater Manchester and (d) the north-west region for cervical cancer smear tests for women up to the age of 30 years, 30 to 40 years, 40 to 50 years, 50 to 60 years and over 60 years of age; if he will provide the figures for these tests and these age groups for 1970, 1975, 1980, 1985 and 1988; what new proposals on these tests have been made by the North West regional health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold data for the Eccles constituency and the city of Salford centrally in the form requested. Data for North Western regional health authority and Greater Manchester is provided in the table.

[1] There were boundary changes between 1970 and 1975. This figure relates to the Manchester region.

The national cervical cancer screening programme will provide screening for women aged 20 to 64. Health authorities are making arrangements to invite all eligible women for screening within five years of introduction of each district's computerised call and recall system. All districts in England commenced their programme by April 1988.

Opting Out

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulations or guidance exist to govern the balloting of consultants on opting out; and whether these were applied in the recent ballot at Queen's medical centre, Nottingham.

Mr. Mellor: None, although we have made it clear that when the time comes for formal application, it would not be sensible for RHAs to organise ballots of staff or any other groups with an interest.

NHS Grading

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much Southampton district health authority was underfunded for the purposes of nurses regrading.

Mr. Mellor: The Government met the full cost of funding the nurse regrading exercise, based upon regional health authorities' own estimates of the costs. This is therefore a matter for the regional health authority and my hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman, Mr. Buchanan, for such information as he requires.

Nurses (Retraining)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how long he estimates it will take to retrain all state enrolled nurses who have currently expressed an interest in retraining in each health authority in England and Wales;

(2) what moneys he intends to make available to the health authorities for state enrolled nurses to undergo conversion courses.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has given an assurance that the Government regard enrolled nurse conversion and plans for safeguarding the continued contribution of those who do not convert as an integral part of the implementation of the Project 2000 reforms of nurse education and training. Thirteen Project demonstration districts have submitted plans for enrolled nurse conversion, and funding has been made available to those districts. The overall timetable for the national implementation of Project 2000 has not yet been decided.

The number of training institutions approved to conduct conversion courses has increased from six in 1985-86 to 138 in December 1988. We welcome the guidance which has been issued by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing Midwifery and Health Visiting on more flexible means of conversion.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many state enrolled nurses have been accepted for retraining this year in each health authority in England and Wales;

(2) what is the current size of the list of state enrolled nurses waiting to be retrained by each health authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect this information for England centrally. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Accident and Emergency Services

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his answer of 27 June, Official Report, column 424, how he intends that district health authorities should be responsible for securing accident and emergency services in their districts where regional health authorities refuse any accident and emergency service provision for that district.

Mr. Mellor: All district health authorities will be responsible for seeing that contracts are in place which ensure that their residents have access to comprehensive health services, including accident and emergency provision. It will be the responsibility of regional health authorities to monitor the performance of their districts to secure this objective. Regions' performance of this role (and others) will be monitored by the NHS management executive.

Smoking

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters from individuals his Department received about smoking in the workplace in the last 12 month period and in the immediately preceding 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In the 12 months ending on 30 June 1989 the Department received 54 letters on this subject, nine of which had been forwarded by Members of Parliament.

The corresponding figures for the 12 months ending on 30 June 1988 were 480 and 42.

Tobacco

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will be discussing the continued existence of the Health Promotion Research Trust in his current negotiations with the tobacco industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Funding for the Health Promotion Research Trust does not figure in the formal voluntary agreements with the tobacco industry which we hope shortly to renegotiate. However, the trust has undertaken much valuable work since its creation in 1984. Careful consideration will therefore need to be given to its future as the industry's agreed contributions will cease at the end of this financial year.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship receives audited reports of expenditure on advertising from the United Kingdom tobacco companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Under the voluntary agreement with the tobacco industry on tobacco products' advertising and promotion, and health warnings, the Tobacco Advisory Council and the Imported Tobacco Products Advisory Council provide the Department with confidential quarterly returns of net cigarette brand and hand rolling tobacco advertising expenditure data for press and posters. The position is then reported to the committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship.

Speech Therapists

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the grades of speech therapists in England, Wales and Scotland following the regrading under HSS(TC7)3188 broken down by area board, showing the percentage in each grade before regrading and the percentage after.

Mr. Mellor: We do not have the information in the form requested, but the tables show the percentage of speech therapists in each grade in regional health authorities in England at 30 September 1989. The information relating to Wales and Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. The position by English region is as follows:

Cytogeneticists (Salaries)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average salary in each of the last 10 years for a cytogeneticist with a PhD or MSc in (a) Greater London and (b) Manchester.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the pay increases for cytogeneticists in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: Cytogeneticists have received the same increases each year as physicists, biochemists and clinical psychologists. The percentage increases in the pay round year 1 August to 31 July for the last ten years are as follows:

	Percentage
1978-79	27·0
1979-80	14·0

1986-87	5·0
1987-88	5·5

[1]This figure represents an increase implemented with effect from 11 September 1982 to cover a two year period.

Natural Medicines

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has plans to introduce regulations to outlaw the sale of natural, herbal and homeopathic medicines and drugs other than through a pharamaceutical outlet to bring the United Kingdom into line with other EEC countries.

Mr. Mellor: We have no such plans at present. The European Community is committed to directives on homeopathic medicines and conditions of supply of medicines to the public, but specific proposals have not yet been submitted to the Council of Ministers. When EC proposals are published, we shall consider them carefully for compatibility with United Kingdom traditions and communicate with interested parties as to the United Kingdom input to negotiations.

Haemoglobinopathy

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report the results of his survey of haemoglobinopathy services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The analysis of district health authorities' responses to the Department's request for information on screening and counselling services for sickle cell and thalassaemic diseases in nearing completion. When the completed analysis has been studied, I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he has proposed to co-ordinate the activities of the haemoglobinopathy charities; what plans he has for further action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Officials of the Department separately met representatives of three of the national voluntary organisations concerned in September 1988 to discuss the possibility of a national umbrella body to co-ordinate the activities of the haemoglobinopathy charities. The voluntary bodies concerned expressed doubts about the usefulness of such a body. In view of the expressed lack of interest we have no plans to proceed further with these proposals.

Drug Costs

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be able to make available the net ingredient cost of prescriptions using the names of the products dispensed by pharmacy contractors in 1988; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Mellor: We do not expect to have the information requested until October 1989 at the earliest. When it becomes available a copy will be placed in the Library.

Ancillary Staff

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the total numbers of ancillary staff employed in each district and regional health authority.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 14 June 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 4 July.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of agricultural land have been set aside under the European Economic Community scheme in each member state for the current year.

Mr. Ryder: The information for the 11 member states required to implement the scheme is as follows:

Morecambe Bay (Shellfish)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he has not designated shellfish waters in Morecambe bay under the provisions of European Community directive 79/923/EEC.

Mr. Howard: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 20 February 1989 to the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts), Official Report, column 496.

Fylde Coast (Sewage Outfall)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contacts his Department has had with the North West water authority over its proposals to construct a long sea outfall at Rossall point on the Fylde coast.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Officials were informed of the North West water authority's work at an early stage. Before plans were drawn up the Ministry were asked to provide information about fisheries in the Fylde coast area. After consultation with local fisheries organisations this information was provided with a view to seeking to ensure that interference with fisheries was avoided. The Ministry sought from the authority information about the possible locations of the discharge and the nature and likely effect of the effluent. The authority gave a detailed presentation of the results of its studies of the various options and explained the reasons for the preferred option, and the Ministry has clarified further points of detail. The Ministry has since been formally consulted under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 on the proposed outfall.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the potential for hydro transportion of sediment-associated viruses from the proposed long sea outfall in to the Lyne deep from Rossall point on the Fylde coast to shell fisheries in Morecambe bay and adjoining coastlines.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Based on the design characteristics of the proposed outfall, the location of the shellfisheries and experience with viral-related shellfish contamination elsewhere, the Ministry does not expect sediment transport of viruses to present a problem. To demonstrate that no problem occurs the Ministry have recommended to North West water authority that, if the outfall is constructed, monitoring of the microbiological quality of relevant shellfish stocks be undertaken before and after discharge commences.

Intervention Stores

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total amount of wheat, beef and olive oil which is stockpiled (i) in the United Kingdom and (ii) in the European Economic Community as a whole, in (a) 1989, (b) 1984 and (c) 1979; and what was the total cost of storage and maintaining these for 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The table shows the total amount of wheat, beef and olive oil held in public intervention stores in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) the European Community in 1979, 1984 and 1989. EC stocks of beef and wheat reached peak levels of 711 and 11,843 thousand tonnes respectively in 1985. The current levels of EC beef and wheat stocks represent reductions of 53 per cent. and 82 per cent. respectively from the peak levels.

Commodity	[2]United Kingdom stocks '000 tonnes			[3]EC stock '000 tonnes
	1979	1984	1989	1979	1984	1989

Beef	11	10	21	161	295	331
Olive Oil	n/a	Nil	Nill	n/a	185	259

The cost of storing and maintaining these stocks during 1988 was:

Beef	382	36
Olive Oil	11	0
Total	833	110

[1] Includes durum wheat. No intervention for durum wheat in the United Kingdom.
[2] End April.
[3] End April, except for olive oil in 1984 (end March).
[4] Separate breakdown for wheat not available.
[5] Expenditure charged to the 1988 budget relates to expenditure during the period November 1987 to October 15 1988.

Tenderising Enzymes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he plans to introduce legislation prohibiting the administration of meat tenderising enzymes;

(2) what research has been commissioned by his Ministry into the use of tenderising enzymes administered by inter-jugular injection prior to slaughter.

Mr. Donald Thompson: On 20 June I announced that our decision not to accept the recommendation by the Farm Animal Welfare Council in its report on the slaughter of red meat animals that the administration of the tenderising enzyme papain to cattle before slaughter should be banned would stand.

Research into the effects of the technique on the live animal was carried out following publication of the council's report. I have placed a copy of the results of the research in the Library.

Dichlofenthion

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to restrict the fat-soluble pesticide, dichlofenthion, for use in sheep-dips and other agricultural uses.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding reply 27 June 1989]: Pesticides and veterinary medicines containing dichlofenthion require licences. One such sheep dip is currently licensed but has not been marketed for some years and its licence will expire later this year.

THE ARTS

National Museums

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has received the corporate plans of the national museums.

Mr. Luce: I have received the 1989 corporate plans of the national museums and galleries. I and my officials have met a number of the institutions to discuss their plans and will be meeting others in the near future.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he plans to publish the corporate plans of the national museums.

Mr. Luce: It is for the trustees and director of the individual national museums or gallery to consider the circulation of their corporate plan, including whether this should be published.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Industrial Disablement Benefit

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for industrial disablement benefit have been made in each year since October 1984 up to the latest available date.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

October 1984 to September 1985	112,298
October 1985 to September 1986	124,518
October 1986 to September 1987	104,222
October 1987 to September 1988	90,727
October 1988 to March 1989	[1]44,734

[1] Six months.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases of claims made since 1 October 1986 for industrial disablement benefit (a) awards were made at less than 14 per cent. on the basis of (i) provisional and (ii) final awards and (b) awards were made at 14 per cent. or more.

Mr. Scott: Between 1 October 1986 to 31 March 1989, there were 101,359 assessments of disablement at less than 14 per cent. Between 1 October 1986 and 31 March 1988, the latest date for which information is available, there were 14,693 awards for assessments at more than 14 per cent. disablement. It is not possible to distinguish between provisional and final awards.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what savings have been made in each year since October 1986 up to the latest available date by operation of the 14 per cent. rule for industrial disability.

Mr. Scott: The estimated savings are as follows:

	£ million
October 1986 to April 1987	10·9
April 1987 to April 1988	35·0
April 1988 to April 1989	39·5

Vaccine Damage

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why, pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South, Official Report, 20 June, columns 94-96, some of the information requested regarding all vaccine damage payments made in 1980, 1981 and 1982 is not available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The details requested cannot be supplied for any of the vaccine damage payments made in 1980 as these have been destroyed in accordance with normal arrangements. Unfortunately some of those records for 1981 and 1982 are missing and cannot be found despite a very thorough search.

Office Reorganisation

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that outstationing of Department of Social Security offices will not take place until such time as the operational strategy computer provisions have been completed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The project to move out of 21 London offices the "backroom" work that does not need face to face contact with the public is now well advanced. We are going ahead with this initiative because of our commitment to ensuring our customers receive the highest quality service.

We are confident that the operational strategy computer systems are capable of supporting the needs of the project and of our customers.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that when outstationing of Department of Social Security offices is completed, telephone calls to the social security centres by claimants from local offices, public kiosks, and their homes, will be charged at the local rate and that the same charges will be available to advisers acting on the claimants' behalf.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Telephone calls to the social security centres made from claimants' homes and public kiosks in the London local call area will be charged at the local rate. Calls made from the telephones to be sited in the public areas of the branch offices will give direct access to the social security centre and will be free.

Advisers acting on behalf of claimants will be able to use the same facilities and, provided the call is made from within the London local call area, they will be charged at the local rate.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what facilities for people with disabilities will be provided in the new Department of Social Security branch offices to enable proper access and a comfortable wait.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Branch offices are still in the planning stage, but the aim will be to continue to improve and provide facilities for the disabled in these offices.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what undertakings have been given to local Department of Social Security staff affected by outstationing about their future employment by the Department of Social Security in the same geographical area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Staff who work in the local offices participating in the relocation of work project have been given the following assurances:

(i) there is no question of compulsory transfer to the social security centres in Glasgow, Belfast and Wigan but any member of staff who wishes to transfer may apply to do so;

(ii) when transfers are necessary, staff will be expected to transfer to local, regional or headquarters offices within daily travelling distance of their home. All such transfers will be to other offices within the London pay zone, unless an individual prefers to go somewhere else;

(iii) each individual member of staff will be treated on an individual basis. Cases of immobility will be dealt with first;

(iv) all staff will be invited individually to nominate the offices they would wish to transfer to. Management will do everything they can to match transfers to individual preferences. Where an individual cannot be posted to an office of his or her choice in the first instance, he or she will be given top priority when vacancies occur within one of the preferred offices;

(v) we do not envisage any need for compulsory transfers involving a move of home. There should be no need for redundancies.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether facilities such as a nappy-changing area and tea and coffee machine will be provided in the new Department of Social Security branch offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The provision of such facilities will be considered when the new branch offices are being developed. The improved service to the public they will provide is expected to reduce significantly the time customers spend in our offices. The need for such facilities will be determined in the light of experience.

EC Benefit Systems

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what approximate correlation exists in each EEC state between the level of social security benefits and gross domestic product per head.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available figures are as follows:

Current Expenditure on Social Protection as a percentage of Gross Domestic Product (Eurostat)

	1983	1984
Netherlands	33·7	—
Belgium	30·8	29·4
Denmark	30·2	28·7
West Germany	29·1	28·7
France	28·5	—
Luxembourg	26·5	—
United Kingdom	24·1	24·1
Ireland	23·9	23·3
Italy	23·7	23·3

No figures available yet for Greece, Spain or Portugal.

Benefit Statistics

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest available figures for the cumulative amounts, since 1979, of (a) unclaimed benefits, (b) benefit fraud and (c) expenditure savings, expressed in real terms, at 1989 prices.

Mr. Scott: It is not possible to ascertain precisely the total amounts of Social Security benefits fraudulently claimed or left unclaimed. Details of the latest available information on the take up of benefits is contained in paragraphs 27 to 29 on pages 15-16 of Cm 615. Similarly it is not possible to show the cumulative effects of expenditure savings since 1979. Calculations for the income-related benefits would be impossible in the light of major changes over the past decade. An analysis of the national insurance benefits could be carried out only at disproportionate cost using a range of artificial assumptions, rendering any answer speculative.

Single Parents

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single parents in receipt of one-parent benefit have been sent green forms instructing them to send their benefit books to local social security offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Postal review is a normal part of benefit procedure. A postal review of one-parent benefit claimants began in February. So far 300,000 postal review forms have been issued. Claimants should return their order books to the social security office only if they have changes to report.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has issued any instructions to local social security offices laying down a maximum period for which one-parent benefit books sent in as directed by green forms may be held before being returned to the parent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. All order books returned to local offices for adjustment are returned as soon as possible. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind he may care to write to me.

Income Support

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently having their claim for family credit reviewed as not being consistently engaged in remunerative work for over 24 hours a week while unable to claim income support because they regularly work over 24 hours a week; and when he expects to make a decision over eligibility for family credit in these cases.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None, but we are considering whether legislative changes are necessary to minimise the risk of families failing to qualify for either family credit or income support in the future.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the medical evidence that £21·70 a week paid for food is sufficient for a healthy diet for a person living in bed and breakfast accommodation; and what similar medical evidence is used to calculate other income support applicable amounts.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no specific amount included in income support levels to cover food.

Child Benefit

Mr. Matthew Taylor To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of ceasing to treat (a) child benefit and (b) one-parent benefit as a resource for housing benefit, assuming case-load take-up levels of family credit of (a) 40 per cent., (b) 50 per cent., (c) 60 per cent. (d) 70 per cent., (e) 80 per cent., (f) 90 per cent. and (g) 100 per cent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 9 June 1989]: I regret that the precise information requested cannot be provided. Housing benefit currently comprises four distinct elements —rent rebates, rent allowances (all of Great Britain), rate rebates (in England and Wales) and community charge rebate (in Scotland).

The estimated costs in 1989-90 of ceasing to treat child benefit and one-parent benefit as a resource for housing benefit would be as follows:

	£ million
(i) Rent rebate and rent allowance:
(a) Child benefit	80
(b) One parent benefit	7
(ii) Projected cost assuming rate rebates were fully in place throughout Great Britain:
(a) Child benefit	40
(b) One parent benefit	3
(iii) Project cost assuming community charge rebates were fully in place throughout GB:
(a) Child benefit	60
(b) One parent benefit	2

Notes

1. Where a person with at least one child in his family and working 24 hours or more a week claims housing benefit and has not also claimed family credit, calculation of potential family credit is included in the assessment of housing benefit. (The notional amount so arrived at is not counted as part of the housing benefit income for 25 working days following the despatch of the notice of housing benefit entitlement to the claimant to allow reasonable time for him to claim family credit.) Differential take-up of family credit would not, therefore, affect the estimated costs set out above.
2. Some lone parents, such as widows and those on invalidity benefit or retirement pension, do not get one-parent benefit. They would, therefore, be excluded from the increase in housing benefit that other lone parents would get from the disregard of one-parent benefit.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the cumulative total of his Department's expenditure since May 1979 to date over and above the expenditure level prevailing in May 1979.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 29 June 1989]: The total programme of public expenditure on social security in 1979-80 and each of the following years, including the forecast for 1989-90, is as follows. The size of the programme had the level of spending remained exactly as it was in 1979-80 in real terms is also indicated:

	£ billion
	Actual/ planned expenditure	Expenditure at level of 1979-80
1979-80	19·4	19·4
1980-81	23·5	23·0
1981-82	28·6	25·2
1982-83	32·5	27·0
1983-84	35·2	28·3
1984-85	38·1	29·7
1985-86	41·5	31·2
1986-87	44·4	32·3
1987-88	46·3	34·0
1988-89	47·6	36·6
[1]1989-90	51·1	38·4

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received calling for the payment of attendance allowance automatically as of right to blind people living alone: what his reponse has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 3 July 1989]: We have occasionally received representations on this subject in the course of correspondence with hon. Members on behalf of individual constituents. In reply we have explained that entitlement to an attendance allowance is not geared to specific disabling conditions or illnesses. People with a severe disability qualify for the allowance if they require from someone else either frequent attention in connection with bodily functions or continual supervision or watching over to avoid substantial danger to themselves or others.

PRIME MINISTER

Psychiatric Patients

Q10. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Prime Minister when she expects to meet representatives of MIND to discuss the relevance for discharged long-stay psychiatric patients of section 7 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Representation and Consultation) Act 1986.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Inner Cities Policy

Q17. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received on the Government's inner cities policy.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations, many of them in support of the Government's inner cities policies. Under the comprehensive range of measures, costing £3·5 billion this year which makes up the action for cities initiative, good progress continues to be made in the regeneration of our inner cities. In the 57 inner city target areas, unemployment fell by almost 24 per cent. in the 12 months to May 1989. Recorded crime in the Metropolitan police force areas fell by 6 per cent. in 1988. Involvement of private companies continues to grow—over the last six months the number of companies working with the Government's inner city task forces has increased from 450 to 500.

Economy

Q22. Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the performance of the economy.

Q35. Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will support the incorporation of the European Convention on Human Rights in the form outlined in the Human Rights Bill which is set down for Second Reading on 7 July; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. We are committed to, and support, the principles of human rights in the European Convention on Human Rights but we believe that is is for Parliament rather than the judiciary to determine how these principles are best secured.

Litter

Q40. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received on the litter problem.

The Prime Minister: I have received a large number of letters from people concerned about litter. They demonstrate wide support for tougher measures to control litter. The Government intend soon to announce a range of proposals for improving legislation in this area.

Pension Age

Q49. Sir David Price: To ask the Prime Minister what is the Government's policy towards the equalisation of pension age for men and women as proposed in the draft directive of the European Community entitled "Equal Treatment for Men and Women in Pensions and other Benefits"; and what attitude towards the proposal she will adopt in the Council of Ministers.

The Prime Minister: At the meeting of the Labour and Social Affairs Council of Ministers in Luxembourg on 12 June neither France nor the United Kingdom were able to lift their reserves on this draft directive. Consequently the draft directive will not be discussed at the Council of Ministers but will be referred back for further work by officials. The House of Lords Select Committee on the European Community published its report on this draft directive earlier this month and the Government will respond to that report in due course.

Roads

Q50. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations on the case for improved roads.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has received a number of representations recently supporting the proposals announced in the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" for a greatly expanded trunk road building programme.

Human Rights (China)

Q51. Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will refer the actions of the Chinese Government in their present policy of violence and reprisals against Chinese students to the Human Rights Commission of the United Nations; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We intend to raise our concerns about the recent deplorable events in China at the next session of the United Nations Committee on Human Rights and at the United Nations Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) which meets this month in Geneva.

Iran

Q86. Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the United Kingdom's relations with Iran.

The Prime Minister: I have received regular representations about our relations with Iran, both from hon. Members and from members of the public. We have consistently made clear that we can have normal relations only if Iran clearly renounces the use or threat of terrorism and violence in all forms.

Housing

Q96. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding housing.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Shipbuilders

Q109. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow, 20 June, Official Report, column 77, where funds are provided to United Kingdom shipyards for construction under the shipbuilding intervention fund, what proportion of those funds is required to be spent within the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: Under European Community rules we cannot discriminate against other EC content. However, in administering intervention fund and intervention aid, officials in the Department of Trade and Industry and the Northern Ireland Department of Economic Development encourage United Kingdom shipyards to procure as much EC content as possible.

Water Bill

Q142. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received on the Water Bill.

The Prime Minister: Many individuals and organisations have commented on a wide range of privatisation matters, which are being considered in the context of the Water Bill.

Royal Air Force

Q143. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the Royal Air Force.

The Prime Minister: I receive many representations about the Royal Air Force.

Q165. Mr. Waller: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make an official visit to West Yorkshire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Police Force

Q167. Mr. John Browne: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the police force.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations.

At the end of March this year, police strength in England and Wales stood at 125,631. This is a record and represents some 14,100 more officers than when the Government first took office. Expenditure on the police is up by almost 55 per cent. in real terms. We shall continue to regard the police as a priority.

Common Agricultural Policy

Q169. Mr. Marland: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the common agricultural policy.

The Prime Minister: The Government frequently receive representations about agricultural policy.

The United Kingdom agricultural industry is widely respected for its efficiency and competitiveness. It is well placed to benefit from the opportunities for fair competition which completion of the EC's single internal market will bring. And I was pleased at the royal show to pay tribute to the enormous contribution the agriculture industry and the thousands of individual farmers make to our national life.

Nuclear Deterrent

Q170. Mr. Malins: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the nuclear deterrent.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of letters from individuals and organisations.

National Health Service

Q219. Mr. Page: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the National Health Service.

The Prime Minister: The Government have received large numbers of representations on the National Health Service from members of the public, the professions, and various interest groups. Many share the Government's desire for a Health Service that gives patients more choice and rights as consumers, that is more responsive to the needs of local communities, and that builds on its existing successes and efficiency to give better value for money.

Raw Nook Community Centre, Bradford

Q220. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister whether she expects to pay an official visit to Raw Nook community centre in Bradford.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no present plans to do so.

Harold Macmillan (Biography)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has obtained for the library of No. 10 Downing street, Alistair Horne's biography of Harold Macmillan.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Government Departments

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received about the future structure of Government Departments.

The Prime Minister: I receive numerous representations on a wide variety of issues including the structure of Government Departments.

Rail Travel

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will state the last occasion she travelled on a train in order to carry out official engagements; and how many times in all she has done so since May 1979.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 3 July 1989 at column 13.

Engagements

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 6 July.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 6 July.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 6 July.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 6 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRANSPORT

"Better Rail" Campaign

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received from the NUR's "Better Rail" campaign.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met representatives of NUR, ASLEF and TSSA after the Nera report was published last year. Since then we have received about 700 representations from hon. Members and members of the public.

Trucks (Suspension)

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish the Transport and Road Research Laboratory's findings on road-friendly suspension systems for 40-tonne trucks.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We attach high importance to road-friendly suspensions on all vehicles. We are encouraging the use of air suspensions particularly on the heaviest articulated lorries. I am sending to my hon. Friend and placing in the Library copies of the two most recent reports published by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory about relevant research on suspensions and the dynamic relationship between axles and the road. This forms part of the case Britain is arguing internationally to secure vehicles that are more road-friendly.

Coastguard Service

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the Coastguard chief is located in the heart of London.

Mr. Portillo: The chief coastguard has traditionally been located in London to ensure ready access to Ministers. The need for coastguard headquarters to remain in London is currently under review.

Mobility Roadshow

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people attended the Mobility roadshow; how many motor manufacturers exhibited at the Mobility roadshow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The fourth Mobility roadshow, organised by the Department of Transport, took place over three days last month at the Department's Transport and Road Research Laboratory in Berkshire. It was attended by about 20,000 people, the majority of whom were disabled.

Eleven major motor manufacturers exhibited the latest models of standard production cars suitable for adaptation for disabled people. Nearly 4,000 test drives were taken in adapted cars on the laboratory's private road system.

Among the show's other 140 exhibitors were manufacturers of buses, minibuses, vans, vehicle lifts, hand control equipment, wheelchairs and small powered vehicles and many other products, as well as a range of organisations offering services and advice to people with disabilities.

Plans are in hand for the fifth show to be held in the summer of 1991.

East London Rail Study

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, when he expects to announce the conclusions to his east London rail study.

Mr. Portillo: Shortly.

M4 (Safety Fencing)

Sir William Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent on safety fencing on the M4 during the year 1988-89; how much is expected to be spent in 1989-90; and, of the amounts spent or to be spent, how much is attributable to replacements of faulty safety fencing.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is estimated that some £270,000 was spent in 1988-89 on the replacement and maintenance of safety fences on the M4. The replacement of fences is undertaken for various reasons such as changes in road surface levels as a result of resurfacing, or damage caused by impacts, and it is not possible to attribute the amounts spent to particular reasons. We are not aware of any safety fencing having to be replaced because of inadequate performance. Some £380,000 has been allocated for replacement and maintenance in 1989-90. Actual expenditure will depend on the extent of unpredictable factors such as accident damage. All safety fences continue to be regularly inspected and maintenanced.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people with severely deformed or no arms currently hold orange badges.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

The responsibility for assessing applicants for orange badges rests with individual local authorities.

The Department neither issues nor withdraws badges.

The national scheme was created to help people not capable of walking.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has of the number of people with severely deformed or no arms who have difficulty in shopping unless special provision is made for them.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not available.

The OPCS survey into disability in Great Britain states that there are 1·23 million people with reaching and stretching disabilities and 1·737 million with dexterity problems. Caution is needed in using any of the figures in the report because:

(i) a relatively low threshold of disability was used for the report.

(ii) people with both reaching and stretching and dexterity problems would be counted twice.

(iii) the survey was designed to be a survey of disability, not of the causes of disability. People could be counted as having reaching or stretching difficulties because they had sight problems or suffered from mental illness etc.

The Department of Health has advised that there were 12,800 upper limb amputees in England and Wales in 1986. This figure represents only people seen by artificial limb centres and so does not represent the total number of amputees. It is not known how many of those artificial upper limb users would have actual difficulty in carrying shopping. Many will have one missing limb rather than two.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what initiatives he has undertaken to help people with severely deformed or no arms to be able to use normal parking facilities.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's Mobility roadshow held at the Transport and Road Research Laboratory (16-18 June) attracted 20,000 people from many parts of the country to view and test a wide range of adapted vehicles and other mobility aids and products.

We are constantly on the look out for new ideas and ways of helping people with all kinds of disabilities.

We are supporting the Parking Bill currently before Parliament. This would provide for the wider use of systems of payment such as magnetic cards or vouchers rather than coins. These new systems can be more convenient for many disabled drivers, particularly those with dexterity problems.

We tabled an amendment to the Bill which would give the Secretary of State power to require local authorities to display information at the entrance to off-street car parks, including the availability of allocated spaces for disabled people. The British Standards Institution is currently developing a code of practice on information required at public car parks.

The British Standards Institution is also working on a range of new standards for parking control equipment. Equipment manufacturers and disabled people are represented on the relevant technical committee. The standards will take account of features such as the height of displays and the ease of operation of equipment.

We give advice to organisations which seek to make it easier for disabled people to use their cars.

We advise individual disabled motorists through our mobility advice and vehicle information service (MAVIS).

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been done into the range of activities for which disabled people use the orange badge; and to what extent it is used in connection with shopping.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The orange badge scheme allows people with severe mobility problems to park closer to their destinations and to stay longer than normal parking regulations permit. The scheme helps badge holders to engage in as wide a range of activities as they can manage.

The design of buildings and their external spaces is also important. Much progress has been made by Government, local authorities, and private bodies over recent years. Shop mobility schemes are operated by voluntary bodies in many parts of the country. We have preferred to concentrate our efforts in practical ways, rather than to commission research into particular issues such as shopping.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about fire safety in the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: The Government are fully seized of the need for fire safety in the Channel tunnel. In agreement with the French Government they set up an independent safety authority composed of senior United Kingdom and French experts, to vet all Channel tunnel designs and operational procedures and, when necessary, to advise the intergovernmental commission to reject anything which would not afford a proper degree of safety. Both United Kingdom and French fire experts are members of the authority.

Accident Investigations

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the reasons for (a) making publicly available investigations into accidents involving aircraft and (b) not making publicly available those into accidents involving ships.

Mr. Portillo: Regulations are about to be laid before the House governing the investigation of accidents involving ships. Among other things these provide for the publication of reports or summaries of investigations.

This will put marine and aircraft investigations on broadly the same footing.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish findings of the report into the incident involving the hydrofoil from Southampton on 27 November 1987.

Mr. Portillo: When the investigation into the incident is completed a summary report will be made public.

I cannot give a date for the release of this report as the investigation is still in progress.

European Transport Systems

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake a comparative study of fares, investment, public transport usage and road congestion in European nations.

Mr. Portillo: No. The circumstances of different European cities are not readily comparable.

Pedestrian Crossings

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the figures for road deaths for (a) children and (b) adults, killed near pedestrian crossings for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

Number of children and adults killed near pedestrian crossings: 1978-87

	Children killed on pedestrian crossing	Children killed within 50 metres of pedestrian crossing	Adult killed on pedestrian crossing	Adult killed within 50 metres of pedestrian crossing
1978	15	16	124	109
1979	6	10	118	144
1980	16	14	115	135
1981	10	13	101	97
1982	13	14	112	120
1983	11	23	114	136

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to increase the amount of time allowed for pedestrians to make use of pelican crossings when crossing the road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The recommended timings for pelican crossings were revised in 1987, and are incorporated in the departmental standard TD 28/87 "Pedestrian Crossing; Pelican and Zebra Crossings". This introduced a two second extension to the crossing time, to be used at the discretion of the highway authority.

We are looking at ways in which extended crossing time can be made available specifically for elderly and disabled pedestrians.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the police and traffic authorities to encourage them to take measures to enforce motorists to respect pedestrian rights on zebra and pelican crossings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Enforcement of road traffic law is a matter for the police who have to decide on priorities in the light of local conditions. We are in regular contact with the Association of Chief Police Officers and local authority road safety officers on all matters relating to road safety.

All road users should have proper regard for pedestrians wherever they are, and should pay particular attention to rules 56-57 of the highway code.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on the phasing out of zebra crossings in favour of pelican crossings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no such policy. Pelican and zebra crossings are used in different circumstances which reflect different pedestrian and traffic flows, and traffic speeds. Local highway authorities have considerable discretion over the installation of both types of crossing, although the Department of Transport issues guidance as to the most helpful criteria.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made with trials of new pedestrian facilities at traffic-signalled junctions including the use of infra-red devices to detect the presence and movement of pedestrians.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is co-operating with its French and Dutch counterparts in a research programme to improve pedestrian facilities at traffic lights.

A trial site is to be set up later this year at the Department's Transport and Road Research Laboratory. Various new pedestrian facilities, including infra-red detectors, will be developed.

Consultation with highway authorities and other interested groups will be undertaken as part of this work.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report of the Transport and Road Research Laboratory on new techniques to identify sites for pelican crossings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The final report of the Transport and Road Research Laboratory's study into pedestrian crossing criteria is expected in mid-1990. In the meantime we shall be publishing later this year two reports on the relationship between pedestrian flows and accident rates, which are directly relevant to the problem.

In April this year we published a major package of measures aimed at improving pedestrian safety which we intend to implement as quickly as possible.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any information as to whether British Rail has initiated research into the advantages and disadvantages of the electrification of the east midlands railway line.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that British Rail is co-operating closely with the consultants who produced the recent local authorities' report on the midland main line.

Aviation Security

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department issued any general aviation security warning on 21 December.

Mr. Channon: No.

Heavy Goods Trailers (Safety)

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the number of heavy goods trailers failing to pass the annual test.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There has been a rising trend in the number of trailers failing the annual test over the period 1983-1988. A task force of experts from the Department and the industry was set up to investigate the reasons for failure.

Their interim report has been placed in the Library of the House. A final report will be produced later this summer.

The trailer failure rate appears to be more related to changes in requirements over the period in consideration than to a decline in standards of maintenance of trailers on the road.

Interim recommendations are:

1. to develop an acceptable method of testing the braking performance of unladen trailers;
2. to explore the scope for increasing the service brake force within the upper limits of the European Community requirements;
3. to provide advice to operators on good maintenance practice;
4. to undertake regular surveys of random samples of goods vehicles and trailers in use.

DEFENCE

Compensation Claims

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many sick 10 certificates banning compensation claims for injury to members of the armed forces were issued each year from 1986 to date.

Mr. Neubert: It would not be possible, except at disproportionate cost, to produce details of certificates issued from 1986 to date under sections 10(1) and 10(2) of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has issued a total of 11 certificates during the time in question under section 10(3) of the Act: four in 1986, two in 1987, one in 1988 and four so far in 1989.

Skyguard (RAF Finningley)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications of the transit area in the surrounding area of RAF Finningley; and when Skyguard will be in operation in this area.

Mr. Neubert: The structure of the United Kingdom low flying system in the RAF Finningley area is, as elsewhere, designed to minimise the disturbance to the public. Skyguard is being deployed to assist the RAF police in their task of monitoring low flying in the United Kingdom. As with the general RAF police monitoring programme, however, it would not be appropriate to release details of proposed Skyguard deployments in advance.

Low Flying

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints he has received over the past 12 months about low-flying military aircraft; and what action he has taken.

Mr. Neubert: Between 1 June 1988 and 31 May 1989 the Ministry of Defence received 6,273 inquiries and complaints about military low-flying training in the United Kingdom. Each inquiry or complaint is carefully considered and appropriate action taken.

F111 Aircraft

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the deployment of F111s in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is currently on an official visit to the United States of America, where he will meet Mr. Cheney and discuss a range of issues of mutual interest.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the proposal to station further F111 aircraft of the United States Air Force at RAF Upper Heyford is part of a North Atlantic Treaty Organisation decision-making process or a bilateral United States-United Kingdom decision-making process;

(2) on which date he was first informed of proposals to station further F111 aircraft of the United States Air Force at RAF Upper Heyford;

(3) what information he has received from the United States Government, or any service or agency answerable to that Government, regarding proposals to station further F111 aircraft of the United States Air Force at RAF Upper Heyford;

(4) whether in the light of the proposals made at the recent North Atlantic Treaty Organisation summit, there have been any changes to the proposal to station further F111 aircraft of the United States Air Force at RAF Upper Heyford.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave the hon. Members for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie), Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray), and for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 13 June 1989 at columns 395-96.

Defence Exports Services Organisation

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will indicate the annual salary of the head of the Defence Exports Services Organisation and the extent of the bonuses for which he could be eligible.

Mr. Sainsbury: The present head of the defence export services, Sir Colin Chandler, is on secondment from British Aerospace, which pays his salary. The Ministry of Defence pays British Aerospace the equivalent of grade 2 Civil Service salary for Sir Colin's services. There is no provision in these arrangements for the payment of bonuses. Mr. Alan Thomas will start taking over from Sir Colin Chandler as head of defence export services in early July and will assume total responsibility for the post in September. He was appointed at a salary of £100,000 a year subject to annual review and he will be eligible for a performance bonus within an annual maximum of £25,000.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the names and ages of the oldest and youngest horses taking part in this year's birthday parade; where each was bred; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: I regret that this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Stonehenge (Incident)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people were arrested by personnel from the Ministry of Defence police acting in support of the Wiltshire constabulary on the morning of 21 June; and how many of those arrested were charged.

Mr. Sainsbury: Thirty-seven arrests were made by the Ministry of Defence police in the course of operations in support of the Wiltshire constabulary. None of those arrested has yet been charged.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the use of personnel from the Ministry of Defence police in support of the Wiltshire constabulary in operations in the area of Stonehenge on the morning of 21 June.

Mr. Sainsbury: In accordance with the Ministry of Defence Police Act 1987 section 2(2)(d), Ministry of Defence police officers deployed in support of the Wiltshire constabulary in response to the latter force's specific requests of assistance.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what cost will be passed on to the Wiltshire constabulary for the use of personnel from the Ministry of Defence police on the morning of 21 June.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since members of the Ministry of Defence police were deployed in the Salisbury plain area in order to protect the property and other interests of my Department it would not be appropriate to make a charge for any assistance which was given to the Wiltshire constabulary in the course of those duties.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to his Department for the use of personnel under the control of his Department in support of the operations by the Wiltshire constabulary in the area of Stonehenge on the morning of 21 June.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of personnel from the Ministry of Defence police deployed in support of the Wiltshire constabulary on the morning of 21 June.

Mr. Sainsbury: Approximately 75 Ministry of Defence police officers gave assistance to the Wiltshire constabulary during the night of 20-21 June.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to publish information of this kind.

RAF Feltwell (Tracking Station)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current status of the proposed deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 3 February 1989 at column 449.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which portions of the electromagnetic spectrum will be used by the proposed deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to publish information of this kind.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No materials have been stored at Hythe, Hampshire in support of the United States Central Command.

Wayne Beal

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many persons were recruited with Wayne Beal into 2nd Queen's Regiment; and how many completed the course.

Mr. Neubert: There were 32 others recruited along with Wayne Beal; 19 of these successfully completed the training course.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will investigate why the adjutant turned away key witnesses at the court martial of those accused of bullying Wayne Beal.

Mr. Neubert: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain and make available a transcript of the court martial proceedings in the case of those accused of bullying Wayne Beal of 2nd Queen's Regiment, Bassingbourne barracks.

Mr. Neubert: A transcript of the presiding judge advocate's summing-up will be made available as soon as possible.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek a report on the reasons why an adjournment in the court martial of those accused of bullying Wayne Beal to enable medical evidence to be obtained was refused.

Mr. Neubert: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Nuclear-powered Warships Safety Committee

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members there are on the nuclear-powered warships safety committee; and how many of them had previously worked (a) full-time, (b) part-time and (c) on a commission basis for his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 23 permanent members of the nuclear-powered warships safety committee (NPWSC), excluding the secretariat of two. Of these, five are currently employed full-time by this Department. A further seven MOD officials, who are not members of the committee, may attend or be represented at its meetings if the agenda includes items within their area of interest. Of the 18 external NPWSC members, five have previously worked as full-time MOD officials. The other external members have not worked for this Department, either part-time or on a commission basis.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the running costs of the nuclear-powered warships safety committee are met.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether members of the nuclear-powered warships safety committee receive payment or expenses for their work from his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Those members of the Nuclear-Powered Warships Safety Committee who are not employees of the Ministry of Defence or other public bodies receive a fee in line with those laid down in the scale of daily fees payable to members of Royal Commissions, advisory committees and similar bodies. All members may claim travel and subsistence expenses.

Ha'burn (Sinking)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the sinking of the fishing boat Ha'burn in the Firth of Clyde.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On the morning of Friday 30 June the fishing vessel Ha'burn, while fishing in the Clyde approaches, caught a mine-like object in its nets. The vessel informed HM Coastguard and proceeded to Troon on the Ayrshire coast. The Royal Navy base at Faslane was also informed, and an explosive ordnance disposal team was despatched to the scene and indentified the object as a German world war II ground mine.

The skipper of the Ha'burn agreed to take the mine to deep water, where the Royal Navy team were to dispose of it by a controlled explosion. When the vessel had reached a suitable location, a demolition charge was attached to the mine which was then lowered to the sea bed. A safety fuse was set and the vessel began to retire to safety. The charge, however, detonated prematurely and before the Ha'burn had time to clear the area.

The vessel was holed by the resulting explosion and later beached some 500 yards from Great Cumbrae island. The crew, who were unhurt, were rescued by an inshore lifeboat from Largs. A board of inquiry has been convened. The owners of the Ha'burn have been informed of the procedures for submitting a claim for compensation.

Birkbeck College

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment of security at Birkbeck college was made prior to awarding the contract for the study of the recruitment and selection of Royal Navy personnel to the college.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since the work is not classified the question of security at Birkbeck college did not arise.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current security classification of the contract awarded to Birkbeck college for the study of the recruitment and selection of Royal Navy personnel.

Mr. Sainsbury: The work in question is unclassified.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made to the security procedures concerning documents relating to the contract awarded to Birkbeck college for the study of the recruitment and selection of Royal Navy personnel since the contract was awarded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. Papers were returned when they were no longer needed in accordance with normal procedures.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communication there has been between the governors of Birkbeck college and his Department concerning the security of documents relating to the contract for the study of the recruitment and selection of Royal Navy personnel awarded to the college.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. Following the letter which the master of the college wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on Monday 3 July 1989, my noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement met her on Tuesday 4 July 1989, but this was to discuss recent press reports.

Corporal Steven Smith

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the death of Corporal Steven Smith in Hanover; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Two under-car improvised explosive devices were placed under private vehicles belonging to service men, which were left-hand drive and carried United Kingdom type civilian number plates issued for use by the British Forces in Germany, and were parked in a married quarters area in Hanover. One device exploded at 18.15 hours local time on 2 July 1989, causing the death of Corporal Smith and injuries to his wife and four children. The second device was located and neutralised. Both were attached to the cars by magnets.

The Provisional IRA has claimed responsibility for both the devices. The German police are continuing their inquiries.

Security (West Germany)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what security arrangements are made for those service personnel who do not live inside Ministry of Defence barracks or bases whilst stationed in West Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All service men, United Kingdom-based civilians and their dependants are briefed periodically on the security situation and on the measures they should take for their own protection. It would not be appropriate to comment on individual security measures. Close liaison is also maintained with the Federal German authorities, who have primary responsibility for the prevention of terrorist crimes outside United Kingdom bases.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any areas in West Germany outside Ministry of Defence bases or barracks have ever been the subject of a co-ordinated test and evaluation of security.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The security of off-base married quarter areas in Germany is kept under constant review, in liaison with the appropriate local police authorities.

Iraq (Aircraft Sales)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Government's policy on the sale of Hawk aircraft to the Government of Iraq.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the consistent practice of successive Administrations not to comment on individual defence sales. Any overseas sale of Hawk would require an export licence and any prospect of such a sale to Iraq would be considered against the guidelines announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary on 29 October 1985 at column 450.

Army Polo Teams

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence,, if he will list those regiments in which regimental officers are required to make a regular subscription towards the regimental polo team.

Mr. Neubert: No officer is required to subscribe towards his regimental polo team.

IUKADGE Command and Control System

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 26 June, how long the delay in introducing the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment command and control system will be.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 29 June 1989]: As I stated in my reply to the hon. Gentleman's question of 26 June at column 370, it is premature to speculate on the length of further delay to the introduction of the IUKADGE command and control system before the results of the independent audit have been assessed. We consider, however, that it should be possible to complete the work in the early 1990s.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 26 June, when it was decided to seek maximum return from the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation common infrastructure budget for the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment command and control system by abiding by the rules of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation international competitive bidding.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 29 June 1989]: September 1978.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional costs have been incurred as a result of the delay to the introduction of the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment command and control system.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 29 June 1989]: The delay to the introduction of the IUKADGE command and control system will have some small cost implications, due for example to the need to run on the existing command and control system for somewhat longer than originally intended. The main contract with United Kingdom Systems Ltd is, however, fixed price; the financial risks for the completion of the ICCS continue, therefore, to lie with the contractor.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what organisation is carrying out the independent audit and review of the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment command and control system.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 29 June 1989]: The independent audit of the IUKADGE command and control system is being carried out by a joint industry/MOD team led by SD Scicon Ltd.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the independent audit and review of the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment command and control system will be completed.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 29 June 1989]: The independent audit of the IUKADGE command and control system was completed at the end of June and will be fully assessed during the next few weeks.

WALES

Urban Investment Grant

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the planned expenditure for urban investment grant for each of the next three years.

Mr. Grist: The provision for 1989-90 is £3 million (as shown in the supply estimates class XVII, vote 6 subhead B2). I have made no firm decisions on the distribution of the block resources beyond 1989-90.

Business Establishment Grant

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many companies in receipt of a cash grant from his Department to establish a business in Wales have discontinued such business within five years of establishment.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information in the form requested is not available. However, it is possible to provide information on companies which have received regional selective assistance. Since the introduction of the current guidelines for regional selective assistance in November 1984, two companies which received RSA towards establishing new businesses in Wales are known to have discontinued such business. These companies received some £20,000 in grant. Over the same period 80 projects received RSA to establish new businesses in Wales with associated expenditure to date of some £9 million.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if his civil servants discussed with the Welsh Development Agency's west Wales senior executive management buy-out plans; and if he will make a statement.

(2) if the Welsh Development Agency has had any discussions with outside consultants regarding the proposed privatisation of the Welsh Development Agency's west Wales region; if he will publish the consultants' names; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: There have been no such discussions.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to control the spread of rhododendron in Forestry Commission and private woodland in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Forestry Commission controls rhododendron on its own land, where it is significantly affecting tree growth, by cutting and by application of herbicides. Owners of private woodlands are given advice on methods of controlling rhododendron, and the Commission is carrying out research into alternative methods of control, including methods of limiting regrowth after cutting.

Child Care Facilities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to encourage the provision of child care facilities in the workplace in Wales; what information he has on how many firms and Government offices currently provide these facilities in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: New Government initiatives on child care provision were announced on 11 April by my hon. Friend, the Minister of State for Home Affairs, including measures to encourage employers to provide child care facilities using the tax reliefs available to them. No information is available on the provision of child care facilities by employers in Wales.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes a promotional campaign to sell Welsh water authority shares abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am considering how best to sell Welsh water authority shares so that privatisation will give the people of Wales the best possible opportunity to own Welsh Water.

Cervical Smears

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average time taken by each Welsh health authority to process cervical smear tests and provide the results for the patient and her general practitioner; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Information for 1988-89 is currently being collected by the Department from Welsh health authorities. I shall write to my hon. Friend once the results have been collated.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle, at non-European Economic Community-approved slaughterhouses in Wales, have been identified.

Mr. Peter Walker: Four cases have been reported of which two proved positive and one negative; on the other one the result of testing is still awaited.

1988-89	1,133,998
1989-90	1,696,653

Funds for voluntary organisations in the social services field are also available under section 26 of the Development of Rural Wales Act 1976. The figures are as follows:

Year	£
1986-87	594,616
1987-88	725,049

Lawn Tennis Federation Cup

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide support to Nottingham for the running of the 1991 Lawn Tennis Federation cup.

Mr. Moynihan: All Government funds in direct support of sport are channelled through the Sports Council. Any requests for support for the running costs of the Federation cup should be addressed to the council.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the county councils which have made representations to him arising from his consultation paper regarding the role and functions of waste disposal authorities; and what views were expressed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Representations have been received from the following county councils:

County of Avon
Bedfordshire County Council
Royal County of Berkshire
Buckinghamshire County Council

Oxfordshire County Council
Shropshire County Council
Somerset County Council
Staffordshire County Council
Suffolk County Council
Surrey County Council
West Sussex County Council
Warwickshire County Council
Wiltshire County Council

The authorities expressed a range of views on the various issues raised in the consultation paper. These, and very many other responses, are being carefully considered.

Paper

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the use of non-recycled stationery, packaging and printed reports within his Department.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department's policy is progressively to increase the use of recycled stationery.

Smoking

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has evaluated the effect of smoking on environmental pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No formal evaluation of the effects of smoking on environmental pollution has been undertaken, but preliminary estimates suggest that overall it has very little impact. It is, however, recognised that smoking can contribute to pollution of the indoor environment, and the Government encourage the implementation of voluntary no-smoking policies. In addition, where banning smoking is appropriate for particular safety or hygiene reasons, the Government have not hesitated to take action.

Aquatic Environment

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to reduce the inputs of red list substances to the aquatic environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 10 April to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) at column 405.

Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made towards establishing the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre as an executive agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I am pleased to announce that the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre will today become an executive agency of the Property Services Agency.

The centre provides secure conference facilities for national and international Government meetings up to the highest level. It also markets its facilities commercially, competing for business on quality and price with a wide range of public and private undertakings, both at home and overseas. The centre has already achieved a great deal since it opened in 1986. Establishing it as an agency will give it additional management tools to develop its business further on increasingly commercial lines, and the scope to compete even more effectively in a highly competitive national and international market.

The centre will be expected to reduce progressively its net cost to the Exchequer. To this end I have set progressively more demanding targets against which its future progress and performance will be assessed. Peat Marwick McLintock management consultants have been commissioned to undertake a full review of the centre's performance since it opened, and to consider the possibilities for further improvements in the future. They have been asked to advise on specific targets and performance indicators. Their recommendations will influence the Government's decisions on financial and other targets for incorporation in the corporate plan and business planning process. Meanwhile I have instructed the centre chief executive to seek to increase controllable revenue and decrease expenditure each by 2½ per cent. per annum compared with the centre's previous forecast so as to produce a surplus before interest, depreciation and rates of £50,000 in 1989-90, £200,000 in 1990-91 and £320,000 in 1991-92.

Mr. Roy Kendrick, who has been responsible as general manager for the successful development of the centre's business since its opening, has been appointed chief executive of the new agency. I wish him and his staff every success in their continuing endeavours.

Copies of the framework document are being placed in the Library of the House.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conditions he places on newly appointed members of the London Docklands development corporation in respect of the participation of firms with which they are associated in developments in the area of the corporation.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave on 22 February to the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) at column 704.

Acer Pseudoplatanus

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he classifies Acer Pseudoplatanus as an indigenous species for the purposes of his Department's policies.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Acer Pseudoplatanus is regarded as a species that is naturalised but is not indigenous.

Refrigerators (Disposal)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is aware of any examples of good practice by local authorities in the United Kingdom, concerning the safe disposal of refrigerators and freezers so as to minimize the release of chlorofluorocarbons into the atmosphere during their disposal.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

Several local authorities have set up schemes for the collection of discarded refrigerators and freezers with a view to recovering, recycling or disposing of the CFCs they contain. Officials in the Department of the Environment are considering whether advice to local authorities in this area would be appropriate.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received concerning the introduction of safe disposal sites for refrigerators and freezers.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

I have received representations from companies and members of the public about the risk of CFCs escaping from discarded refrigerators and freezers. There are however technical and logistical difficulties in recovering and recycling CFCs from domestic refrigerator coolant systems, and from the accompanying foam insulation. Together these account for only around 3 per cent. of total CFCs in use in the United Kingdom.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much has been paid to (a) employment training agents and (b) employment training managers under the underpinning arrangements since the inception of the scheme to the latest available date; and if he will make a statement about his future policy on underpinning arrangements.

Mr. Nicholls: So far some £0·67 million has been paid to training agents and £19·38 million to training managers under underpinning arrangements up to and including May 1989.

Underpinning was based on original profiles of training agent action plans/training manager starts, constructed prior to the commencement of employment training. From September 1989 training agents/training managers will be able to make a much more accurate judgment of likely throughput in the light of experience on the programme to date. It is therefore envisaged that underpinning payments will no longer be required.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much his Department has paid out to employment training trainees in the form of training bonus since the start of the scheme to the latest possible date; and how much of that has been paid because either (a) the trainee obtained a vocational qualification and (b) the trainee completed a part of the action plan.

Mr. Nicholls: To the end of May 1989 the Training Agency had paid out £105,000 in training bonuses.

It is not possible to identify separately the proportion of funds paid in respect of (a) vocational qualifications obtained and (b) action plans completed.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average payment of benefit plus the additional £10 per trainee on employment training at the latest available date; how many employment training trainees are on placement with employers; how many employment training trainees had left the programme earlier than planned; how many employment training trainees had left to take up jobs; and how many employment training trainees had become unemployed when they left.

Mr. Nicholls: The average weekly training allowance including the training premium is estimated to be around £50 per trainee on employment training.

The number of employment training trainees on placements with employers was estimated to be 45,000 on 16 June, the latest date for which information is available. Reliable information broken down as requested about trainees who have left the programme is not available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of employment training places available for each training agency area; and what were the number of places filled for each training agency area on the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Nicholls: There is no information at present about the number of available places at Training Agency area office level. The information will be available later in the year. The information requested for filled places is given in the table:

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the level of expenditure so far spent on ET (a) in total, (b) advertising which mentions companies participating in ET through the large contractors unit and (c) (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Cope [holding answer 22 June 1989]: Total expenditure on (a) employment training (ET) in the seven months to March 1989 was £423·6 million.

Expenditure on (b) poster, press and television advertising which mentions companies participating in ET was £3·1 million in the same period. (b) is 0·7 per cent. of (a).

Three of the six companies mentioned in the television advertising are involved in ET at area office level and not through the LCU.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the most recent details of (a) the number of filled places on the 23 large company ET schemes listed in the Official Report, 27 February, column 34, (b) any changes to the maximum number of places allocated for each of those schemes and (c) which of those schemes have since withdrawn from ET.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 4 July 1989]: The table updates to 26 May 1989 the details of the 23 large company ET schemes listed in the Official Report, 27 February, column 34.

The maximum number of places allocated column shows, in brackets, the changes to the figures listed in the Official Report.

None of the schemes listed has withdrawn from employment training.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training training managers there are (a) nationally and (b) by Training Agency area; and how many are receiving subsidies above the basic grant per trainee.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 26 June 1989]: There are currently 1,251 employment training (ET) training managers. The number of training managers in each Training Agency area is given in the table. Training managers do not receive subsidies but are paid grants to provide training.

Training (Redundancy Payments)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money has been reimbursed to (a) community programme agents and sponsors, (b) employment training training managers and (c) employment training training agents for redundancy payments during the period from 1 September 1988, up to the most recently available date.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The amounts of money reimbursed for redundancy payments from 1 September 1988 up to and including May 1989, are as follows:

(a) Community programme agents and sponsors—£1·961 million.

(b) Employment training (ET) training.

and

(c) Managers and training agents—£0·138 million.

Disablement Resettlement Officers

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether disablement resettlement officers are encouraged to make direct referrals, where appropriate, of disabled people to Finchdale, Portland, Queen Elizabeth's and St. Loyes' residential training colleges.

Mr. Lee: Disablement resettlement officers consider the individual training needs of their clients. Where these needs can be most appropriately met by one of the four residential training colleges, they are able to make a direct referral to the relevant college.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the overall budget of the Disablement Advisory Service; what proportion of the budget is devoted to promoting the service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 6 June 1989]: Information about the overall cost of the Disablement Advisory Service (DAS) is not available. In 1988-89, approximately £341,000 was spent on leaflets, videos, advertisements, exhibitions etc. promoting services and schemes, including the DAS, to encourage and assist the employment of people with disabilities. In addition, DAS staff make direct approaches to employers to promote its objectives, services etc.

Tourism

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, if he has concluded his review of tourism policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: I announced last July that I was reviewing those aspects of tourism policy for which I am responsible —the promotion of Britain overseas, and the promotion and development of tourism in England.

I have concluded that the present organisation needs to be simplified and that the industry should be more directly engaged. Government financial support for the promotion of tourism should continue, but this needs to be more sharply focused.

Within the framework of the 1969 Development of Tourism Act, I intend to work closely with the chairman and members of the British Tourist Authority (BTA) and the English tourist board (ETB), and with the chairmen of the regional tourist boards in England to make changes along these lines, to improve cost-effectiveness and to extend partnerships with the industry. Accordingly, I am asking the BTA to ensure that greater authority is devolved to its overseas regions. I shall expect the BTA to work even more closely with industry in overseas markets, and to move some of its operations into the private sector. The present head office structure should, as a consequence of these various changes, be slimmed down.

I will also expect the ETB to devolve many of its activities and direct substantially more of its funding to the regional tourist boards under a form of contract, targeting that support especially to regions where the private sector most needs such support. This would enable the RTB's to increase their marketing activities and their direct involvement in encouraging the development of tourism locally. I would expect the regional boards to use such funds as a lever to achieve further private sector participation. I shall also expect the ETB to move into the private sector activities for which that is appropriate. The ETB will continue to play an important co-ordinating role but, as a consequence of these changes, I shall clearly expect a reduction in the scale of its activity at the centre.

On 30 January, I announced the suspension of the section 4 scheme of financial assistance for tourism projects in England, pending the outcome of my review more generally. In the second half of 1988 investment completed or underway on major tourism projects in England were some £2·5 billion. Accordingly I believe that the future prosperity and growth of tourism no longer depends on this scheme. No new offers of financial assistance will therefore be made under the scheme in England. Fees for applications held over since the suspension will be returned, and all offers of assistance already made will be honoured, subject to the conditions of offer being met.

Tourism is now worth some £19 billion annually to the United Kingdom economy and the Government remain committed to this important industry.

Remploy

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the reports to the Remploy board of directors which recommended the closure of the Rutherglen factory and the transfer of the work force to the Clydebank factory.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 29 June 1989]: The board of Remploy is responsible for making decisions relating to the day to day business of the company. The information requested is commercial and confidential to the board.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the number of disabled employees made redundant by Remploy in the last 10 years.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 29 June 1989]: I am informed by Remploy that no disabled employees have been made redundant by the company in the last 10 years.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Domestic Violence

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department with whom he has had discussions regarding the Home Office publication on domestic violence; and what conclusions have been reached.

Mr. John Patten: Home Office research study No. 107 "Domestic Violence: An overview of the literature" will be discussed at the next meeting of the ministerial group on women's issues. This will take place on 20 July.

Broadcasting

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to representations about basing Channel 5 in Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We see considerable merit in Channel 5 being based outside London.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will consider the appointment of a member of the black and minority ethnic communities as chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality when the position becomes due for reappointment;

(2) if he will publish a breakdown of commissioners in the Commission for Racial Equality in terms of ethnic group;

(3) if he will publish a breakdown of staff in the Commission for Racial Equality in terms of grades and ethnic group;

(4) what is the period of the appointment of the chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality; and when it comes up for renewal;

(5) what is the present remuneration of the chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality;

(6) what representations he has received from commissioners of the Commission for Racial Equality or others regarding the number of people from black and minority ethnic groups in senior positions; and if he will make a statement;

(7) what steps he is taking to increase the representation of black and minority ethnic communities in the Commission for Racial Equality at senior grades;

(8) when he expects next to meet the chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality; and what will they discuss;

(9) whether he will place in the Library a copy of the Commission for Racial Equality equal opportunities statement and policy.

Mr. John Patten: The chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality is appointed for five years. The appointment of the present chairman, whose current remuneration is £45,315 per annum, expires on 31 January 1993. When the time comes, candidates from the ethnic minority communities will undoubtedly be among those considered for this important post.

The current ethnic distribution of the commission and its staff is as follows:

	Afro-Caribbean or African	Asian	Other	White
As at 30 June 1989
Commissioner	3	6·0	—	5·0
Chief executive	—	—	—	1·0
Director	—	1·0	—	3·0
Principal	1	5·0	—	9·0
SEO	8	4·0	—	23·5
HEO	24	13·0	5	16·0
EO	9	6·5	1	7·0
Graphic designer	—	—	—	1·0
AO	16	7·0	—	4·0
AA	6	—	—	2·0
Typing manager	1	—	—	—
SPS	2	—	—	—
PS	7	2·0	1	2·0
Typist	10	0·5	—	5·0
Messenger	1	—	—	2·0

Responsibility for the staffing of the commission lies not with the Secretary of State but with the commission itself. I am placing a copy of its equal opportunities statement in the Library. The commission is, I know, keen to improve representation of the black and other ethnic minority communities at senior grades. My right hon. Friend has received three letters about the staffing of the CRE. While, like the commission itself, we hope to see more black and other ethnic minority appointments, we do not judge the effectiveness of the commission's work for racial equality simply in terms of the ethnic composition of its staff.

My right hon. Friend expects to meet the chairman shortly to discuss current issues of mutual concern. I will be meeting the chairman and other commissioners at a commission on 25 July.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Sussex police as to the action he has taken to delete material collected on computer relating to the 1988 Conservative party conference in accordance with the Data Protection Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. This is an operational matter for the chief constable of Sussex police.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the level of combustion of (a) unleaded petrol and (b) leaded petrol; what are the implications for the control of petrol fires; what are the implications of the increasing use of unleaded petrol for the type of equipment and appliances required by the fire service; and whether these are being made available.

Mr. John Patten: I am advised that the combustion characteristics of both are identical. Users of unleaded petrol are therefore at no greater risk from fire. I am satisfied that fire brigades are adequately equipped to deal with petrol fires.

Police Communications

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the improvement of police communications by employing the use of a space satellite; if he has explored the possibility of co-operation with his counterparts in other member countries of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As part of its programme of work aimed at improving police communications, the Department keeps under active review the costs and benefits of using satellites, either on a United Kingdom or a European basis. Our present view is that such a development is not yet either a practical or an economic proposition, but a further review of the use of this technology for police communications is about to be undertaken.

Immigration

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of immigration appeals currently waiting to be heard in Scotland.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 4 July at column 113.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many European Economic Community nationals have settled in the United Kingdom since 1973.

Mr. Renton: European Community nationals wishing to reside in the United Kingdom benefit from certain provisions of Community law. They may apply for settlement after a period of temporary residence in the United Kingdom. Over the period 1973-88, a total of 41,000 European Community nationals (excluding citizens of the Republic of Ireland) were accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any central record is maintained of the numbers of European Economic Community nationals or nationals of overseas territories of European Economic Community states who come to the United Kingdom and do not depart; and if he has any information of the numbers involved.

Mr. Renton: No detailed central record is kept of EC nationals entering or leaving the United Kingdom. However, sample information from the international passenger survey suggests that about 7 million EC nationals entered the United Kingdom in 1988, and of these about 30,000 intended to stay for a year or more.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any restrictions are placed on persons admitted for settlement to European Economic Community nations and then awarded citizenship who enter, and remain to work, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: All EC nations (except, for a transitional period, Spanish and Portuguese nationals) have the right under Community law to work or seek work in other member states. No distinction is made in Community law between persons born with EC nationality and those who acquire it later.

Broadcasting

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to give powers to the Independent Broadcasting Authority to be able to prevent the involvement in television companies which it regulates, of individuals found to be unfit to hold a television broadcasting licence in other countries.

Mr. Renton: The IBA is not bound by regulatory decisions in other jurisdictions in carrying out its functions under the Broadcasting Act 1981. We are considering what enforcement powers will be needed by the Independent Television Commission, which we have proposed should take over from the IBA.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet representatives of the broadcasting authorities; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Renton: I meet representatives from the broadcasting authorities regularly in order to discuss a wide variety of topics in which they have an interest.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Late Sittings

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many times to date the House of Commons has sat beyond midnight during the current parliamentary session; and what are the comparable figures for each parliamentary year from 1979 to date.

Mr. Wakeham: Tuesday 4 July was the 135th sitting day of this Session, and up to and including that date, the House had sat beyond midnight 48 times. The figures for the same point in previous Sessions since 1979 are as follows:

	Number
1979-80	49
1980-81	54
1981-82	42
1982-83	[1]33
1983-84	46
1984-85	60
1985-86	57

[1] Short Session: 115 sitting days.
[2] Short Session: 109 sitting days.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Disabled Persons

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will amend section 4 of the Building (Prescribed Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (N.I.) 1983 to provide that all building works designed to secure the greater health, safety, welfare or convenience of disabled persons, within their own homes, and in public places and buildings, continue to receive exemption from payment of plan fees and inspection fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: It is not necessary to amend building regulations to provide exemption from fees for building work carried out to dwellings, or buildings to which the public are admitted, solely for the benefit of disabled people. Regulation 6A of the Building (Prescribed Fees) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1982 (SR 1982 No. 392) already provides that exemption.

Building Regulations

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what are the total numbers of (a) plan fees and (b) inspection fees that were paid to each district council in Northern Ireland under the Building (Prescribed Fees) Regulations (NI) 1982 in each year since 1 January 1983, in respect of (i) buildings to which members of the public are admitted, whether on payment or otherwise, (ii) public dwellings, (iii) private dwellings and (iv) other buildings;

(2) what are the total numbers of applications for exemption of payment of (a) plan fees and (b) inspection fees, refused for each district council area in Northern Ireland under the Building (Prescribed Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (NI) 1983 in each year since 1 January 1984, in respect of (i) buildings to which members of the public are admitted, whether on payment or otherwise, (ii) public authority dwellings, (iii) private dwellings and (iv) other buildings;

(3) what are the total numbers of exemptions from payment of (a) plan fees and (b) inspection fees, granted for each district council area in Northern Ireland under the Building (Prescribed Fees) Regulations (NI) 1983 in each year since 1 January 1984, in respect of (i) buildings to which members of the public are admitted, whether on payment or otherwise, (ii) public authority dwellings, (iii) private dwellings and (iv) other buildings;

(4) what are the total values of (a) plan fees and (b) inspection fees that were paid to each district council in Northern Ireland under the Building (Prescribed Fees) Regulations (NI) 1982 in each year since 1 January 1983, in respect of (i) buildings to which members of the public are admitted, whether on payment or otherwise, (ii) public authority dwellings, (iii) private dwellings and (iv) other buildings;

(5) what are the total values of applications for exemption of payment of (a) plan fees and (b) inspection fees refused for each district council area in Northern Ireland under the Building (Prescribed Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (NI) 1983 in each year since 1 January 1984 in respect of (i) buildings to which members of the public are admitted, whether on payment or otherwise, (ii) public authority dwellings, (iii) private dwellings and (iv) other buildings;

(6) what are the total values of exemptions from payment of (a) plan fees and (b) inspection fees granted under the Building (Prescribed Fees) (Amendment) Regulations (NI) 1983 in each year since 1 January 1984 in respect of (i) buildings to which members of the public are admitted, whether on payment or otherwise, (ii) public authority dwellings, (iii) private dwellings and (iv) other buildings.

Mr. Needham: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Youth Training Programme

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fatalities, major injuries and minor injuries occurred to those in YTP schemes since the programme's inception to the latest date (a) for each year and (b) the total.

Mr. Viggers: The figures are as follows:

	Fatalities	Major injuries	Minor injuries	Total
September 1982-December 1982	—	4	33	37
January 1983-December 1983	—	16	73	89

Benefit (Young People)

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many young people have been refused benefit after making an application under the severe hardship rule.

Mr. Needham: Twelve during the period 12 September 1988 to 30 June 1989.

Graduates

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the total number of graduates in employment as a percentage of all in employment for each of the years 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Viggers: Estimates from labour force surveys in Northern Ireland are as shown in the table:

Graduates of working age[1] in employment as a percentage of all in employment (at spring of each year)

	Percentage
1984	5·1
1985	5·4
1986	6·0
1987	5·8

Coats Viyella

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial assistance has been received by the Coats Viyella plant in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 26 June 1989]: Coats Viyella has 10 manufacturing plants within the textiles and clothing sector in Northern Ireland employing 3,600 people. In the 1988-89 financial year financial assistance totalling £5,556,670 was paid to the CV group.

Shipbuilding (Redundancies)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of redundancies in the shipbuilding and ship repair industries in Northern Ireland during the period 1 January 1979 to 31 December 1988.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 30 June 1989]: The total number of redundancies during this period at Harland and Wolff was some 6,000.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the Fun Eating at School Today campaign.

Mr. Butcher: Since joining the FEAST campaign this year, the participating local authorities have noted an increase in pupil take-up of school meals, in contrast to the decline of recent years. This is encouraging evidence that pupils can be attracted by a quality service.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to review the success of the Fun Eating at School Today campaign.

Mr. Butcher: This is for the organisers to do. My right hon. Friend will, however, watch with interest the results of this excellent initiative, which is promoting healthy eating habits among school children.

Consumer Education

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the effect of EEC Commission proposals for the promotion of innovation and for consumer education in United Kingdom secondary education.

Mr. Jackson: Responsibility for secondary education rests with member states, and not with the European Community. The Commission's proposals for the promotion of innovation in secondary education have yet to be considered in detail by member states, although in general they correspond with the thrust of current domestic policies in secondary education. The Commission's recent report on consumer education in secondary education does not conflict with the Government's current education or consumer policies.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what criteria he would use to evaluate a proposal to turn into a city technology college a school which has already been refused grant-maintained status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has not received, and has no grounds for expecting to receive, any such proposal. Any proposal for the establishment of a city technology college in a particular set of premises would be considered on its merits.

South Park School, Lincoln

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received any proposals to turn South Park school, Lincoln, into a city technology college; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has received no such proposals.

School Governors

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many governors have been removed from governing bodies prior to the expected end of their term of office (a) during the current year and (b) before the current year.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authority appointed governors there are in each of the local education authorities in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department of Education and Science does not collect details of the precise number of local education authority appointed governors within each authority. I will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received any representations about the removal of local education authority appointed governors from school governing bodies.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received various representations on this matter. Local education authorities have the statutory power to remove from office governors whom they appoint. They must, however, exercise that power reasonably and we would consider carefully any complaint that they had failed to do so in a particular instance.

Schools (Costs)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table similar to table 12.7 of Cm. 612 recalculated to 1980-81 as the base year, showing the increase in the average unit costs of primary and secondary schools; and if he will provide a breakdown of the increase in real unit costs 1980-81 to 1987-88 shown by that table in a way similar to the 1979-80 to 1987-88 analysis recently provided by his Department to the Education, Science and Arts Committee.

Mr. Butcher: The real-terms increase in the average net institutional expenditure per pupil in maintained primary and secondary schools in England between 1980-81 and 1987-88 is as follows:

Increase in real terms[1] unit costs

	Per cent.
1980-81	100
1981-82	104
1982-83	106
1983-84	109
1984-85	110
1985-86	112
1986-87	121
1987-88	129

[1] Cash prices for 1980-81 have been repriced to 1987-88 prices using the GDP deflator.

The real terms increase of 29 per cent. between 1980-81 and 1987-88 may be analysed as follows:

	Per cent.
Increase due to:
Volume
reduced pupil:teacher ratio	11
improved provision for non-teaching costs such as books and equipment and repairs and maintenance	6
Total volume	17
Price
teachers' pay	11
non-teaching pay and prices	1

Higher Education (Funding)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the outcome of his consultations on shifting the balance of public funding of higher education to fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The proposals in the consultation paper "Shifting the Balance of Public Funding of Higher Education to Fees" have been widely welcomed. In the light of this positive response, the Government have decided to increase the full-time undergraduate tuition fee met through mandatory awards from its 1989-90 level of £607 to £1,675 in 1990-91. I am writing as follows today to the chairmen of the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council and Universities Funding Council.

"The Government's consultation paper "Shifting the Balance of Public Funding of Higher Education to Fees" was published on 25 April. The Department has received over 150 responses, including that from the Council for which I am grateful.

The overwhelming majority of the responses supported the proposed increase in the publicly funded fee. In the light of this reaction, I have announced today the Government's intention to proceed with the shift. The flat-rate fee for full-time undergraduate students met under the mandatory awards arrangements will be set at £1,675 for the academic year 1990-91. Officials are writing separately to the Council's Chief Executive about the corresponding deduction which will need to be made from the Council's grant and some other technical issues.

A key issue raised by the proposals is the financing of part-time courses and full-time courses not designated under the awards regulations. The Government fully recognises the importance of the continuing availability of these courses in increasing and diversifying higher education opportunities.

As the consultation paper makes clear, the shift of funds from central grant to fees will be in respect of students on designated courses with awards. We intend to maintain the level of funds made available to the Funding Councils for the support of part-time and full-time non-designated courses. I look to the Council in turn to discharge its funding responsibility so as to ensure that support for places on these courses is at least maintained, and I welcome the PCFC's recent decision to provide some enhancement of the resources available for funding part-time places in 1990-91. It is important that the Council's funding methods are such that there need be no increase in fees for these courses in line with the planned increase in the publicly funded full-time fee, though it will remain the case that the level at which fees are set is a matter for individual institutions.

I should like also to respond to the concern that has been expressed in the responses about the position of full-time self-financing students who are on designated courses but are not themselves eligible for a mandatory award, usually by virtue of previous study. For students who are already enrolled (ie who started their courses in the academic year 1989-90 or before) there will, as with those on non-designated courses, be no shift of funds as a result of the switch. Therefore there will be no financial pressure on the system to charge such students more in real terms than they are paying at present. It ought to be possible for the Council and institutions together to translate this policy into detailed practice, so affording the protection envisaged for this group of students in the consultation paper.

For new self-financing students on designated courses, it will continue to be for institutions to set the fee charged. That is something they will do in the light of local circumstances, including the interests of the students concerned. It would be quite contrary to the general thrust of the Government's policies to seek to impose a standard line on institutions.

In view of the widespread interest generated by the consultation paper, I am releasing the text of this letter to the Press."

The deadline for comments on the consultation paper's second proposal to introduce differentiated fees in 1991-92 expires at the end of July. I will inform the House of the Government's conclusions on that consultation in due course.

ENERGY

Electricity Generation

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the volume of coal consumption for the purpose of electricity generation in 1989; and what was the national consumption in 1988.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government do not publish estimates of coal consumption. In the four months January to April 1989, coal consumption by United Kingdom public supply power stations was 29·4 million tonnes. Consumption on the same basis for the whole of 1988 was 82·5 million tonnes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mortgage Repossessions (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Attorney-General how many court actions relating to mortgage repossessions occurred in the Leeds county court in each year since 1982.

The Attorney-General: The number of mortgage actions for possession issued in Leeds county court were:

	Number
1982	803
1983	508
1984	538
1985	800
1986	773
1987	492
1988	807

Sir Terence Conran

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Attorney-General if he will seek to institute committal proceedings against Sir Terence Conran, chairman of the Storehouse group of companies, to restrain him from his named intention to break the law by authorising the opening of the group's shops on Sundays in defiance of the terms of the Shops Act 1950.

The Attorney-General: As I have indicated to my hon. Friend in answers given on 17 April 1989 and 3 July 1989, it is the statutory duty of each local authority to enforce the Shops Act 1950 in its area. If a local authority considers, in the exercise of its discretion, that proper enforcement requires that a threatened breach be restrained by injunction, it is open to it to make such an application to the High Court.

Criminal Legal Aid

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration he is giving to alternative remuneration structures for solicitors providing criminal legal aid services.

The Attorney-General: In the light of information obtained last year which linked profitability from criminal legal aid work with the volume dealt with, the Lord Chancellor recognises that the present remuneration structure for criminal legal aid, which is based on national averages and across the board rates, may no longer be entirely appropriate. He has therefore invited the joint data committee of his Department and the Law Society, with assistance from the Legal Aid Board, to consider the coverage of solicitors' firms which handle criminal legal aid cases and the volume of work available to them. He will consider whether alternative remuneration structures are required when the committee has reported.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to ensure the general availability of criminal legal aid services; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor is committed to ensuring that criminal legal aid services continue to be generally available. There is no objective evidence at present that there are insufficent solicitors available to undertake criminal legal aid work. The number of solicitors carrying out this work is kept under review. The matter is also presently being considered by the joint data committee of the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Law Society.

Solicitors' Firms

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to receive the survey of the joint data committee of the coverage of solicitors' firms; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The committee's work is still in a very early stage and it is not yet possible to say when it will report.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cambodia

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will be attending the Paris peace conference on Cambodia in July; and if he will make it his policy to oppose a solution which permits the return of the Khmer Rouge.

Mr. Eggar: We expect to attend the international conference. A central objective of our policy is to prevent the Khmer Rouge returning to power by force and to help bring about a political settlement which enables the Cambodian people to elect a Government of their own choice.

China

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Chinese authorities on behalf of Liu Huanwen, Liu Qiang, Bai Dongping and Han Dongfang of the Beijing Autonomous Workers Union arrested over the past month; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We and our European partners have repeatedly urged the Chinese authorities to put an end to their repressive actions against those who have done no more than claim their democratic rights. In the declaration on China adopted by the European Council on 27 June the Twelve called for the admission of independent observers to attend trials and to visit prisons. This would cover those members of the Peking Autonomous Workers Union to whom the hon. Member refers.

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people have applied to the post in Dusseldorf for visas to visit the United Kingdom during 1989 to date; what were the figures for the comparable periods of 1988 and 1987; what were the total numbers of applicants by nationality; what were the total numbers of applications (a) granted and (b) refused; and what was the average waiting time for interview for each month in each year.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 June 1989]: The consulate-general in Dusseldorf received 5,380 entry clearance applications in the period January to May 1989. Applications in the same period in 1988 and 1987 were 5,300 and 4,858. Details of nationality are not kept. The total number of entry clearances (including visas for dependent territories) issued and refused are:

	Issued	Refused
1987	9,892	82
1988	11,890	156
[1]1989	4,265	66

[1] January to May.

The average waiting times, in weeks, for the minority requiring interview for each month in 1987, 1988 and 1989 to date were:

	1987	1988	1989
January	8·0	8·0	17
February	7·0	9·0	19
March	6·0	8·0	21
April	4·0	7·0	23
May	2·0	5·0	21
June	4·5	4·0	—
July	6·0	4·5	—
August	8·0	7·0	—
September	10·0	9·0	—
October	8·0	12·0	—
November	9·0	16·0	—
December	9·0	17·0	—

The rise in applications recorded in 1988 resulted in a backlog of paperwork related to those applications which attracted either refusal or further inquiries. From the autumn, staff were diverted to deal with it. They have now been redeployed to increase the number of interviews and thus reduce the waiting time.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing Trade (EC)

202. Mr. Robinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which members of the European Community the United Kingdom enjoyed a surplus in manufacturing trade in 1988.

203. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which members of the European Community the United Kingdom enjoyed a surplus in manufacturing trade in 1988.

204. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which members of the European Community the United Kingdom enjoyed a surplus in manufacturing trade in 1988.

206. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which members of the European Community the United Kingdom enjoyed a surplus in manufacturing trade in 1988.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which members of the European Community the United Kingdom enjoyed a surplus in manufacturing trade in 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: In 1988 the United Kingdom had surpluses in trade in manufactures with Ireland, Spain and Greece.

Consumer Goods

205. Mr. Bright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by how much the volume of consumer goods exported in the first quarter of 1989 grew; and by how much the volume of consumer goods imported changed.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the first quarter of 1989 the volume of exports of consumer goods[1] on a seasonal adjusted overseas trade statistics basis increased by 12 per cent. over the previous quarter. On the same basis imports of consumer goods fell by 1 per cent.

[1]Part of SITC 7 & 8, based on the United Nations broad economic categories.

British Export Goods

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans his Department has to increase promotion of British export goods in (a) European Community countries, (b) other European countries, (c) the United States of America and (d) other countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: I announced on 17 January at columns 106-08 the relaunch of my Department's export initiative which introduced new measures to enhance the extensive range of export services traditionally provided by the Department. The initiative provides practical help, advice and support for United Kingdom exporters for all overseas markets. Major promotional campaigns, such as Opportunity Japan have an important role to play in this process.

Export performance overall is encouraging. In the three months ending May 1989, non-oil exports increased in real terms by 7 per cent. over the same period last year.

Fitness Equipment (Safety)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to introduce safety standards to home gym and keep-fit equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Work is to begin next month on the preparation of a harmonised European safety standard for fitness training equipment which will include equipment for home use. The general safety requirement under section 10 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987, which came into force on 1 October 1987, applies to equipment supplied as consumer goods.

Soviet Union (Joint Ventures)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what advice his Department provides for those seeking joint ventures in the Soviet Union with (a) state enterprises and (b) co-operatives.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department provides advice on the opportunities, the merits and the difficulties in establishing joint ventures in the Soviet Union. Generally, the advice is cautionary because of the Soviet's shortage of hard currency, and particularly so in the case of co-operatives, about which little is known individually. Nevertheless, we are very much in favour of companies doing all they can to find mutually advantageous deals and my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Young visited one successful British joint venture in operation near Kiev last week.

The Soviet Union is mainly interested in establishing manufacturing joint ventures which have an export potential. Companies considering such joint ventures need to decide whether they wish to supply their export markets from a Soviet joint venture manufacturing base. Western companies have instead tended to prefer joint ventures which perform a service, for example, hotel construction and operation, and are therefore able to earn more easily the hard currency which is necessary to provide the western partner with a return on its investment.

Measurement Systems

Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has for the future development of the national measurement systems.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster have, this afternoon, laid before Parliament a White Paper "Measuring up to the Competition". The White Paper describes the national measurement system and sets out the Government's policy towards this important aspect of the national infrastructure. It describes the role that Government will continue to have in providing the framework for a coherent system of measurement in the country. At the centre of the system are the national measurement standards held, principally, at the national physical laboratory (NPL), a research establishment of the Department of Trade and Industry and a candidate next steps executive agency. The NPL is also the focus for national calibration and accreditation services.

Our plans for the future include extending our collaboration with other European national measurement laboratories in order to ensure an efficient and harmonised system of measurement throughout Europe. We will be seeking to involve business in developing new measurement standards where it has special facilities or expertise to offer. We will also be encouraging business to provide calibration and testing services within the national framework and for it to seek voluntary accreditation through the national measurement accreditation service (Namas), a service of the NPL. A Namas accreditation can help reduce the burden of multiple assessments of a business's competence to undertake tests and calibration. The White Paper also announces a special initiative to be taken by the laboratory of the Government chemist, also a research establishment of the Department and candidate next steps agency, to improve the validity of chemical measurement in the United Kingdom and harmonise it with that in other countries within Europe.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what reduction there has been in the use of chlorofluorocarbons within the differing sectors of the economy since the time of the Government-sponsored international conference on the protection of the ozone layer earlier this year.

Mr. Atkins: This information is not available. The United Kingdom is, however, on course to meet its international commitments on overall CFC reductions well ahead of schedule. Since the conference, there is clear evidence from the CFC-using industries that they are even more aware of the need to respond effectively in achieving CFC reductions. They and the United Kingdom CFC-producer companies are to be commended for their efforts in developing and adopting alternative substances, processes and products.

SCOTLAND

Community Charge

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy regarding the payment of any arrears of poll tax subsequent to a person's death.

Mr. Lang: The collection of the community charge is a matter for Scottish levying authorities. Where there is an amount of community charge due in respect of the period before a person's death, it will, therefore, be for the authority concerned to request payment from the deceased's estate. I am sure that authorities are aware of the need for sensitivity in such cases.

Elderly People (Long-term Care)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the companies with which Greater Glasgow health board is discussing the future provision of long-term care for the elderly.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Geriatric Services

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when Greater Glasgow health board last discussed with (a) social work departments and (b) the Church of Scotland the future provision of geriatric services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have asked the chairman of Greater Glasgow health board to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Geriatric Facilities, Rutherglen

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the criteria which must be met before the sale by Greater Glasgow health board of the site proposed for a geriatric hospital in Rutherglen could proceed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is for Greater Glasgow health board to decide whether the site is required for its planned development. if a site is surplus, Government policy requires health boards to dispose of land which is not required as quickly as possible having regard to the state of the market, and good marketing practice.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the representations he has received which support the replacement of proposed National Health Service geriatric facilities in Rutherglen with proposals for commercial provision by Takare plc.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No representations have been received.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he will make for public consultation in Cambuslang and Rutherglen regarding the proposal by Greater Glasgow health board, to contract geriatric services from Takare plc at the site in Rutherglen presently owned by Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Home and Health Department issued guidance to health boards in 1975 about consultation when changes are planned in the provision of services.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the benefits which would be achieved by replacing the provision of National Health Service geriatric services in Rutherglen with private commercial based services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provision of services is primarily a matter for the health board. I understand that the health board is considering how best to make good the known shortfall in the provision of services for the elderly in Rutherglen. The board is putting the interests of patients first and I welcome that.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultation has taken place with Glasgow district council and Strathclyde regional council with regard to the proposal by the Greater Glasgow health board to sell land in Rutherglen for the provision of private geriatric services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Officials from both councils have been involved in discussions about the health board's strategy for the care of the elderly. This strategy seeks to identify appropriate and cost effective ways of meeting the needs of the elderly living in the board's area. Glasgow district council, as planning authority, will be consulted on any planning issues arising.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the conditions of use which were part of the agreement when Rutherglen town council sold the site in Rutherglen now owned by Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that there are no conditions governing use in the title to the land adjacent to Rutherglen maternity hospital, which was granted to the Western region hospital board by the then royal burgh of Rutherglen in 1972.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to take account of the views of Glasgow district council and Strathclyde regional council with regard to the proposal to sell land in Rutherglen for the provision of private geriatric services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right and learned Friend has not received any such views.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any company other than Takare plc has been involved in discussions regarding the provision of commercial geriatric services at the site in Rutherglen presently owned by Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provision of services is primarily a matter for the health board. I understand that discussions have taken place with a number of companies.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, for forestry planting policy, he classifies Acer pseudoplatanus to be an indigenous or an alien species.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Acer pseudoplatanus is regarded as a species that is naturalised though not indigenous.

Undergraduate Tuition Fees

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to increase the level of the home full-time undergraduate tuition fee from 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proposals in the consultation paper "Shifting the Balance of Public Funding of Higher Education to Fees" have been widely welcomed in Scotland; and I have decided that the tuition fee for full-time undergraduate and most other students whose fees are reimbursed under the students' allowance scheme for Scottish residents will be set at £1,675 for the academic year 1990-91. This increase matches a decision announced today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science to increase the fees reimbursed in the scheme of mandatory awards for residents of England and Wales.

In acknowledgment, however, of representations which have been made in response to consultations, I have decided to extend the fee increase to full-time non-degree courses in Scotland leading to qualifications for professions supplementary to medicine and social work for which fees are reimbursed in the students' allowance scheme.

This new level of fee will offer higher education institutions a clear incentive to attract additional students, and will thus further our policy of extending wider access to higher education. For nearly all full-time students, the higher fee will continue to be met through the schemes of student awards, so that as now there will be no cost to the student. For those students who pay their own fees—part-time students or full-time students who are ineligible for awards—we intend to maintain the level of funds available for distribution as grant to the institutions, so that there should be no pressure on the institutions to charge such students more in real terms than they are paying at present. I look to the institutions to ensure that these students are protected from the increased level of fee.

Art Colleges

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of entrants to each Scottish college of art in each of the past 10 years, from (a) Scottish schools, (b) other United Kingdom schools, (c) overseas and (d) other avenues.

Mr Michael Forsyth [holding answer 23 June 1989]: Information is not readily available.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 7 July 1989

DEFENCE

Submarines

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has received any representations on reported incidents between fishing boats and submarines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Letters have been received from fishermen's organisations and other interested individuals about a number of incidents in which submarines are alleged to have been involved.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances he is prepared to release details of the whereabouts of United Kingdom or allies' submarines on operational duty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It would not be in the national interest, or in the interests of our allies, to disclose such information.

Attack Helicopter

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on his proposals for the development and deployment of an attack helicopter for the armed forces.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Stroud on 7 February 1989 at column 669.

B52 Aircraft (Exercises)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all exercises involving operations of B52 aircraft from bases in the United Kingdom that have taken place, or are scheduled to take place, during 1989, including exercise names, duration of each exercise, bases used and which units the aircraft are from.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: So far this year, the United States Air Force B52 aircraft have deployed to stations in the United Kingdom as follows:

Date	Exercise	Station	Unit
17-21 April	Busy Warrior	RAF Fairford	42 Bomb Wing, Loring AFB, Maine.
21-30 June	Joint Maritime Course	RAF Mildenhall	42, Bomb Wing, Loring AFB, Maine.

A further deployment to RAF Fairford of B52 aircraft participating in a Busy Warrior exercise is planned to take place from 31 August to 20 September 1989.

NATO Combat Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list those aircraft types that are currently in operational service with the United States Air Force at bases in the United Kingdom which are not classed as combat aircraft;

(2) if he will list those aircraft types that are currently in operational service with the United States Air Force at bases in the United Kingdom which are classed as combat aircraft;

(3) if he will list those aircraft types that are currently in operational service with the Royal Air Force which are classed as combat aircraft;

(4) what assessment he has made of the effect on the Royal Air Force of the proposed reductions in the number of land-based combat aircraft in the Atlantic-to-Urals zone announced at the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation summit of 29-30 May if dual-capable aircraft were not included;

(5) what assessment he has made of the effect on the Royal Air Force and the Army Air Corps of the proposed reductions in the numbers of helicopters and land-based combat aircraft in the Atlantic-to-Urals zone announced at the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation summit of 29-30 May.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Details of numbers and types of combat aircraft belonging to NATO and Warsaw pact forces will be found on paper 27-28 of NATO's publication "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. NATO is now in the process of refining this information for use in the conventional armed forces in Europe (CFE) negotiations in Vienna. It is too early to say what might be the effect on the United Kingdom's armed forces of any reductions in combat aircraft and helicopters agreed at the CFE talks. The national contributions towards such reductions, in these as in other areas, would be a matter for collective NATO decisions.

F111 Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the exercise of F111 aircraft of the United States Air Force, normally based at Cannon air force base, New Mexico, at Boscombe Down airfield, Wiltshire, including exercise name, duration, number of aircraft involved and details of similar exercises in 1980, 1983 and 1986.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The exercise referred to is Coronet Diamond. I will write to the hon. Member with the further details that he requests.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his answers regarding deterioration of safety margins and reduced manoeuvrability of F111 aircraft on take off from RAF Upper Heyford apply to the EF-111 aircraft stationed there.

Mr. Neubert: Concern about declining safety margins which led to the change of flight paths at RAF Upper Heyford in June 1988 arose in relation to the F111E aircraft stationed at the base. However, for reasons of safety and air traffic control, all aircraft at the base now use the modified take-off pattern.

HMS Dreadnought

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current locations of the reactor and the reactor compartment from HMS Dreadnought; and how long they have been at their present locations.

Mr. Sainsbury: The de-fuelled reactor of Dreadnought is inside the reactor compartment, which remains an integral part of the submarine. Dreadnought has been berthed at Rosyth naval base since 1983.

IUKADGE

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide his latest estimate for the total cost of the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment when completed.

Mr. Sainsbury: The estimated cost of the complete IUKADGE programme at current prices is £500 million.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the current IUKADGE/ICCS will be able to fully integrate the RAF's link 16 requirement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: All the indications to date suggest that it will be possible to achieve full integration of link 16 into IUKADGE to meet the RAF's requirements.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department had about the possibility of purchasing intellectual property rights associated with the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment; and if he will summarise the details of these discussions including the price asked for those rights by their current holders.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not our practice to reveal details of commercially confidential negotiations.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current assumption of the date upon which the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment will be fully operational in service.

Mr. Sainsbury: We expect that the IUKADGE will be fully operational in the early 1990s.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the likely annual software maintenance costs in relation to IUKADGE.

Mr. Sainsbury: The latest estimate of the likely annual software maintenance cost of IUKADGE, when the system is fully operational, is £5 million to £6 million. Much of the maintenance of this software will be carried out by the Royal Air Force using in-service resources.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any decision has been made to go ahead with either TRIAD or a deep integration solution in respect of IUKADGE-ICCS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Studies into alternative ways of integrating new data-link systems into IUKADGE are not yet complete. Once the final results have been received they will require extensive evaluation before decisions can be taken.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether (a) the Hughes Corporation, (b) Plessey, (c) Marconi, (d) IUKADGE Systems Ltd. or (e) any other private interest retains intellectual property rights in connection with IUKADGE; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information concerning ownership of IPR associated with IUKADGE is commercially confidential.

Arms Sales (Malaysia)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to the reply of 13 June, Official Report, column 400, what was the date of the first correspondence from Her Majesty's Government dealing with the Malaysian arms sales package that also mentioned overseas aid.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence first wrote to the Malaysian Finance Minister on 28 June 1988 advising him that it would not be acceptable to Her Majesty's Government to link overseas aid to the arms package.

Member's Questions (Cost)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the estimated cost of answering each of the questions from the hon. Member for Coventry South-East, due for answer on 17 May and not given a substantive answer on 3 July, Official Report, column 31; if he will outline the detailed investigations undertaken; what was the cost of answering each of the previous questions from the hon. Member for Coventry South-East of a similar nature to those at column 31; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: This question could be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Port Visits

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to seek arrangements with the Soviet Union for the reciprocal friendly visit of United Kingdom and Soviet nuclear-capable ships to each other's ports, following a similar arrangement between the United States navy and the Soviet navy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government welcome exchange visits by Royal Navy and Soviet warships as part of an increasing programme of United Kingdom-Soviet contacts. The choice of vessel must, however, depend upon a number of factors, in particular ship availability at the time of any projected visit.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Retirement Pensions

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women aged 60 years currently have been excluded from receiving a full retirement pension because their years of work between the ages of 14 and 16 were not taken into account; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible to identify whether there are any women who would have received a full basic retirement pension if they had paid national insurance contributions between 14 and 16 years of age. Prior to 1948, under the National Health Insurance and Contributory Pensions Acts, the earliest date from which an employee could be compulsorily insured for pension purposes was from the date of his/her 16th birthday. Prior to age 16, contributions were payable only for medical cover.

Community Charge (Rebates)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis he estimates that 9,000,000 people will be eligible to receive poll tax rebates; what action he intends for a take-up campaign to encourage those who believe they are eligible for rebates to apply; and how the campaign will be funded.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The estimates of the numbers of people expected to receive community charge rebate that were published last summer were based on the benefit rates then current and the then most recent forecasts of community charge levels, and took account of the best demographic and financial information available at the time. Revised estimates will be published in due course when more up-to-date information is available. The Government have already made available publicity on rebates in the form of free leaflets and booklets, and are taking every opportunity to publicise the need to claim. The need for additional publicity is being kept under close review. The normal arrangements for the funding of Government information apply. In addition, it is expected that publicity campaigns will be mounted by local authorities and by certain other bodies.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking to inform people that the onus is on the individuals who believe they are eligible for poll tax rebates to apply for rebates; and in what languages this advice will be issued.

Mr. Peter Lloyd Local authorities in England and Wales will be able to treat people who are already receiving housing benefit as having claimed community charge benefit. The Department will write to everyone on income support who has not claimed housing benefit with a community charge benefit claim form. The Government are issuing publicity material, in English, drawing attention to the need to claim community charge benefit. In Wales this publicity material is being issued also in Welsh. The leaflet "Which Benefit?", which refers to community charge rebates in Scotland and to community charge benefit, is now being translated into seven Asian languages,and these will be available soon. The pamphlets and leaflets issued by the Department of the Environment, which include advice on claiming community charge benefit, are also being translated into other languages. Local authorities are also expected to publicise the need to claim community charge benefit, and are well placed to assess the need in their area for publicity material in languages other than English.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to change the rule that attendance allowance is to be disregarded by local authorities when assessing a person's ability to pay home help charges, as stated in DHSS circular 53/71.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The guidance in circular 53/71 on charging for home help services was issued in relation to the legislation then current governing the powers to local health authorities to make such charges. These powers are now contained in section 17 of the Health and Social Services and Social Security Adjudication Act 1983 which permits local social services authorities to make such charges (if any) as they consider reasonable, subject to the right of the client to satisfy the authority that he should not pay more than it is reasonably practicable for him to pay. Guidance on the use of these powers was given in circular LAC(84)7 a copy of which is in the Library.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (Financial Regulation 10449/88)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the additional powers which the proposed financial regulation (10449/88) proposes to give to the European Commission.

Mr. Peter Brooke [holding answer 19 June 1989]: The Commission's proposed reform of the financial regulation incorporates revisions which allow the Commission to

(i) decide all transfers of differentiated payment appropriations in the Commission's section of the budget;
(ii) decide transfers between chapters 29 (export refunds in connection with food aid) and 92 (food aid) of part IIIB of the budget;
(iii) implement all of the Community's rights and obligations in ecu;
(iv) prescribe implementing rules to impose penalties, in the form of interest payments, following advances and other payments from the Community Budget which fall to be repaid; and take decisions on the reuse of such advances;
(v) reuse the proceeds of the sale of buildings;
(vi) decide, under implementing rules and after consulting all other institutions, on various monetary amounts connected with contracts (amounts hitherto specified in the financial regulation);
(vii) prescribe implementing rules for the use of electronic management and accounting systems;
(viii) prescribe implementing rules applicable to the accounting officer and assistant accounting officers;
(ix) prescribe implementing rules relating to the award of contracts, the keeping of inventories, the system of accounts and imprest accounting, all in connection with Community staff serving outside the Community.

EC Funds (Misuse)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement explaining the operation of the proposals made by the European Commission to empower offices of the Commission to impose penalties on member states for the misuse of EEC funds; and if Her Majesty's Government will seek to secure a procedure of independent appeal to consider complaints against such decisions taken and such fines imposed by the Commission.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 19 June 1989]: The Commission already has powers under which it can reclaim from member states certain payments which have been incorrectly made. If my hon. Friend has in mind a particular legislative proposal involving the imposition of penalties by the Commission, I should be happy to provide, or arrange for, a more specific answer.

Exchange Equalisation Account

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the publicly available sources of information on the exchange equalisation account.

Mr. Lilley: The exchange equalisation account holds the United Kingdom's official reserves, figures for which are published in table 17.1 of the Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin and in table 10.3 of Financial Statistics. Information on reserves changes is also published each month by the Treasury as part of the reserves press notice. Historical material relating to the exchange equalisation account is released in accordance with the Public Records Acts 1958 and 1967.

Share Option Scheme

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when an order will be laid bringing into effect his proposal to increase from £100 to £150 the maximum monthly savings limit on an individual employee's contributions under an approved savings-related share option scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I propose that the Treasury Order should be laid as soon as possible after Royal Assent to the Finance Bill and should bring into force the new £150 limit from 1 September 1989.

SCOTLAND

Mr. Brian Hosie (Letter)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to reply to the letter from Mr. Brian Hosie, a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison, Shotts, dated 8 March.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A reply was sent to him on 6 July. I regret that Mr. Hosie has had to wait so long for a reply to his representations.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Business Watch

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the introduction of Business Watch crime prevention schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: None. We are pleased that local busines communities are now joining the police and other local agencies to help make business premises and industrial estates less vulnerable to crime. We are quite sure that visible efforts to reduce crime can help bring back confidence and create a climate sympathetic to enterprise.

Prison Officers (House Purchase)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations on the length of time it takes to process the applications of prison officers to buy the homes provided with their service.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the two years since prison officers have been able to buy their homes under the prison service discount scheme, more than 4,000 applications have been received and nearly 3,000 properties have been sold. Although extra staff were provided to deal with these applications, the sheer volume caused some delays, particularly in the conveyancing of the properties, and a number of representations have been received about these.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of inmates in Wandsworth prison on 29 June.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 1,548 prisoners were unlocked at Her Majesty's prison Wandsworth on that day.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 13 June, Official Report, columns 367-8, to the hon. Member for Woolwich, when he will have finished considering the report of the efficiency scrutiny of the section 11 grant scheme under the Local Government Act 1986; and when he will be publishing the report.

Mr. John Patten: The report of the scrutiny into grants under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 was published on 3 July. Copies of the report were placed in the Library.

The report contains a number of recommendations to improve the effectiveness of section 11 grant. We are considering further those recommendations with a view to improving the important service that the grant provides in enabling Britain's ethnic minorities to overcome barriers to their full involvement in the mainstream of national life.

Passport Office (Wales)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to establish a passport office to serve all the needs of the whole of Wales.

Mr. Renton: There are no present plans to do so. As I indicated on 14 June in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson) at column 462, we shall be reviewing the location and number of the regional passport offices later this year.

Mrs. Sakina Jan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will take a decision on the application made by Mrs. Sakina Jan, passport No. C813895, visa No. A/G106164, Heathrow reference JE/289/632 on 25 September 1987 to be allowed to remain in the United Kingdom; and why applications for permanent stay made by her representative dated 25 September 1987, 20 December 1988 and 19 May 1989 have, to date, not been answered.

Mr. Renton: I regret that owing to administrative errors, the correspondence relating to Mrs. Sakina Jan's application was misfiled and action was not taken. The correspondence has now been traced and the immigration department is writing to Mrs. Jan's solicitors. The case will be given priority and dealt with as quickly as possible.

Chinese Students

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of his Department towards allowing the wives and children of the Chinese students now studying in the United Kingdom to be granted a visa to join them during their studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Under the immigration rules the wife and children under 18 of a student should be given leave to enter for the period of his authorised stay if they can be maintained and accommodated without recourse to public funds. Applications should be made overseas for prior entry clearance, and each case will be looked at in the light of its particular circumstances.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to grant to Chinese students who obtain extension of stay in the United Kingdom temporary work permits to enable them to support themselves and any dependants.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 26 June to the question from the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) at column 324.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Vandalism

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the cost of his present publicity campaign in the schools against vandalism.

Mr. Butcher: In March 1989, the Department launched the video "Schoolwatch". Total costs to the Department, up to the end of June 1989, to make, distribute and market the video were £75,600. Municipal Mutual Insurance contributed a further £40,000 to this joint venture.

There is an additional ongoing cost to the Department in meeting the cost of CFL Vision making the video available to borrowers on a free loan basis. To the end of June 1989 the cost of financing free borrowings of the video was £6,300.

On 6 July 1989, Building Bulletin 69 "Crime prevention in schools: specification, installation and maintenance of intruder alarm systems" was published by HMSO. The cost to the Department of buying in copies to distribute to local education authorities is £2,100.

National Curriculum

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions his Department had with the teachers' unions on how information as to attainment targets within the national curriculum are to be made available to teachers responsible for the implementation of the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has distributed free copies of the statutory orders for mathematics, science and English in sufficient numbers to allow one for each teacher in primary and special schools, and for each subject specialist in secondary schools. LEAs were invited to estimate the numbers they required on this basis. An advance instalment was sent direct to each school; the remaining copies were delivered to LEAs for them to arrange distribution to schools. There was no need to discuss these arrangements with the teachers' unions; they were publicised well in advance.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information regarding the national curriculum is to be made available on computer disk; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The attainment targets and programmes of study for mathematics and science are already on the national educational resources information service computer system (NERIS), which is available direct to schools or as part of other systems. The attainment targets and programmes of study for English key stage 1 are being put on NERIS now. Additionally, the data is available on a compact disk (a CD-ROM) and NERIS is looking at the possibility of making the data available in other computer disk formats. It is also possible for schools to transfer the material, a key stage at a time, on to their own floppy disks.

Teaching Jobs (Screening)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements have been made to scrutinise overseas applicants for teaching jobs in Britain; and what measures are being taken to ensure that such applicants have not been found guilty of child abuse in their own country.

Mr. Butcher: Applications for qualified teacher status in England and Wales from teachers trained overseas are at present considered by the Department under paragraph 2(b) of schedule 5 to the Education (Teachers) Regulations 1982. Status is accorded in those cases where the course of initial teacher training undertaken was comparable to an approved course of initial teacher training for school teachers available in England and Wales at the same time. Beyond that the question of a person's suitability for appointment is a matter for the local education authority and/or the governing body of the school or establishment concerned, and there are no separate arrangements for scrutinising the background of overseas applicants.

The employment of teachers in Scotland and in Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

Nursery Education (Birkenhead)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when his Department will give approval to the application for the provision of nursery education at St. Paul's Roman Catholic primary school, Greenfields, Birkenhead.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend approved the proposal on 30 June 1989.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration Appeals (Scotland)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Attorney-General how many immigration appeals are currently waiting to be heard in Scotland.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 4 July at column 113.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Attorney-General what measures he is taking to ensure that current delays in respect of immigration appeal hearings in Scotland are minimised.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 4 July at column 113.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Doorkeepers (Summer Uniform)

Mr. Cox: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what plans there are to provide a summer uniform for the House's Doorkeepers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms and I have asked him to consider this proposal.

"Look After Your Heart" Campaign

Dr. David Clark: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, whether the Commission has considered the document, "Working for a Healthier Future—an Employers' Guide to the Look After Your Heart Campaign", a copy of which has been sent to him; and what action is being taken to implement its recommendations in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Beith: The Commission has not yet had an opportunity to consider the document, but it has an obvious continuing interest in maintaining healthy standards in the House for Members and all staff. In that respect it has approved several projects such as a medical surveillance scheme for Members; the appointment of a nursing sister; the retention on a part-time basis of a medical consultant; the retention of a nutritional adviser by the Refreshment Department; the introduction of a triennial screening programme for breast and cervical cancer; the establishment of a gymnasium; and an examination by the Services Committee of the feasibility of including recreational facilities in the planning of the new parliamentary buildings. The Commission will seek the advice of the House authorities on the extent to which the campaign's aims may be applicable to the House.

WALES

Eye Tests

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many eye tests have taken place in Wales (a) in total and (b) for pensioners in each of the years 1986, 1987, 1988 and to the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The numbers of National Health Service sight tests paid for by family practitioner committees in Wales are given in the table. Information on tests paid for privately and on sight tests for pensioners is not available centrally.

Grant Aid

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those voluntary bodies, organisations and projects assisted by his Department with grant aid in the financial year 1987-88, together with the amount and the statutory provision under which the grant was allocated.

Mr. Grist: I regret that full details of all voluntary bodies, organisations and projects receiving grant aid could be extracted from records of major schemes only at disporportionate cost, but the table shows the total grant paid to the voluntary sector under each scheme and relevant statute.

PRIME MINISTER

Madrid Conference

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish the document "Social Progress: the United Kingdom's Record", which was circulated at the Madrid conference.

The Prime Minister: Copies of the document were made available to members of the press at the time of the conference and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost to public funds of producing the document, "Social Progress: the United Kingdom's Record", which was circulated at the Madrid conference.

The Prime Minister: So far, 1,000 copies of the document have been printed at a cost of £1,430.

EC Directives

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the 148 European Community directives which have not been implemented by Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister: The Commission has been asked to provide a list. When this is available it will be placed in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has been making to the Government of China on the subject of human rights.

Mr. Eggar: We have made a number of representations about human rights in China in recent years. As regards the most recent events, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs said in his statement to the House on 6 June that he had summoned the Chinese chargé d'affaires on 5 June to make it clear to him that the British Government and people deeply deplored the action of the Chinese authorities in suppressing the democratic aspirations of the Chinese people. Representations have also been made on behalf of all EC members.

Hong Kong

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the admission of Hong Kong British passport holders to Britain.

Mr. Eggar: We have received many such representations, both here and in Hong Kong, including during the recent visit by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Mr. Jonas Savimbi

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet or exchange views with Mr. Jonas Savimbi of UNITA.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to meet Mr. Savimbi at present.

Tibet

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received calling for Her Majesty's Government to protest to the Government of China about the repression of Tibetan nationals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Among the many representations we have received about China since the recent appalling events there, some have focused on the situation in Tibet.

West Bank and Gaza Strip (Schools)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to seek to ensure that schools, including United Nations Relief and Works Agency schools in the West Bank and Gaza strip, are reopened and educational activity allowed to resume unhindered.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have repeatedly made clear our view that Israel's security concerns do not justify the closure of schools. We have called on the Israeli authorities, most recently in the European Council declaration on the middle east on 27 June, to allow the schools to reopen.

Palestinian and Israeli Students

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the financial assistance available to (a) Palestinian and (b) Israeli students who wish to study in the United Kingdom; and what numbers of students are involved.

Mr. Eggar: Both Israeli students and Palestinian students from the occupied territories are eligible for financial support to study in the United Kingdom under the following award schemes which we fund:

(i) the FCO scholarships and awards scheme (FCOSAS);
(ii) the overseas research students awards scheme (ORSAS) funded by the Department of Education and Science; and
(iii) the British Council's fellowships programme.

In addition, Palestinian students are also supported under the ODA's technical co-operation and training programme (TCTP).

In 1988-89 a total of 63 Israelis and 94 Palestinians from the occupied territories were studying in the United Kingdom and sponsored by us.

EC (Spanish Presidency)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Spanish presidency of the European Community.

Mrs. Chalker: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in her statement on 29 June on the European Council, we congratulate the Spanish Government on their presidency, during which a record 68 single market measures were agreed.

Esquipulas II

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what ways Her Majesty's Government are encouraging the countries of central America to resolve their problems within the framework of the Esquipulas II peace process.

Mr. Eggar: We have consistently supported efforts to promote a peaceful negotiated settlement to the various conflicts in central America, and in all our bilateral and multilateral contacts with the Governments involved we urge the need for full implementation of the Esquipulas II and subsequent agreements. We also take an active part in the efforts of the Twelve to encourage dialogue and regional integration.

Isreal (Nuclear Technology)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements exist between Her Majesty's Government and Israel for the exchange of nuclear technology.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Gibraltar

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received on the future of Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has received no recent representations about the future of Gibraltar. Our consideration of Gibraltar's future is governed by the commitment, renewed by successive Governments, that we would never enter into arrangements under which the people of Gibraltar would pass under the sovereignty of another state against their freely and democratically expressed wishes.

Spain

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to meet the Spanish Foreign Secretary.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs regularly meets the Spanish Foreign Minister at a variety of European Community, NATO and other multilateral meetings. In addition, the two Foreign Ministers meet bilaterally from time to time and hold an annual meeting to discuss Gibraltar-related issues, as part of the Brussels process. The next such meeting is due to take place in Madrid before the end of this year.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Disaster Management Training

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is able to give details of (a) disaster management training programmes for staff within the Overseas Development Administration and (b) the numbers of staff now qualified in these areas.

Mr. Eggar: With the exception of a new staff member, the other three staff in the Overseas Development Administration's disaster unit are widely experienced in disaster response administration. We have recently increased practical and on-the-job training including short, working attachments to the office of the United Nations disaster relief co-ordinator in Geneva and to the United States office of emergency disaster assistance in Washington. The scope for external training is under review.

Plantations

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of plantation developments funded by the Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Eggar: The information is not readily available. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will write to the hon. Member shortly.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Shipbuilding and Ship Repair (Redundancies)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of redundancies in the shipbuilding and ship repair industries in Northern Ireland since 1 January 1984.

Mr. Viggers: The total number of redundancies during this period at Harland and Wolff was some 2,600.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment and Suicide

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, whether any recent surveys have been undertaken or funded by the Government on the relationship between the unemployment rate and the suicide rate.

Mr. Lee: None has been undertaken by or for my Department.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any evidence of a causal link between unemployment and suicide.

Mr. Lee: No.

Employment Training

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his reply of 22 June, Official Report, column 232, concerning trainees who have left the employment training programme, what information is available about the qualifications they obtained on their courses.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 4 July 1989]: Information is collected by Training Agency area offices from training managers about qualifications being studied for, and those achieved. The information is presently being used for the monitoring of individual schemes, and is not aggregated to area office or national level. Comprehensive information (including results received after the trainee has left the programme) will be available in due course at national and local level from a follow-up survey of trainees.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many agreed action plans have been drawn up at ET training agents on a monthly basis (a) nationally and (b) by training agency area, since September 1988.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 3 July 1989]: The information requested is given in the table:

Child Care Facilities

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he is taking to encourage the provision of child care facilities in the workplace; and what information he has on how many firms and Government offices currently provide such facilities.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 5 July 1989]: My right hon. Friend takes every opportunity to encourage employers to help employees combine work and family responsibilities. Workplace nurseries are one possible way of helping parents with child care although it will not necessarily be the most appropriate in all cases. Other possibilities include help with child care costs in the local home area and rearrangement of working hours and holidays to fit in with school hours and terms.

My right hon. Friend does not have comprehensive information on the extent of employer assisted child care outside Government Departments but the indications are that such provision is growing. In the Civil Service 15 Departments provide holiday play schemes for the children of their staff. Two new inter-departmental schemes began in Westminster during the spring 1989 half-term. In addition, two schemes were launched by the DHSS during the Easter holidays—one at the Elephant and Castle and one, with the Department of Employment, in Coventry. The Departments of Employment and Social Security have set up "care-parents" schemes and the Ministry of Defence and the Home Office are both developing nursery schemes for the under-fives.

I also take a full part in the ministerial group on women's issues which is currently considering the whole question of childcare provision and which recently issued a five-point plan designed to pave the way for the provision of child care to suit family needs.

TRANSPORT

Euro-Control

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was achieved during Britain's presidency of Euro-Control.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: [holding answer 6 July 1989]: Under the United Kingdom's presidency in 1988, Euro-Control gained widespread backing as the key organisation for improving practical co-ordination and co-operation between Europe's national air traffic control authorities. A number of successful initiatives were pursued, including agreement on the urgent preparation of a plan to establish a centralised flow management system, the creation of a team to spearhead the removal of incompatibilities between national air traffic control systems in the short term, the approval of the first edition of the common medium-term plan for harmonising national systems, and the development of the PHARE programme for integrating research and development of future systems.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Single Market

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the examples given in the recently issued, "1992 for You: An Action Guide for Smaller Firms", are based on actual businesses.

Mr. Maude: Yes, but some details have been changed to avoid identification of individual firms.

ENVIRONMENT

Air Pressure Gauges

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government have any plans to introduce statutory controls governing operation and testing of air pressure gauges on garage forecourts in order to ensure that they meet the approved British standard.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

British Standard 4613 (specification for tyre pressure gauges) which has been approved for the purposes of Section 10(3) of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 is applicable to portable gauges supplied as consumer products.

I have no plans to introduce statutory controls for air pressure gauges on garage forecourts.

Dichlorvos

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any plans to prepare an environmental quality standard for dichlorvos; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the reasons a product licence was granted for Nuvan 500 EC; if it is his intention to remove Nuvan 500 EC from the red list; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what steps he is taking to reduce the input of dichlorvos to the aquatic environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Dichlorvos, the active ingredient of Nuvan 500EC, was included on the initial red list of priority substances whose input into water should be minimised. The list of substances and actions to achieve this were announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) on 10 April at column 405. There are no plans for removing any substances from that list.

The water research centre is currently reviewing the data on the ecotoxicity and behaviour in the aquatic environment of a number of red list substances, including dichlorvos, with a view to recommending environmental quality standards.

The granting of product licences for veterinary medicines is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Pollution (Prosecutions)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions have occurred under section 3 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 each year since its inception; how many have been successful; on how many occasions the maximum fines have been applied; and if he will consider increasing the maximum limits of fines prescribed under the Act.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of prosecutions and convictions for offences under section 3 in each year since June 1976 are as follows:

Year	Number of offences proceeded against	Number of successful prosecutions
1976	—	—
1977	15	13
1978	31	30
1979	14	13
1980	29	24
1981	50	35
1982	58	48
1983	104	66
1984	85	67
1985	93	65
1986	130	93

Figures for 1988 are not yet available and information about maximum fines imposed can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Penalties under section 3 are governed by the standard scale of fines kept under review by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department. There is no limit to the fines which may currently be imposed under section 3 on conviction on indictment.

Worsthorne Sewage Works

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call for a report from the North West water authority on the ongoing pollution to Rowley lake and the River Brun originating from Worsthorne sewage treatment works.

Mr. Howard: I understand that the North West authority is considering various options for remedying the situation including the possible closure of the works or the diversion of the effluent from both the works and a nearby storm overflow to a point below Rowley lake.

Planning Appeals (Camden)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of planning appeals in the London borough of Camden he has approved in each of the last five years.

Mr. Howard: Set out below are details of planning appeals recovered for the Secretary of State's decision in the London borough of Camden over the past five years.

Year	Appeals dismissed	Appeals allowed	Percentage allowed by Secretary of State
1 July 1984 to 30 June 1985	1	9	90
1 July 1985 to 30 June 1986	6	6	50
1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987	6	4	40
1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988	2	6	75
1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989	3	7	70

River Pollution

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for consent to discharge unsatisfactory effluent into rivers have been received from water authorities in England and Wales so far for the current year.

Mr. Howard: Lists of sewage treatment works for which applications have been made by water authorities for time-limited discharge consents have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Details of the applications—which currently number some 852—may be obtained from the public register maintained by each water authority. The applications have also been advertised by the authorities concerned. None has yet been granted.

Conservation, Access and Recreation

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the code of practice on conservation, access and recreation under clause 10 of the Water Bill.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food issued the code of practice on conservation, access and recreation under section 10 of the Water Act 1989 on 6 July.

The code provides guidance for the new water and sewerage undertakers and for the National Rivers Authority on conservation, access and recreation matters generally, including:

- protection of landscape and minimisation of damage from water industry operations;
- conservation of flora, fauna and natural habitats;
- protection of ancient monuments and of water industry buildings of historical or architectural importance;
- maintenance and development of policies for opening up areas of high amenity value to rambling and quiet countryside pursuits;
- maintenance of existing recreational uses of water industry land and water; and
- ensuring that policies for new recreational uses are fair and equitable and provide for as wide a range of interest groups as practicable.

The code follows wide consultation on the draft published in January, which was widely welcomed by conservation bodies and takes account of debate in both Houses during the passage of the Bill. In particular it extends the guidance on recreational provision, and on the protection of historic buildings, ancient monuments and archaeological sites; and offers new guidance on the preservation of public freedom of access.

Taken with the duties under sections 8 and 9 of the Act, it will, I believe, ensure that the new bodies created by the Act will maintain and further extend the achievements of the water authorities in conservation, public access and recreation.

Housing Subsidy

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department will now review the operation of the system of admissible cost limits for housing subsidy, following the first 12 months' experience, as promised in DOE circular 5/88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My Department is today issuing a consultation paper on the review of the operation of the admissible cost limit system for housing subsidy to the local authority associations and will be holding discussions with their representatives. The review will consider how well the system has worked since it replaced individual project control in April 1988.

The Department will also propose to the associations that the system should be extended to cover the costs of existing houses and flats acquired by councils, either by leasehold or purchase. This would not introduce any new constraints on the capacity of authorities to lease or buy dwellings, but it would limit the Exchequer's liability to subsidise costs in the same way as already applies with costs of new building by authorities. The views of local authority associations are sought within two months and we will then consider their responses. If the proposal is confirmed, however, its effect will be backdated to apply to acquisitions agreed on or after 17 August.

HEALTH

Chiropodists

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many chiropodists are state registered; and how many others are known to practise without registration.

Mr. Mellor: The Council for Professions Supplementary to Medicine (an independent statutory body) maintains the state register and would be able to advise the hon. Gentleman. State registration is a requirement for all chiropodists in NHS employment; information on others is not held centrally.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the practice of chiropody by non state registered chiropodists.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the Minister for Health's reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 28 April 1987 at cols. 113-4. The position remains unchanged.

Organ Transplants

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish a national register of potential donors of organs for transplant.

Mr. Freeman: At present we have no plans to establish a national register of potential organ donors. A working party chaired by Sir Raymond Hoffenberg examined such registers, and considered that they were unlikely to have a major impact on organ donation. Before giving further consideration to a national register, we would wish to see evidence that local schemes had proved successful.

Dentists (Hygiene)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to introduce regulations to require dentists to comply with stricter hygiene standards.

Mr. Freeman: No. Regulations already exist under which general dental practitioners are required to furnish their surgeries with adequate equipment and to provide treatment with suitable instruments. And in providing general dental services a dentist must employ a proper degree of skill and attention. Any dentist who fails to comply with his terms of service renders himself vulnerable to disciplinary proceedings. In addition a dentist who fails to employ adequate hygiene procedures would be vulnerable to a charge of unprofessional conduct brought against him by the General Dental Council, which in serious cases is able to order the erasure of a dentist's name from the dental register, thus preventing him from carrying out the practice of dentistry.

Medical Indemnity Insurance

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the cost of the proposed National Health Service indemnity insurance scheme.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) on 25 May at column 726.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the total cost of medical indemnity insurance in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available on the total cost of medical indemnity insurance, but the full medical rate of subscription to each of the London-based medical defence organisations has been as follows:

Year	£
1985	288
1986	336
1987	576
1988	1,080

On 1 January 1989 the Medical Defence Union introduced its 1989 rate of £1,350. On 1 April the Medical Protection Society introduced an annual rate of £1,800 for doctors in certain hospital specialties but retained its 1988 level for the remainder. With effect from 1 July 1989 both organisations reduced the annual rate of GPs to £775.

NHS (Complaints)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement concerning the implementation of HC(88)37 on the implementation of the hospital complaints procedures;

(2) which health authorities have appointed a senior officer to take responsibility for managing the complaint procedures.

Mr. Freeman: Health circular (88)37 gave guidance to health authorities on the procedure to be operated in respect of complaints by hospital patients. It also included, as an annex, directions issued by the Secretary of State as required by section 1 of the Hospital Complaints Procedure Act 1985. These directions instructed health authorities to designate "an officer" with responsibility for handling complaints, and the guidance notes suggested that this should be a "senior officer". All regional health authorities have confirmed that they are in compliance with these directions.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state for the latest year in which information is available, what was the range of actions taken by family practitioner committees in those cases in which the complaint was upheld.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected centrally. However, in 1988, 492 practitioners were found in breach of their terms of service and withholdings were directed in 247 cases. In addition, family practitioner committees referred five practitioners to the National Health Service tribunal.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state for the latest year in which information is available, what was the range of actions taken by district health authorities and regional health authorities in those cases in which a complaint was upheld.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally. Where a complainant is not satisfied with the response he or she receives from a health authority, the complaint can be referred on to the Health Service Commissioner (the Ombudsman). A list of the remedies brought about as a result of the commissioner's investigations is published each year as part of his annual report. A copy is available in the Library.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state, for each district and regional health authority in England, for the latest year in which figures are available (a) how many complaints were received, (b) how many were found to be justified and (c) how many were found to be unjustified.

Mr. Freeman: Available information for the year ending 31 March 1988 is given in the table. Information at district level, and information on the number of complaints upheld, is not held centrally and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

	Total number of written complaints on:
	Hospital services	Community services
England	29,956	5,030

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state, for each district and regional health authority, for the latest year in which figures are available what was (a) the shortest time, (b) the longest time and (c) the median time between the receipt of the complaint and informing the complainant of the outcome.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state, for each family practitioner committee, for the latest year in which figures are available (a) how many complaints were received, (b) how many were found to be justified and (c) how many were found to be unjustified.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that the information cannot be provided without disproportionate cost. In 1988 there were 1,748 formal investigations of complaints by family practitioner committees in England in which 492 practitioners were found in breach of their terms of service. Information is not available centrally for each family practitioner committee.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state, for each family practitioner committee, for the latest year in which figures are available (a) the shortest, (b) the longest and (c) median time between receiving the complaint and informing the complainant of the outcome.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available centrally.

Community Charge (Exemptions)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the medical advice he has received on the exemption of severe dementia sufferers from the community charge;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the advice to be given to general practitioners on the procedures for exempting severely mentally impaired people from the community charge.

Mr. Freeman: Policy on exemptions from the personal community charge is for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and we have therefore received no medical advice on the exemption of severe dementia sufferers. However, I understand that advice has been given by my officials to the Department of the Environment.

A copy of the guidance to general practitioners on the procedure to be adopted when exemption from the personal community charge is claimed on grounds of severe mental impairment will be placed in the Library when it is issued.

Young People (Suicide)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the suicide rate among young people for each year since 1979; and what is the rate for the population as a whole.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table.

Chief Veterinary Officer (Report)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to publish a report from his Chief Veterinary Officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The report of the Chief Veterinary Officer "Animal Health 1988" should be published in the middle of August.

Written Answers to Questions

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tobacco

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether expenditure on advertising by the tobacco industry is treated as promotional activities for tax relief purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In calculating their taxable profits, all businesses can deduct expenses (other than capital expenses) incurred wholly and exclusively for the purpose of their trade, including the cost of advertising.

Government Data Network

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will place the operational specifications of the Government data network and its accompanying management summary in the Library.

Mr. Brooke: A copy of the GDN statement of service requirement is in the Library. The service is provided under the terms of a network agreement, the contract between Her Majesty's Treasury and Racal Data Networks Limited, and of access agreements between individual departments and the contractor. I am not aware of other documents which meet the hon. Member's description.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the actual balance of payments position at the end of each of the last 10 years; and what is his present estimate of the position at the end of the current year.

Mr. Lilley: The latest estimate of the current account for each of the last 10 years and the forecast for 1989, published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1989-90", are set out in the table.

£ million

	Current account	[1] Balancing item
1979	−496	1,044
1980	3,122	570
1981	6,936	277
1982	4,685	−2,333
1983	3,893	468
1984	2,077	5,672
1985	3,355	6,150
1986	151	13,700
1987	−2,905	12,356
1988	−14,936	13,878
[2]1989	−14,500

[1] Indicates errors and omissions in both capital and current account.

[2] Forecast published in Financial Statement and Budget Report 1989-90, rounded to nearest £½ billion.

Charitable Gifts (Tax Relief)

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his reply to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling on 6 June, Official Report, column 120, what are his reasons for being unwilling to amend the give-as-you-earn scheme to enable the tax relief to accrue to the benefit of the donor's designated charity rather than to the donor.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 22 June 1989]: If the donor wishes to benefit the charity further, it is a simple matter for him to adjust the size of the donation, subject of course to the annual payroll giving limit.

Forestry

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the annual cost of the tax reliefs available to the forestry industry which were abolished in the Finance Act 1988 for each year 1974 to 1988 at (a) cash prices and (b) 1989 prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 June 1989]: For recent years the annual revenue cost of the right of occupiers of commercial woodlands to elect to be assessed under schedule D is broadly estimated at £10 million.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates will be the annual cost to the Treasury of (a) the woodland grant scheme and (b) the farm woodland scheme at 1989 prices; and on what planting assumptions these estimates are made.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 June 1989]: Plans in Cm. 604 ("The Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-90 to 1991-92" chapter 4) include the following provision and planting targets for these schemes; costs vary from year to year.

Table 1
Woodland Grant Scheme

	Area of new planting (hectares)	Forestry Commission grants (£ million)
1989-90	7,500	4·4
1990-91	16,200	9·4
1991-92	21,180	12·3

Notes:—The figures do not include:

1. Restocking of felled woodland.
2. Planting expected to be carried out under forestry grant schemes other than the Woodland Grant Scheme.
3. Planting in Northern Ireland.

Table 2
Farm Woodland Scheme

	Area of new planting (hectares)	Planting grants (£ million)	Annual payments (£ million)
1989-90	12,000	6·9	1·0
1990-91	12,000	6·9	3·1
1991-92	12,000	6·9	5·1

Notes:

1. The above figures include Northern Ireland.
2. Annual payments follow 12 months after payment of the planting grants.
3. The farm woodlands scheme was introduced on 1 October 1988 and is to be reviewed at the end of its first three years. The programme for 1991-92 anticipates that that scheme may be extended after the review.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give the total amount of tax relief given to business expansion scheme investment in housing from its inception to the most recent date for which figures are available and for each of the standard regions, Scotland and Wales;

(2) if he will give the total number of applications approved for housing business expansion scheme investments in housing from its inception to the most recent date for which figures are available and for each of the standard regions of Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 June 1989]: No information on applications or the cost of the business expansion scheme tax relief for investments in residential property is yet available centrally from official sources.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the total amount of tax relief given to business expansion scheme investments in each of the years 1983-84 to 1988-89 inclusive and for each of the standard regions, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 June 1989]: The estimated cost of relief for 1983-84 to 1987-88 is as follows:

	£ million
1983-84	50
1984-85	75
1985-86	85
1986-87	95
[1]1987-88	120

[1] Provisional.

A forecast of £100 million for the cost of relief for the business expansion scheme in 1988-89 was published in "The Government's Expenditure Plans, 1989-90 to 1991-92" (chapter 21), but no information is yet available centrally from official sources to provide a reliable estimate of the outturn.

I regret that reliable estimates of the cost of relief by standard region and country are not available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the total number of applications approved for business expansion scheme investments in each of the years from 1983-84 to 1988-89 inclusive and for each of standard regions, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 June 1989]: Information on companies receiving investments through the business expansion scheme in 1988-89 is not yet available centrally from official sources. Estimates for earlier years are as follows:

Companies receiving investments (numbers)

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the total number of individuals obtaining tax relief for business expansion scheme investments in each of the years 1983-84 to 1988-89 inclusive and for each of the standard regions, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 June 1989]: I regret that information on which to base reliable estimates of the numbers of investors receiving relief is not available centrally.

Thames Riverbus

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what sums under the business expansion scheme or any other provision have been paid to those who set up the Thames riverbus service.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 4 July 1989]: I regret that I am unable to provide the information requested on the business expansion scheme as details of the use of the scheme by particular individuals and companies are obtained by the Inland Revenue on a confidential basis. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport gave him on 4 July at columns 91-92 regarding a grant to the company from the Department of Transport.

Taxation

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest available figures for the cumulative amounts since 1979 of (a) unclaimed tax relief, (b) tax fraud and evasion and (c) tax cuts expressed in real terms, 1989 prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 6 July 1989]: I regret that reliable estimates of the amount of unclaimed tax relief and the revenue lost through fraud and evasion are not possible. For information on reductions in income tax I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) of 4 April at column 8.

THE ARTS

Arts Funding

Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on future funding of the arts in 1990-91 and beyond.

Mr. Luce: I announced in November 1988 the provisions for the arts programme for the years 1989-90 to 1991-92.

Museums and Galleries (Oxford)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last visited Oxford to visit museums and galleries there.

Mr. Luce: I had the pleasure of visiting the Ashmolean museum in Oxford on 3 July this year. On that occasion I was glad to be able to meet members of the local business community and to support an appeal for £3·2 million for the museum.

British Library

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the director of the British library to discuss the level of revenue funding for the library.

Mr. Luce: I met the chairman and chief executive of the British library on 14 March 1989. Our discussion covered the library's long-term plans and Government funding.

Arts Groups (Bulwell)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will examine the possibility of direct funding for the Bulwell and district arts groups.

Mr. Luce: No. I fund the arts on the arm's-length principle. It is for the Arts Council and regional arts associations to determine the allocation of funds to individual arts groups.

Sponsorship

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister for the Arts what new measures he is introducing to increase sponsorship of the arts.

Mr. Luce: Since its inception in 1984 the business sponsorship incentive scheme has attracted over 1,000 new sponsors. To encourage even more businesses to support the arts, I have agreed that individual arts organisations may receive up to two awards this year instead of one, up to an aggregate of £25,000.

Merseyside Arts

Mr. Alton: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether Merseyside Arts will continue to be funded as an autonomous unit; and if he will make a statement on its future.

Mr. Luce: I have not yet received Mr. Wilding's report about the structure and organisation of the arts in England. No decisions have yet been taken about the future of Merseyside Arts or any other regional arts association.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service Careers

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what steps he is taking to promote careers in the Civil Service to students and sixth formers studying in Lancashire.

Mr. Luce: The Civil Service Commission, with help from Government Departments, has recently re-established its schools liaison network. The network, which extends to colleges of higher and further education, went fully operational in Lancashire in November 1988 and to date around 35 careers events have been attended. The liaison panel is also establishing closer links with local careers services, for example, by arranging talks and visits to departments.

The Civil Service Commission is also strengthening its links with universities and polytechnics, including those in Lancashire. This includes increased representation at recruitment events, more visits to the institutions, and more direct involvement with their careers service.

Additionally, many local departments are establishing and improving their own links with local academic institutions.

WALES

Environment

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will set out the initiatives (a) he has taken since May 1979 and (b) intends to take on environmental protection and renewable energies; and if he will make a statement on the state of the environment in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Since May 1979, I have designated two environmentally sensitive areas in Wales. The ESA policy aims to promote the co-existence of conservation and efficient farming in areas perceived to be at risk from increasingly intensive methods of production.

Emphasis on conservation and the control of pollution caused by farm operations has also been strengthened in the new farm and conservation grant scheme introduced in February this year. Three new conservation grants have been launched. These will encourage the regeneration of native woodland and of heather moors and assist in the cost of repairs to vernacular farm buildings. With a grant rate of 50 per cent. towards the cost of farm pollution control, the United Kingdom now has the most comprehensive anti-farm-pollution grant scheme in the European Community. It is only early days, but farmers are already showing increasing interest in applying for grants.

I was also involved with the other Agriculture Ministers in the announcement of the United Kingdom set-aside scheme in June 1988. This constituted a practical guide offering advice and encouraging the management of set-aside land in the best interests of conservation and the environment generally.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I have created a unified inspectorate of pollution with the remit to develop an integrated approach to pollution control. One of our other major initiatives has been to cut the maximum lead content of petrol by 60 per cent. which allied to a reduction in duty on unleaded making it some 10p cheaper than leaded 4-star, has resulted in unleaded petrol sales increasingly rapidly and currently accounting for almost 20 per cent. of the market.

As to renewable energies, Wales has significant potential in this field, particularly in terms of wind and tidal power. Studies in these two areas are currently being undertaken at a number of sites throughout the Principality.

On 19 June 1989, together with my right hon. Friends the other territorial agricultural Ministers, I issued a consultative document inviting comments on ideas for implementing, for beef and sheep, the European Community extensification scheme in the United Kingdom. Wherever possible, I will wish to ensure that extensification brings enviromental benefits.

Furthermore, together with my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, I am proposing to bring forward as soon as the parliamentary timetable allows, major legislation dealing with environmental protection. The Bill, among other things, will include measures dealing with air pollution control and reform of the waste disposal law. It will also introduce a new system of integrated pollution control for industry. In addition, we will shortly be announcing a number of proposals for legislation designed to ensure more effective action to be taken against litterers and litter.

Business Finance

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration he has given to the Welsh Committee for Economic and Industrial Affairs' report "Finance for Business in Wales"; and whether he will act on the recommendations which fall within the remit of his office.

Mr. Peter Walker: I met representatives of the committee on 19 June 1989 to discuss their report "Finance for Business in Wales". My officials will pursue with officials of the committee points arising out of that meeting.

Bathing Water (Sewage Outfalls)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the proposed one-mile screened sewage outfall from Swansea will enable adjacent beach to meet the standards of European Community Bathing Water Directive 76/160/EEC; and what consideration has been given to the consequential effects on the opposite side of the Bristol channel.

Mr. Peter Walker: The identified water adjacent to Swansea bay met the standards of the European bathing water directive 76/160/EEC for the 1988 season. The proposed 1 mile long sea outfall will form part of planned improvements designed with the specific aim of achieving the compliance of the identified waters of Swansea bay with the standards of that directive.

Tidal currents in the Bristol channel, and the enormous dilution afforded, will reduce any impact of this discharge on the north Devon coast to negligible levels.

Water Pollution

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a breakdown of the likely chemical composition of the water flowing from the Taff and Ely rivers which are to be contained by the proposed Cardiff bay barrage.

Mr. Grist: The 1985 river quality survey showed that the quality of the River Taff varied between classes 1B and 2 and that of the River Ely between classes 2 and 3.

Water quality modelling associated with the proposed Cardiff bay barrage is still being undertaken. I suggest that the hon. Gentleman write to the chairman of the Welsh water authority to obtain the latest position.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the estimated tonnage of sewage disposed of on an annual basis into the rivers of mid-Glamorgan.

Mr. Grist: Information is not available in the form requested. The consented volumes of all consented discharges are entered on to public registers maintained by Welsh Water and available for inspection at its offices during all reasonable hours.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list water supplies in South Wales that meet the minimum quality standards set by the EEC.

Mr. Grist: All water supplies which have not been notified as being subject to derogations or delays under the EC directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption (80/778/EEC) should meet the standards set by that directive.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has assessed whether the proposed 1-mile sewage outfall from Swansea will enable local beaches to attain the standard of European Community directive 76/160/EEC.

Mr. Grist: No. The specific aim of the proposed outfall is to achieve compliance of the identified waters of Swansea Bay with the standards of the directive, but design is at a preliminary stage and engineering studies have yet to be completed. Other local beaches listed under the terms of the directive complied with its standards during the 1988 bathing season.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has made to Welsh Water about sewage contamination on south Wales beaches; and how many of these beaches attain the water standards under directive 76/160/EEC.

Mr. Grist: Welsh Office officials are in touch with Welsh Water concerning their capital programme of improvements to bathing waters. Fifteen of the 22 bathing waters in south Wales listed under the directive complied with its standards during 1988.

Port Dinorwic Yacht Harbour

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters his Department has received (a) in favour and (b) against his planning permission sought for the development of Port Dinorwic yacht harbour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Following receipt of the planning appeal, the Department received seven letters in favour and 35 against the proposals for the development of Port Dinorwic yacht harbour.

Planning Procedures

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new guidelines he has issued to Welsh Office inspectors considering planning appeals since June 1987; and if he will state the nature and objectives of such changes.

Mr. Grist: In considering appeals in Wales, planning inspectors follow guidance issued generally by the Welsh Office in the form of circulars and planning and mineral policy guidance notes. The Department issues no guidelines specifically to the inspectorate.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what grounds a public inquiry into a planning appeal can be reopened, after having been concluded; what are the procedures for permitting the reopening of an inquiry; who is allowed to submit that an inquiry should be reopened; who decides whether or not to reopen an inquiry following such a request; and on how many occasions in the last five years such an inquiry in Wales has been so reopened.

Mr. Grist: Where an appeal is to be determined by an inspector the current procedures which govern the reopening of the inquiry are contained in rules 17 and 19 of the Town and Country Planning Appeals (Determination by Inspectors) (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1988 (SI 1988, No. 945). The decision whether or not to reopen the inquiry would be taken by the inspector except where a decision has been quashed in proceedings before any court, where it falls to the Secretary of State to direct that the inquiry be reopened, if he thinks fit. In cases where the appeal is to be determined by the Secretary of State the current procedures are set out in rules 16 and 18 of the Town and Country Planning (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1988 (SI 1988, No. 944). The decision whether or not to reopen the inquiry would be taken by my right hon. Friend. Welsh Office records of planning appeals do not include information relating to the frequency of the reopening of public inquiries.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the general policy guidelines for his Department on town and country planning decisions which may require consideration of whether general economic considerations should overrule phyical and environmental material factors.

Mr. Grist: The appeal system operates on the basis of considering each case on its merits. Proper attention is paid to national and local policies, as expressed in circulars, planning and mineral policy guidance notes and development plans, but regard is also had to the individual circumstances of the applicant, to the need to give encouragement to small businesses and to the employment possibilities presented by commercial and industrial development proposals. All these factors are carefully weighed before reaching decision.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many inspectors he has within his Department who hear town and country planning appeals; and how many of these are Welsh speaking.

Mr. Grist: Fifteen members of the Welsh Office planning inspectorate held public local inquiries; of these two are Welsh speaking.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in how many instances during each of the past 10 years the Welsh Office has upheld an appeal against a planning refusal in Wales which has involved the construction of more than one house or other domicile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Welsh Office records of planning appeals do not include the information requested.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what dates since May 1979 circulars have been issued by the Welsh Office on the determination of planning applications in Wales; and if he will list the titles and reference numbers, together with date of issue, for all such circulars.

Mr. Grist: The following list is of extant circulars issued by the Welsh Office since May 1979 which gives advice on the determination of planning applications.

[1] Since January 1988, the Welsh Office and the Department of the Environment have been issuing policy guidance notes on land-use planning and development control. Planning Policy Guidance notes (PPGs) provide guidance on general and specific aspects of planning policy, while the series of Minerals Planning Guidance notes (MPGs) deals with the control of minerals development.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average cost of planning inquiries held under section 33 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 to (a) the Welsh Office, (b) local authorities and (c) the applicant.

Mr. Grist: This information is not available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Local Management in Schools

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last discussed the implementation of local management in schools with representatives of Cleveland county council; and whether he is satisfied with that county's proposals in respect of this initiative.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has had no meetings with representatives of Cleveland county council specifically to discuss local management of schools (LMS). Officials from the Department's LMS unit have, however, met the LEA and are continuing to offer advice on their proposals. The authority's final scheme will be subject to the Secretary of State's approval; it would not be appropriate for me to anticipate the outcome of the statutory approvals process.

Staff (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many staff from ethnic minorities are employed in his Department in grades 1 to 4.

Mrs. Rumbold: None.

P E Teachers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about his proposal to reduce the number of physical education teachers in schools by 20 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the provisional allocation of intake numbers for initial teacher training for 1990, which my right hon. Friend announced in April. Representations have been received about the proposals for physical education from nine teacher training institutions and five other bodies.

School Governors (Data Protection)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has issued advice to school governors concerning their legal responsibility to comply with the Data Protection Act when they are in possession or control of a computerised school admissions register; if school governors may volunteer information from registers for community charge purposes; if school governors may provide information from a register to a local education authority and specify that the information cannot be used for community charge purposes; if he has taken legal advice to ascertain whether each board of governors or school is an independent data user from the local education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has issued no guidance to school governors on their legal responsibilities to comply with the Data Protection Act, but this complex subject is currently being discussed with the office of the Data Protection Registrar. School governors hold and control school admissions registers for the effective exercise of their functions and all authorised circumstances of inspection or disclosure of content of registers are limited to the purposes of the Education Acts. School governors however have no powers to limit the legal requirement whereby community charge registration officers may require local education authorities to provide them with specified information extracted from school registers which is already in the possession of community charge registration officers.

Newcastle University Students Union

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will raise with the governing body of the university of Newcastle the recent actions of Newcastle university students union in breach of section 43 of the Education Act (No. 2) 1986.

Mr. Jackson: I deplore attempts to restrict the rights of particular students and visitors. I understand that the proposal was unacceptable to the university of Newcastle-upon-Tyne and that the union's trustees, whose approval was required, have since refused to endorse the amendment.

Soviet Studies

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide figures showing the numbers of students working in the field of Soviet studies for each year since 1979 at (a) undergraduate level and (b) postgraduate level.

Mr. Jackson: The numbers of students studying Russian language or Russian studies full-time at British universities were as follows:

	Undergraduates	Postgraduates
1979	424	77
1980	410	71
1981	405	55

	Undergraduates	Postgraduates
1982	403	57
1983	453	50
1984	522	52
1985	516	50
1986	539	65
1987	524	49

East European Studies

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps his Department intends to take to give effect to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation council communiqué of 30 May, aimed at encouraging an increase of Soviet and eastern studies in universities of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries and of corresponding studies in eastern countries.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has been concerned for some time to improve teaching and research in Soviet and East European studies, and for this reason encouraged the University Grants Committee to set up a review of the state of undergraduate and postgraduate provision in this subject area. The work of the review working party has been carried forward under the auspices of the Universities Funding Council and I understand that it is due to report shortly. I shall be very interested to see the working party's report and recommendations.

Teachers (Pay Negotiations)

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to hold further discussions with the teacher unions and employers about new pay negotiating machinery for teachers.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: As I told the hon. Members for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Howells) and for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) on 4 July at column 142, I am arranging to have further meetings with the teacher unions and employers later this month. I see our discussions as ranging more widely than the proposal for a teachers negotiating group set out in the Green Paper of October 1987. I recognise that it will not be easy to find a solution which is acceptable to all parties. It is, however, essential that we get the new arrangements right and I have therefore decided to ask the interim advisory committee to sit for a further year to give time for this. I shall in due course ask the House to approve a one-year extension of the Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1987.

In letters to the teacher unions and employers I have said

"It was clear from our previous exchanges that there are widely differing views. You already know the importance I attach to getting the new arrangements right. With this in mind I see the agenda for our next round of discussions ranging more widely than the proposals for a Teachers' Negotiating Group set out in the Green Paper of October 1987 and look forward to exploring with you a number of new ideas.

I hope you will join me in approaching these difficult issues in a constructive and open minded way, working together towards an objective we can share. I recognise, however, that it will not be easy to get things right. I have therefore decided to ask the IAC to sit for one more year, to deal with the 1990 pay settlement, to give us time to reach an agreed basis for stable, permanent new pay determination arrangements for the future. I will be asking Parliament later this year to agree to the necessary extension of the Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1987 and will announce the Committee's new remit in the early autumn."

Teachers' Resignations

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools have submitted resignations in the last 12 months; what are the comparable figures for each preceding year since 1979, and what percentage of each total these figures represent.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [holding answer 29 June 1989]: Information on the number of teachers resigning in the last 12 months is not yet available.

The numbers of teachers leaving full-time service in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector in England in the years ending March 1979 to March 1987 (the latest year for which data are collected by the Department) are as the follows:

	Nursery and primary		Secondary
	Total leavers, numbers	As a percentage of those in service	Total leavers, number	As a percentage of those in service
1979	15,030	8·0	17,660	7·8
1980	14,970	8·0	19,570	8·5
1981	14,790	8·1	18,720	8·0
1982	13,980	7·9	16,820	7·2
1983	13,120	7·7	16,250	7·0
1984	12,660	7·7	16,920	7·4
1985	12,680	7·9	18,380	8·1
1986	12,450	7·8	18,710	8·4
1987	11,880	7·4	17,080	7·9

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Disbarred Lawyers

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General how many (i) barristers and (ii) solicitors have been disbarred from practice in each of the past five years for (a) embezzlement, (b) incompetence, (c) criminal convictions other than fraud and (d) other reasons; and what percentage of total practising membership of each profession each annual total represents.

The Attorney-General: The number of barristers disbarred in each of the past five years is as follows:

Year	(a)	(b)	(c)	(d)	Total	Total Number	Percentage
1984	0	0	2	0	2	5,203	0·04
1985	0	0	1	1	2	5,367	0·04
1986	0	1	0	1	2	5,494	0·04
1987	0	0	1	0	1	5,642	0·02
1988	0	4	2	2	8	5,902	0·14
Total	0	5	6	4	15	—	—

(a) = Embezzlement,
(b) = Incompetence,
(c) = Criminal convictions other than fraud,
(d) = Other reasons.

The information requested on the reasons for solicitors being struck off is not available, but the total number of solicitors struck off in each of the past five years is as follows:

Year	Struck off	Total	Per cent.
1984	18	44,837	0·04
1985	22	46,490	0·05
1986	20	47,830	0·04
1987	32	48,937	0·07
1988	29	50,684	0·06

In the year ending 30 April 1989 a total of 49 solicitors were struck off. Practising certificates are issued during the period 1 November to 31 October and therefore the figure for the number of practising certificates issued in 1989 is not yet available.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General what information he has as to the average cost to the Crown Prosecution Service of employing (a) a non-civil servant solicitor, (b) a civil servant solicitor and (c) a barrister in magistrate court prosecutions.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service employs both barristers and solicitors as Crown prosecutors to conduct prosecutions in the magistrates courts. The average annual cost outside London of employing a Crown prosecutor is £29,004 and for a senior Crown prosecutor the cost is £35,805. These figures include general administration expenses and accommodation costs as well as salary costs. In London the average costs are higher.

The Crown Prosecution Service also instructs solicitors and barristers in private practice to conduct prosecutions in the magistrates courts on an ad hoc basis as occasion requires locally. The fees paid to a solicitor in private practice lie between £85 and £150 for a half-day session and £125 and £300 for a full-day session (excluding VAT and travelling expenses) depending on the area of the country and the work involved. The average fee paid to a barrister in private practice for a half-day session is £95 and for a full-day session is £150 (excluding VAT and travelling expenses).

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Policies (Environmental Impact)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the environmental impact of his Department's policies, in terms of noise pollution, toxic waste and radioactive waste management and disposal, requisition of land suitable for agricultural use.

Mr. Ryder: In exercising its responsibilities, including those relating to radioactive and other waste disposal, my Department takes account of the need to protect the environment and people. ADAS advises farmers, where appropriate, on ways to reduce noise levels. The Ministry's powers to requisition land suitable for agricultural use have not been used for some years.

Food Labelling

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to make supermarkets use labels to show whether the meat they sell has been reared and slaughtered humanely; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have no plans to introduce such legislation which would, I believe, give rise to considerable practical problems regarding compliance and enforcement since it is impossible to distinguish analytically between meat from animals slaughtered or reared in different ways. There is nothing to prevent the provision of this type of information on a voluntary basis.

Horticultural Development Council

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has completed his consultations on the future of the Horticultural Development Council.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales, and I have now completed consultations with the council and with organisations representing those carrying on business or employed in the horticultural industry. The National Farmers Union of England and Wales and of Scotland, the Farmers Union of Wales, the Horticultural Trades Association, the Transport and General Workers Union, and the Horticultural Development Council itself, are all in favour of the continuation of the Horticultural Development Council. My right hon. Friends and I have, therefore, decided that it should continue provided it is clear that it has the support of growers themselves. This will be tested by an independent poll to be undertaken in October of all growers registered with the council. Final decisions about the future of the Horticultural Development Council will be taken once the results of the poll is known, and parliamentary approval for the decisions will then be sought.

Near Market Research

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the proposals in his reply of 21 March, Official Report, column 515, to the hon. Member for Daventry to close in 1989-90 the experimental centres at Brogdale, Liscombe, Luddington and Rosewarne.

Mr. MacGregor: There have been full consultations about alternative funding of the experimental centres proposed for closure in my statement of 21 March 1989.

As regards Liscombe experimental husbandry farm, a local industry consortium called Liscombe Research has secured a significant level of commitments by industry to fund a programme of near-market research and development. In view of the progress that has been made, I have decided that Liscombe experimental husbandry farm will not close in 1989-90 as originally proposed, in order to give the consortium more time to collect the balance of funds needed to meet the costs of such a research and development programme in 1991-92. A decision on whether Liscombe experimental husbandry farm can be kept open will be taken later this year when we have reviewed with Liscombe Research the funding arrangements which it is able to agree to for the next few years.

No viable industry funding proposals have been received in relation to the experimental horticultural stations at Luddington and Rosewarne. These stations will accordingly be closed for research and development purposes by 30 November 1989 and arrangements put in hand for disposal of land and facilities surplus to requirements.

Nor has any viable industry funding proposal been received in relation to the Brogdale experimental horticultural station. A decision on the details relating to the closure of this station will be announced later in 1989 when the Government have completed their discussions on arrangements for preserving the national fruit collection and its associated records which are currently located at Brogdale.

Eggs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure the import of shell-eggs takes place only through ports of entry where inspection facilities exist.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is possible to take samples of eggs for inspection at all ports handling food.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state for each month of the current year to date the number of eggs imported into the United Kingdom by country of origin.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The figures are as follows:

Thousands

Country	January	February	March	April	[1] May
France	972	286	15	8,445	734
Belgium and Luxembourg	491	516	334	1,183	700

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list those points of entry into the United Kingdom used for shell-egg importation and the percentage of imports at each location (a) inspected and (b) tested;

(2) what action his Department is taking to ensure the quality and wholesomeness of eggs imported into Britain;

(3) what are the arrangements under which his Department ensures the quality and wholesomeness of eggs imported into Britain.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Shell-eggs may be imported through all ports handling food. Arrangements have been made for the port health authorities and the public health laboratory service to monitor imported consignments for salmonella. This is done by taking a sample of 60 eggs from each lorryload tested.

Imported eggs are also checked for compliance with the EC quality requirements by the agricultural Departments. But this checking is carried out at wholesale distribution points.

Quangos

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the appointments he has made to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations together with the salary payable since June 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I regret that I cannot provide a list except at disproportionate cost. However, much information about appointments is given in Ministry press notices and details of remuneration are set out in "Public Bodies 1988", a copy of which is in the Library.

Food Act 1984

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to amend either section 1 or section 2 of the Food Act 1984.

Mr. Ryder: The Government made detailed proposals for re-enacting and updating the powers in sections 1 and 2 as part of their consultations with a large number of organisations on the review of food legislation. We shall be bringing forward a food Bill as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits, which will take account of the responses we have received.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department is sponsoring or conducting any research into the cultivation of genetically engineered atmospheric carbon dioxide, as part of the Government programme to combat greenhouse global warming.

Mr. Ryder: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to research into the cultivation of genetically engineered plants to use up atmospheric carbon dioxide, in which case the answer is yes. My Department is supporting research in this area in the context of work on genetic improvement of trees for farm forestry.

Richmond Committee

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the report of the Richmond committee on food safety will be published.

Mr. Ryder: The committee on the microbiological safety of food, chaired by Sir Mark Richmond, has said that it aims to submit its first report to my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health as soon as possible probably towards the end of 1989, and that it does not intend to make any interim statements before then. The report will be published.

London Food Commission

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last received a request from the London Food Commission for a meeting; what the stated purpose of the meeting was; whether he agreed to the meeting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: On 15 June the London Food Commission sought a meeting to discuss food irradiation prior to a formal announcement of Government policy on the subject. As this was received only very shortly before the date on which the announcement was due to be made, it was not possible to meet this request. I did, however, arrange for the commission to be sent a copy of the report by officials on the control framework that would be necessary for the introduction of this process.

Intervention Board

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to relocate jobs in the intervention board to the northern region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland are considering with colleagues the board's proposals to locate part of its work away from the south-east of England.

Press Office

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people have been employed in his press office by grade for each year for the last five years; what is the current total; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The complement for the press office by grade at 1 April for the last five years is as follows. The current total staff in post is 24, but equivalent information is not available for previous years.

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what specific proposals his Department has put forward for consideration and enactment to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, such as carbon dioxide and tropospheric ozone, since the seminar on the greenhouse effect held by the Prime Minister on 26 April.

Mr. Newton: The Department is actively involved in the Government's consideration of the United Kingdom and international response to the greenhouse effect. As part of this, we have commissioned studies on CFCs aimed at determining the most effective means of achieving the reductions in the production and use of CFCs to which the Government are firmly committed. More generally, the DTI environmental programme lauched on 10 May is aimed at increasing business awareness of environmental issues and encouraging firms to recognise and respond positively to both the problems and the opportunities they present.

Carpet Industry (Unfair Competition)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action is being taken by the EEC Commission to stop the Belgian Government from subsidising that country's manufacturers of carpets.

Mr. Atkins: The Commission has found that the aid granted to the two subsidiaries, Idealspun and Fabelta, of the Belgian textile concern, Beaulieu, is illegal and incompatible with the Common Market, and has ruled that it must be repaid. In the Idealspun case, the European Court of Justice upheld the Commission and, because the aid has not yet been recovered, the Commission has now instituted legal proceedings against the Belgian Government for failing to fulfil its obligations under the treaty of Rome. In the Fabelta case, misleading assurances were given that the aid had been recovered and the Commission has now taken the Belgian Government to the European Court of Justice for failure to comply with its decision ordering recovery of the aid.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from the British carpet industry about unfair overseas competition, especially from Belgium, arising from state subsidies available to the Belgian carpet industry.

Mr. Atkins: I am well aware of industry's concern about the provision of state aid to the Belgian carpet industry as a result of various representations received by my Department.

Car Industry (EC Instructions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has received from the European Economic Community Commission about the respective responses of the French and United Kingdom Governments to the representation and instructions issued by the Commission on British Leyland and Renault cars respectively.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom's 1988 state aid application in respect of the Rover Group was the subject of a Commission decision on 13 July 1988. The Commission has the right to monitor certain aspects arising out of the decision and I have no reason to believe that it is other than satisfied with the current position. In the Renault case I understand that discussions are continuing between the Commission and the French Government on the implementation of the conditions attached to the Commission's decision of 29 March 1988.

Trade Deficit (EC)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish figures showing the trade deficit or surplus of the United Kingdom with each of its EC partners for each year since 1980.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 7 July 1989]: The figures are given in the table.

Foreign Investment

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is able to make an estimate of the level of (a) Japanese, (b) German and (c) American investment in the United Kingdom for each year from 1978 to date.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 7 July 1989]: Information is available only triennially on the level of Japanese, West German and United States direct investment in the United Kingdom. The latest available figures relate to the end of 1984. These, together with figures to the end of 1978 and end 1981, were published in table 11 of "Business Monitor MO4" (census of overseas assets).

PRIME MINISTER

"Who Framed Colin Wallace?"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will acquire for the Library of No. 10 Downing street a copy of the book, "Who Framed Colin Wallace", by Paul Foot, published by Macmillan's.

The Prime Minister: No.

Overseas Visits (Gifts)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list all those gifts she has received in her official capacity over the past 12 months while on overseas visits.

The Prime Minister: No.

EC Membership

Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister what benefits have been brought to (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow and (b) Strathclyde from membership of the European Community.

The Prime Minister: Strathclyde has received substantial benefits from Community membership. Details of major financial awards are as follows:

	Award (£ million)
European Regional Development Fund (Grants) (1979-88)	367
European Investment Bank (Loans) (1978-88)	237
European Coal and Steel Community [1] (Loans) (1979-88)	88
	692

In addition, Strathclyde receives substantial grants for employment and training initiatives under European social fund (£31·5[2] million for 1987-89). A regional breakdown of the grants from the agricultural guidance fund is not available, but Strathclyde has shared in the Scottish total of £385 million[3] (1979-88).

The European Commission has also approved the Strathclyde integrated development operation worth over £270 million in regional and social fund grants up to 1992. A decision is awaited from the Commission on the Government's bid to establish Strathclyde's eligibility under the RENAVAL community programme for shipbuilding areas.

Greenock and Port Glasgow have shared in these awards, although separate statistics for the area are not available. Inverclyde district, however, has received some £34 million in regional fund grants since 1979.

Notes:

[1] Figure relates to Article 56 reconversion loans. Regional breakdown of other ECSC assistance is not available.

[2] Excludes Strathclyde share of UK-wide schemes.

[3] Excludes Scottish share of market support expenditure incurred by the Intervention Board for Agriculture.

Cenotaph (Illumination)

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Prime Minister if she will set in train a study with a view to illuminating on a permanent basis the Cenotaph in Whitehall prior to Remembrance day 1989.

The Prime Minister: Such a study is already in hand. If the outcome is favourable the aim will be to have the lighting installed before Remembrance day 1989.

Sewage Pollution

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 4 July, if she will require Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to consider and report on both the 2km sewage outfall from Swansea and the 900m outfall proposed adjacent to Royal Portbury dock in Avon.

The Prime Minister: Before granting a discharge consent for any new sea outfall scheme, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution must be satisfied that any discharges will not cause identified bathing waters in the vicinity to fail to meet the standards of the EC bathing water directive. The length of the outfall required to achieve this will depend on local factors such as tides, currents, depth of water and prevailing winds. Studies to determine the optimal length of the sewage outfall at Royal Portbury dock were carried out prior to the granting of the discharge consent; and similar studies will be carried out for any proposed outfall at Swansea.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates were working in prison workshops at Wandsworth prison on 29 June.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 207 inmates were employed on 29 June as follows:

Workshops	Inmates employed
Laundry	66
Tailoring	36
Light textiles	36
Leatherwork	22
Woodwork	17
Brushes	30

Sunday Trading

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has recently received about Sunday trading.

Mr. Renton: Between 1 January 1989 and 3 July 1989 we have received 863 written representations broadly in favour of Sunday trading and 1,211 against.

Prison Officers' Houses

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the prison officers' houses, which were vacant in Culcheth, have now been sold; how long they had been empty; what his Department received for the sale of this property; how many houses remain to be sold; when he expects these to be disposed of; if the prison officers' hostel is unsold; how long it has been unused; and what are the plans for this.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All the 39 empty prison officer houses at Culcheth have been sold. Most have been vacant for seven to eight years. These properties, together with the prison officers' hostel, were sold for £540,000. Under the terms of the sale, the purchaser will bring the roads and other services on the whole estate up to the standard required for adoption by the local authority at nil cost to the Home Office. Six further houses that became vacant during 1988-89 are to be sold as soon as possible on the open market. The remaining 67 properties on the estate are used as prison officers' quarters, 47 of which are the subject of applications under the prison service discount sales scheme. The prison officers' hostel, which the purchaser proposes to demolish, has been unused for about seven years. The purchaser proposes to build houses on the site.

Chinese Students

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a special fund to assist Chinese students in the United Kingdom who experience financial difficulties as a result of deciding not to return to China; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Chinese nationals who do not qualify under the immigration rules but who do not wish to return to China are being allowed to remain here exceptionally for a further six months. Employment restrictions will be removed in such cases, which will allow those concerned to claim benefit if they are available for employment.

Wakefield Prison

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each month since April (a) the minimum staffing levels agreed under fresh start and (b) the actual staffing levels, for Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The minimum staffing levels agreed under fresh start at HMP Wakefield as at April 1988 were:

	Morning	Afternoon	Evening
Saturday and Sunday	80-84	91-99	72
Monday and Friday	99	98	78
Tuesday	101	101	82
Wednesday and Thursday	101	119	82

The only subsequent change to these levels is that since April 1989 the provision for Saturday and Sunday mornings is now 80 to 82. The number of officers in post (including principal and senior officers) at HMP Wakefield in each month since 1 April 1988 is as follows:

	Numbers
April	406
May	420
June	423
July	425
August	425
September	424
October	423
November	422
December	422
1989
January	417
February	418
March	418
April	426
May	425
June	425

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since April 1988 it has not been possible to undertake routine strip searches on prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield, following domestic visits, because of staffing shortages.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Strip searches are in most cases carried out at the discretion of local management, and have been conducted as considered necessary.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since April 1988 the association time of rule 43 prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield, has been curtailed due to staffing shortages.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that loss of association for vulnerable prisoners occurred on four occasions, none of which was due to staff shortages.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the frequency of routine cell searches at Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not the practice to disclose detailed information about security arrangements such as the frequency of cell searches.

Eversure Textiles (Dispute)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the South Yorkshire police giving the latest estimate of the total cost of policing the dispute over trade union recognition at Eversure Textiles in Sheffield; how many police were on duty throughout the first day of the dispute; what has been the minimum and maximum number of police officers on duty each day, to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable that the estimated additional cost of policing the dispute up to and including 6 July is £4,300. There were 34 officers on duty throughout the first day of the dispute. Since the third day, the number of officers deployed has been between eight and 11.

Wrongful Imprisonment

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by constabulary for the past 10 years the number of persons who have been released after wrongful arrest, the numbers of persons who have sued the police for both false imprisonment and injury whilst in custody and the amounts recovered in compensation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Drugs

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been prosecuted for possessing the drug Ecstasy.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The drug MDMA (commonly known as Ecstasy) has been separately identified in the statistics seizures dating back to 1 January 1988. Our provisional figures show that as a result of such seizures made in 1988, a total of 10 persons have been prosecuted for possession.

Private Events (Control)

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has come to a conclusion on the implications of the report from the chief constable of Thames Valley on the incident which occurred on the industrial estate at White Waltham on Saturday 24 June in relation to police powers and penalties.

Mr. Hurd: I have received a further report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police on the events of the weekend of 1 and 2 July 1989. The police were able to take action against a number of parties. The chief constable emphasised the need for good intelligence about the likely location of the parties as the basis for successful enforcement action both by police and local authorities. In at least one case the environmental health officer of the local authority obtained an injunction under the noise control provisions of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. In other cases, the owners of premises have co-operated by withdrawing permission or denying access where no authority had been sought be the organisers.

I set out in reply to earlier questions from my hon. Friend on 29 June at columns 517-18 the comprehensive set of controls which already applies to parties of this kind. It is clear that the main need is for those with advance knowledge of any such party to tell the police so that these controls can be enforced. On this basis, the police in Thames Valley and other police force areas have been able to prevent in advance or shut down a number of such parties which had the potential for disorder recently, some of them potentially large ones.

The police have a range of powers to deal effectively with any criminal offences which may be committed. Steps have been taken to strengthen the police co-ordination and intelligence handling arrangements in order to target enforcement action better.

The public entertainment law already requires organisers to provide adequate standards of safety and hygiene at events of this kind. If that law is ignored, adequate hygiene and safety arrangements may not be made. I am therefore giving further consideration to the need to strengthen the penalties available for breaches of the public entertainment law.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is now in a position to give his Department's provisional response to public requests for further actions to control so called acid house parties and similar pop concert type events.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to give powers to the police to control an ostensibly private party numbering more than 1,000 people which takes place on private land but without the consent of the landowner; and if, where the landowner has agreed to the party taking place, the Secretary of State will provide powers of enforcement for lavatory or first aid facilities to be available and to inform the local constabulary or the local authority in whose area the site for the party is situated.

Mr. Hurd: There is already a comprehensive set of controls which applies to parties of this kind. I refer my hon. Friends to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Windsor and Maidenhead (Dr. Glyn) today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

German Reunification

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about German reunification; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to a question from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 7 June at column 161.

Grenada

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Grenadan authorities for the restoration of a constitutional court system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. As an independent Commonwealth country, it is for Grenada to determine its own judicial system.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Grenadan authorities to lift the death sentence imposed on the defendants in the Grenada 17 trial; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The appeals of all 17 persons convicted in Grenada of the murder of Prime Minister Bishop and of other crimes in 1983 are currently being heard in Grenada's court of appeal. It would be improper for Her Majesty's Government to make representations to the Government of Grenada concerning the 14 appellants sentenced to death while the legal process continues.

Diplomatic Relations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of state for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with (a) Libya and (b) Syria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We could not consider restoring diplomatic relations with either Libya or Syria without firm evidence that those countries had given up support for international terrorism.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the return of British diplomats to Afghanistan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The embassy will reopen as soon as circumstances permit it to do a useful job. It is still too early to predict when this will be. Meanwhile, officials may from time to time have to visit Kabul to deal with matters relating to the administration and maintenance of our embassy compound. But such visits will in no way affect our attitude towards contacts with the Kabul regime.

Bulgaria

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the numbers of the Turkish minority population of Bulgaria who have been obliged to leave in the course of 1989; what representations he has made to the Bulgarian Government, and with what effect; in which international fora Her Majesty's Government have raised this abuse of human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We understand that over 100,000 members of Bulgaria's Turkish minority have fled to Turkey since mid-May. It is probable that the first wave, perhaps several thousand, were deported and that the rest have left voluntarily (albeit as a consequence of long-term harassment), taking advantage of a recent relaxation in Bulgaria's laws on travel.

We have made representations bilaterally to the Bulgarian authorities, invoking stage 1 of the "human dimension" mechanism of the CSCE Vienna concluding document. Numerous other countries have made similar demarches. We also drew attention to the plight of Bulgaria's Turkish minority during the recent conference on the human dimension of the CSCE in Paris. The Bulgarian authorities have provided some information on their policies, but have not so far taken steps to improve the lot of the Turkish minority. We have also raised this matter regularly in UN fora.

We call on the Bulgarian authorities to ensure that those who wish to leave for Turkey may do so in an orderly fashion, and that the rights of those who wish to remain in Bulgaria are respected.

Mr. Eggar: No. Her Majesty's embassies do not have the resources to undertake inquiries of this nature which, in any case, can be pursued through normal commercial channels.

Iraq

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will reconsider the imposition of economic sanctions and the ending of export credits to Iraq in the light of the mass evictions of Kurdish Iraqi citizens from border areas and the Iraqi Government's refusal to allow independent observers into the depopulated area.

Mr. Waldegrave: We do not believe that unilateral economic measures would be effective in ending human rights abuses in Iraq. It is better to maintain a working relationship if we are to influence Iraq's behaviour. We continue to press the Iraqi authorities for full details of their present resettlement programme, and to allow diplomats and journalists to be able to visit the areas concerned.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether he has obtained details from the Iraqi Government on which towns and villages in Iraqi Kurdistan have been depopulated in recent weeks;

(2) whether, in the light of the Iraqi ambassador's recent statement of the Iraqi Government's intention to depopulate an additional stretch of Iraq's border, he has obtained the names of the towns and villages within this area which now face imminent eviction of the population.

Mr. Waldegrave: We continue to press the Iraqi authorities for details of their Kurdish resettlement programme. The Iraqi Government also issued a statement on 26 June providing some further information.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the eviction of Kurds from border areas in Iraq.

Mr. Waldegrave: We remain seriously concerned at allegations of forced resettlement of Kurds in northern Iraq. We continue to press the Iraqi authorities to allow journalists and diplomats to visit the areas concerned to see for themselves.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the report of European Community representatives in Baghdad on the human rights situation in Iraq will be made available in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: Reports compiled by EC ambassadors are confidential documents under the rules of European political co-operation. It is not, therefore, open to us to make such reports publicly available.

European Court

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the decisions of the European Court have not yet been implemented by each of the member states of the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: According to table 10 of the "Official Journal of the European Communities" C310, volume 31 of 5 December 1988 (available in the Library), at 31 December 1987 the information was as follows:

	Number
Italy	28
Belgium	10
Germany	9
France	5
Netherlands	4
Greece	4
Denmark	2
United Kingdom	2
Ireland	1

The two judgments listed against the United Kingdom have now been implemented.

EMPLOYMENT

Accident Rates

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the accident rate per 1,000 trainees on YTS and for employees generally.

Mr. Cope: The rate of accidents reported to the Training Agency per 100,000 trainees on YTS in the year ended 31 March 1988 was 804. This includes types of accidents which would not be reportable to HSE in the case of employees generally. The rate of accidents to all employees reported to HSE in the same year was 734 per 100,000, but this figure does not allow for the known substantial under-reporting, so the figures are not comparable.

Detailed research shows that YTS trainees are no more at risk than employees generally and could be less so.

Tourism

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of the section 4 tourism grant scheme.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Yardley (Mr. Bevan) on 6 July.

Wages Councils

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many firms have been discovered in contravention of wages council legislation, per inspector, for each year since 1970.

Mr. Nicholls: Wages inspectorate statistics are compiled in terms of establishments rather than firms. With this proviso, the information requested is in the following tables. The figures under each heading are not mutually exclusive.

Factory Inspectors

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of factory inspectors in post (a) in 1979 and (b) currently; and what are the reasons for the change.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 April 1979, 742 factory inspectors were in post in the Health and Safety Executive. On 1 July 1989, the total was 621·5 compared with 592 on 1 April 1988.

In order to contain public sector manpower and spending there were staff reductions in HSE, as in the Civil Service as a whole. HSE continues to meet its responsibilities with improvements in efficiency brought about by the use of careful targeting.

Increased Government provision to the Health and Safety Commission and Executive over previously planned levels of £6·7 million gross for 1988-89 and £8·3 million gross for 1989-90 have allowed the Executive to increase factory inspector numbers. The Executive plans to have 640 factory inspectors in post by April 1990.

Employment Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which of those local authorities listed as participating in employment training, Official Report, 27 February, columns 34-38 as training managers and training agents have now withdrawn from the scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The following local authorities participating in employment training as training managers have now withdrawn from the scheme:

Barrow borough council
London borough of Barnet
London borough of Merton
Nottinghamshire county council
Rochdale Metropolitan borough council.

Wolverhampton metropolitan borough council will not be renewing their existing contract at the end of August 1989. Similar action is expected from Leicester city council and Cleveland county council.

HEALTH

Administrative and Clerical Staff

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many whole-time equivalent administrative and clerical staff were employed in the National Health Service in England on (a) 30 September 1979, (b) 30 September 1987 and (c) 30 September 1988.

Mr. Mellor: The information is shown in the table.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each regional health authority and for England as a whole the total in-patient waiting list recorded in each hospital waiting list return since 1 January 1974.

Mr. Mellor: The total in-patient waiting list for each regional health authority and for England in each year since 1974 is given in the table.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list for each health region the complete hospital closures since January 1979 giving, in each case (a) the name and address of the hospital, (b) the area health authority or district health authority, (c) the number of beds, (d) the type of hospital and (e) the date of closure;

(2) if he will list for each health region the partial hospital closures since January 1979 giving, in each case (a) the name and address of the hospital, (b) the area health authority or district health authority, (c) the number of beds, (d) the type of hospital and (e) the date of closure.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 11 May at column 497 which refers to lists, placed in the Library of all hospitals/units approved for full or partial closure, by region and district and in year order, since 1979. The further information requested is not available centrally.

Prescriptions

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of prescriptions dispensed and the total net ingredient cost for England and Wales, for the years 1977 to 1988.

Mr. Mellor: The number of prescriptions dispensed in England during the period together with the net ingredient cost before discounts and excluding dispensing fees are:

	Prescriptions millions	Net ingredient cost £ million
1977	311·1	456·3
1978	323·6	544·7

1987	358·5	1,636·1
1988	371·0	1,852·2

The information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Medical Records

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the right of access of patients to medical records; what replies he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There have been a number of representations over the years. The number increased after the Access to Personal Files Act became law. During its passage through the House medical records were excluded from its provisions but the Government undertook to have talks with the medical profession about a voluntary code of practice on access to medical records. These talks have resulted in a draft code, on which the Department is consulting interested parties such as doctors, dentists, nurses, midwives, health visitors, patient interest groups and NHS management. As soon after that consultation as is practicable the Department will issue the code. A copy of the draft code is in the Library.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been during each of the last three years (a) the total assistance and grants given by his Department to help disablement organisations and (b) grants given in each of these years to the British Council of organisations of disabled people; and if he will review his adequacy of support being given to those organisations which involve disabled people directly, in the policy development and decision taking affecting the well-being of disabled people.

Mr. Freeman: With regard to grants to help disablement organisations, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), on 18 April 1989 at columns 133-34. Grants to the British Council of Organisations of Disabled People have been as follows:

Year	£
1986-87	10,000
1987-88	4,500
1988-89	10,000

We do support the work of many organisations which involve disabled people directly and expect to do so increasingly in the future as new bodies become established.

Eye Tests

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will extend his Department's definition of a near relative of glaucoma sufferers in his criteria for free eye tests to include nephews and nieces.

Mr. Mellor: The criteria that free NHS sight tests should be available to parents, brothers, sisters or children aged 40 years or over of diagnosed glaucoma sufferers was reached after advice from doctors and full consultation with other interested parties. We have no plans to change or extend this definition to include nephews, nieces, any other relative or age group.

Cook-Chill Food

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has carried out into the health effects of nutrient depletion on long stay patients in hospitals whose diet is mainly cook-chill meals.

Mr. Freeman: The recent review of cook-chill and cook-freeze guidelines by an expert group took into account relevant scientific papers and drew upon its expert knowledge. The expert group concluded that, providing the guidelines are followed, food produced by the cook-chill system is as good nutritionally as food from conventional catering.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to introduce the temperature regulations recommended in the Social Services Select Committee report on listeria in respect of cook-chill retailed food and cook-chill catered food.

Mr. Freeman: Draft regulations which embody new storage temperature requirements were issued for consultation on 4 July 1989. We intend to make new regulations later this year.

Dental Charges (Refunds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applicants for a refund of their dental charges have been turned down since the introduction of charges on the grounds that they did not claim within one month of the original payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Feeeman: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Blood

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the profit made by the blood transfusion service on each 1,000 pints of donated blood bought by private sector health institutions; what method is used to determine the price at which blood will be sold to the private sector; how much blood was sold in total for each of the last 10 years to the private sector for all blood groups and the rarest blood groups; what was this as a percentage of total blood donations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No profit is made on any blood or blood components supplied to non-NHS hospitals by the national blood transfusion service. Since 1 April 1984 charges have been made to the private sector to recover the cost to the NHS of collection, processing, handling and transport. No charge is made for the blood itself. Information about the groups supplied is not held centrally. Blood issued to non-NHS hospitals is shown in the table.

[1]The figures relate to Wales and 12 regions in England as information is not available for Oxford region.
[2] Provisional.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether blood donation shortages have been reported to his Department in any of the last 10 years by any public body for use by National Health Service institutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that systematic information about representations received over the last 10 years could not be supplied except at disproportionate cost. Up to 1 October 1988 the day-to-day responsibility for maintaining blood supplies rested with regional transfusion centres (RTCs) and the Department would not necessarily have been informed of any local shortages. The national directorate of the blood transfusion service was established from 1 October 1988, and arranges the transfer of blood to RTCs experiencing temporary shortages.

Eggs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many consignments of imported eggs have been impounded on the grounds of poor quality since 1 December 1988;

(2) how many consignments of imported eggs have been condemned by officials of his Department since 1 December 1988.

Mr. Mellor: It is not practicable for port health authorities to impound or condemn any imported egg consignments because of the time needed by public health laboratories to produce confirmation test results.

The arrangements are that any positive findings are reported to the Department and the relevant producer country is then advised so that action can be taken to deal with the contamination at source.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those public health laboratories which participate in testing consignments of imported eggs.

Mr. Mellor: Reports on tests on samples of imported eggs have so far been received from public health laboratories at Ashford, Hull, Ipswich and Norwich.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements he has agreed with port authorities for the testing of samples of imported eggs at public health laboratories.

Mr. Mellor: Since 4 April 1989 port health authorities have agreed to check as many consignments of imported eggs as practicable and to notify the Department where public health laboratory reports of contaminated eggs are received.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources he has made available to public health laboratories specifically to enable them to conduct tests on samples of consignments of imported eggs.

Mr. Mellor: Funding for public health laboratories involved with the testing of imported egg samples is contained within their overall resource allocation.

Children Bill

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate for the costs of staff training arising from the provisions of the Children Bill.

Mr. Mellor: One off costs of staff training arising from the Children Bill are estimated at £4·6 million at 1988-89 levels for local authority staff. The estimates have been dicussed with the local authority associations and will be reviewed when the level of central Government support for local authority expenditure is determined. There will also be costs of training judicial and court staff which are a mater for my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Community Care

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will outline the procedure he will be establishing for inspecting and monitoring the quality of community care services provided by the private and voluntary sectors;

(2) under the new arrangements, which agency will have primary responsibility for people who are mentally ill and are also either elderly or have a physical handicap;

(3) what safetguards will be established to protect consumer should services provided by private or voluntary organisations for community care go out of business or fail to meet national quality standards.

Mr. Mellor: The Government have been considering the future organisations and management of community care services following Sir Roy Griffiths report "Community Care: Agenda for Action" and the many views received in response to it. Its deliberations are now complete and we hope to make a statement this week.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for ring fencing National Health Service resources to ensure funding released by the closure of wards and hospitals will be directed towards community care.

Mr. Mellor: Health authorities must remain responsible for determining their own expenditure priorities in the light of their knowledge of local needs and circumstances.

OPCS

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce the result of his review of the future location of the work of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) has three main sites in London, Titchfield and Southport where there are about 660, 840 and 600 staff respectively. The number of staff at the Southport site is expected to fall by about 250 during 1991 as a result of the computerisation of the NHS central register.

I have concluded that most of the division which oversees the registration of births, marriages and deaths, now based largely in London, should move to Southport. It is having great difficulty in recruiting and retaining administrative staff in London, and the effectiveness and efficiency of its operation is being jeopardised. about 170 posts from London and about 80 posts from Titchfield will move to Southport. Some other services at present based in London, mainly in central support areas, will move to Titchfield when accommodation becomes available there. The moves will be co-ordinated with the planned run-down of other Southport work and will probably be completed by mid 1992.

Both the public search room and the OPCS library, which are used regularly by the public, will remain in London. The professional statistical work of OPCS, covering population and medical statistics, the census and social surveys, will also remain in London because of the importance of day to day links with customers in Government Departments, which have been strengthened in accordance with the machinery of Government review in 1986.

ENERGY

British Petroleum

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will use his departmental shareholding in British Petroleum to put pressure on British Petroleum to stop its destruction of parts of the Jamari rain forest in Brazil.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

No. The Government now hold only about 2 per cent. of the ordinary share capital of British Petroleum plc. Even when their shareholding was much larger, the Government did not use their rights as a shareholder to intervene in the commercial decisions of the company.

Research and Development

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list Government expenditure on research and development in the area of energy efficiency for the years 1981, 1983, 1985, 1987 and 1989;

(2) if he will list the proposed funding for research and development in the area of energy efficiency for the years 1990-91 and 1991-92;

(3) what amount of funding is being allocated to research and development in the area of energy efficiency in the current financial year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is as follows:

Expenditure on energy efficiency research, development and demonstration[1,2]

Year	£'000s
1980-81	2,015
1982-83	6,841
1984-85	6,564
1986-87	8,197
1988-89	9,077
1989-90	8,850

[1] For the year 1989-90 the figure is the estimate provision. Prior years are outturn.
[2] All figures exclude expenditure on the monitoring and targeting programme.

Figures for future years will be published shortly in the 1989 Annual Review of Government-Funded R & D.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give a breakdown of his Department's spending on research and development in the following sources of energy for 1988, its plans for 1989 and its plans for future years (a) nuclear fission in thermal reactors, (b) nuclear fission in fast breeder reactors, (c) nuclear fusion, (d) renewable energy sources as a whole, (e) tidal power, (f) solar, (g) windpower, (h) wave power, (i) biofuels, (j) wet rock geothermal, (k) dry rock geothermal, (l) other renewable sources, (m) conventional fossil fuel sources and (h) any other sources of energy; and whether he will give comparable figures for other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The figures requested are as follows:

Expenditure in £ million

	1988-89	1989-90
Thermal reactors (safety research only)	19·53	17·27
Fast breeder reactor	104·55	98·58

Fossil fuels	0·72	2·56
Other sources of energy	—	—

Figures for future years will be published shortly in the 1989 Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development, in the usual format for that publication.

Figures for other European Community countries can be found in the annual review published by the International Energy Agency "Energy Policies and Programmes of IEA Countries", the most recent of which was produced in 1988. Expenditure figures and forecasts for other countries may not be on the same basis as for the United Kingdom.

Nuclear Generating Stations

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the estimated value of the nuclear generating sectors of the Central Electricity Generating Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) on 19 October 1988 at column 859.

Nuclear Power Stations

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the estimated operating lifespans of the United Kingdom's remaining nuclear power stations in commission.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operating matter for the utilities concerned. I have asked the chairmen of the CEGB and SSEB to reply to the hon. Member.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends proceeding with his plan to include the nuclear power plants within electricity privatisation; whether he intends transferring the ownership of physical assets of nuclear power plants currently owned by the Central Electricity Generating Board to the private sector; what is his latest estimate of the costs of decommissioning nuclear power stations and disposing and reprocessing of nuclear waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The Government's plans for privatising the electricity industry were set out in the White Paper, "Privatising Electricity" (Cm. 322) and in the Electricity Bill, and were debated at length during the passage of the Bill. These remain the Government's policy.

The CEGB estimates that the average cost of decommissioning each of its existing nuclear power stations, in current prices and assuming a delay of around 100 years before the final stage of decommissioning, will be about £300 million, including the costs of disposal of waste arising. The costs of reprocessing spent fuel will depend on the commercial negotiations between the CEGB and BNFL which are currently underway.

Electrical Appliances (Efficiency)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans (a) to introduce legislation to ensure that electrical appliances are labelled to give details of their energy use so that consumers may choose the most energy efficient brand of any given type of appliance and (b) to press the European Communities to regulate to ensure labelling of electrical appliances.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 16 May 1988 at column 299 and to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 20 February 1989 at columns 470-71.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to press the European Communities to regulate the energy efficiencies of electrical appliances to ensure that they achieve minimum efficiency standards that would be set by the EC and updated along with technological developments.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No.

Mr. Elliot Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department has evaluated claims that use of electricity could be reduced by 70 per cent. without reducing the present level of electricial services if the most energy efficient electrical appliances currently available were used throughout the country, and if other conservation measures including combined heat and power/district heating schemes, prohibiting wasteful energy systems, tightening building regulations' were introduced.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Energy Efficiency Office is in the process of commissioning a study on the energy efficiency of electrical appliances. However, improvements in efficiency in domestic appliances, as with improvements in industrial processes, and construction and use of combined heat and power systems, do not necessarily lead to a reduction in the use of electricity. The increased efficiency may be taken as increased warmth or increased production, and increased energy efficiency may mean changing from another fuel to electricity.

Environmental Damage

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the conclusions of his Department's evaluation of the environmentally damaging aspects of (a) nuclear power, (b) coal-fired power plants, (c) oil-fired power plants, (d) gas-fired power plants, (e) large scale inland hydropower, (f) low-head hydropower, (g) estuarial power generating tidal barrages, (h) wind power, (i) solar water heating, (j) photoelectric solar power, (k) pump-storage power schemes, (l) off-shore wave power, (m) on-shore wave power, (n) ocean thermal electric power, (o) geothermal power, (p) refuse fuelled power plants, (q) biomass fuelled power plants and (r) combined heat and power pebble-bed/fluidised bed plants; and if he will make a statement on the benefits of each type of plant in regard to mitigation of greenhouse global warming.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The latest comprehensive and systematic evaluation of the full range of energy supply technologies undertaken for my Department was reported in Energy Paper 54 and its complementary "background papers" volume ETSU-R-43. Both of these publications are available in the Library of the House. Thy describe in general terms the principal environmental impacts of each technology. Environmental considerations form an integral part of many of the Department's R & D projects.

As part of the study leading to Energy Paper 54, consideration was given to the additional benefits of these technologies if restrictions on CO_2 emissions were necessary. However, the results were not quantified. The current United Kingdom work in support of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) Working Group on "Response Strategies" should improve our analysis of the cost and benefits in regard to climate change for many of the technologies listed.

Fusion

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the likely cost of electricity produced from fusion sources.

Mr. Michael Spicer: At present, work on fusion is still at the stage of establishing whether fusion is a scientifically feasible source of power. It is too soon to make any reliable estimate of the likely cost of electricity from fusion sources.

Offshore Wind Generation

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department has any plans to fund the setting up of a pilot programme of offshore wind generation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The chairman of the CEGB announced in 1988 the proposal to build an offshore wind turbine generator as part of a joint programme with the Department. Following withdrawal of the prospective industrial partner from wind turbine manufacture, alternatives are now being considered.

Non-fossil Fuel Sources

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the amount of public sector support given directly or indirectly since 1979 to each non-fossil fuel source of power including all forms of renewable energy.

Mr. Parkinson: Expenditure since 1979 by the Department of Energy on its renewables programme and payments made to the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) in support of its nuclear energy programme are set out in the tables. Other public sector contributions towards the renewables programmes in which the Department is involved are mainly from the Central Electricity Generating Board, together with other parts of the electricity supply industry, the Science and Engineering Research Council and the Natural Environment Research Council. Other public sector contributions to the UKAEA's nuclear energy programme are from the Department of the Environment, British Nuclear Fuels, the electricity supply industry and NIREX. Figures for these other public sector contributions are not readily available over the period and could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Note: Up to 1986-87 total for research and development also includes expenditure on low head hydro and general studies. These are separately identified for 1987-88 onwards. For 1987-88 onwards general studies includes work by the chief scientist's group.

Safety Inspectors

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the number of safety inspectors employed by his Department to look after offshore oil safety.

Mr. Parkinson: The number of safety inspectors employed by the Department of Energy to look after offshore oil safety was 41 at 1 July 1989.

Magnox

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the timetable for closing the Central Electricity Generating Board's magnox nuclear power stations will alter as a result of privatisation.

Mr. Parkinson: This is a matter for the CEGB.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest estimate of the cost per kilowatt hour of generating electricity by (a) nuclear plant and (b) coal-fired power stations.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet) on 15 December 1988 at column 679.

Electricity Council

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the Electricity Council intends to publish its annual accounts for the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Parkinson: This is a matter for the Electricity Council. I shall ask the chairman of the council to write to the hon. Member.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disabled People

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to change the earnings rule to increase the amount which disabled persons may earn before losing benefits.

Mr. Scott: People receiving sickness benefit, invalidity pension or severe disablement allowance can do work of a therapeutic nature with their doctor's approval without affecting their benefit entitlement, provided that their earnings do not exceed £28·50 per week. This level was last increased in April 1989 and is reviewed annually.

The amount that disabled people can earn without affecting their income support was increased from £4 to £15 per week in April 1988. The same disregard of £15 applies also to housing benefit and will be extended to the community charge benefits. There are no current plans to increase these disregards.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth, 11 April, Official Report, column 500, when sections 2, 3, and 8 (ii) of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 will be implemented.

Mr. Scott: We are still in detailed discussions with the local authority associations about section 7; these will be followed by work on the remaining sections.

Fraud (North West)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what has been the rate of successful prosecutions for social security fraud in the North West since the inception of the scheme offering £75 payments to those who supply relevant information to investigating officials;

(2) what was the rate of successful prosecutions for social security fraud in the North West prior to the introduction of the £75 inducement;

(3) when his Department's inducement programme in the North West was introduced.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department does not operate such a scheme.

Community Charge

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to introduce poll tax rebates for those who care for the elderly within the family home.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Community charge rebates may be claimed by all people who are liable for a full personal community charge or for collective community charge contributions, including people who are caring for the elderly within the family home. The amount of rebate will depend upon the claimant's financial resources, personal circumstances and community charge liability.

Food Vouchers

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what powers social fund officers have to make payments by means of food vouchers; and what guidance they have received on the use of such powers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Social fund officers are empowered by section 33(1A) of the Social Security Act 1986 (as amended by the Social Security Act 1988, schedule 3, paragraph 10) to make social fund payments in the form of vouchers.

Guidance on the issue of vouchers is contained in the social fund manual, a copy of which is in the Library.

Leaflets

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost of production and distribution of the leaflet entitled, "Our Business Is Service."

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 26 May at columns 749-50.

Benefit Costs

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the per capita level of spending on social security benefits (a) in real terms and (b) indexed with 100 as 1979, since 1979.

Mr. Scott: I regret that it is not possible to provide the information requested. There is no reliable precise estimate of the total number of people who receive social security benefits. Many people receive more than one benefit at the same time and detailed records of the numbers of all multiple beneficiaries and the various combinations of benefits held by them is not kept. Information is collected on the numbers in receipt of each individual benefit (table 15.6 of Cm. 615) and some combinations of benefit but it is not sufficiently comprehensive to determine a per capita level of spending.

Caerphilly Local Office

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the reasons why 8·5 per cent. of the annual social fund budget for loans and grants was unspent during 1988-89 in the Caerphilly office; and how many applications for loans or grants in that office during the year in question were refused.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During the financial year 1988-89 the Department's office at Caerphilly made awards which accounted for 98·6 per cent. of the loans budget allocation, and 91·5 per cent. of the community care grants budget allocation.

The underspend on the community care grants budget occurred because the office had anticipated the need to fund start up grants arising from two local housing developments. In the event, the Wales and West housing association development did not result in any applications and the Newydd housing association development was cancelled.

Information about the number of loan and grant applications which were unsuccessful may be obtained from data in the Library.

Private Residential Care

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will outline the mechanism for ensuring that social security resources currently spent on private residential care and nursing homes are directed towards community care.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Income support remains available both to those in need of the high levels of personal care provided by independent homes and to those in need of care who remain in their own homes.

Community Charge

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether social grant is counted as income for the purpose of calculating poll tax rebate entitlement for the spouse of a student.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Yes.

Giro Cheques

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct the Department of Social Security offices to post giro cheques to claimants on Thursdays to increase the chance of their arriving before post offices close at midday on Saturdays.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Paydays for claimants are allocated evenly across the week to spread the work for the benefit of Post Office and local office staff alike. However, it is not normal practice to issue giro cheques on a Friday for the reason cited in the question.

DEFENCE

Soviet Submarine (Accident)

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Her Majesty's Government were informed by the Soviet Government of the disabling accident to the nuclear reactor of the Echo-2 class Soviet submarine which occurred on 26 June.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

This accident was of such a minor nature that no notification from the Soviet Government was expected and none was received.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many air-misses involving military aircraft operating in the night low-flying system were reported (a) between 10 October 1987 and 31 May 1988 and (b) between 10 October 1988 and 31 May 1989.

Mr. Neubert: There were no air miss reports involving military aircraft operating in the night low-flying system for the period 10 October 1987 to 31 May 1988, and one reported for the period 10 October 1988 to 31 May 1989.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the refinements made to the revised night low-flying system with effect from 1 June.

Mr. Neubert: The major refinement made to the revised night low-flying system, with effect from 1 June, was to centralise the co-ordination of the system and the responsibility for deconfliction at the tactical booking cell at RAF West Drayton.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures have been taken since October 1988 to separate rotary and fixed-wing low flying over the United Kingdom (a) at night and (b) during the day.

Mr. Neubert: As with all aspects of low flying training, flight safety is under continuous review. Since October 1988, greater separation of rotary and fixed-wing low flying at night has been achieved through the designation of specified geographical areas for either predominantly fixed-wing or predominantly rotary-wing activity. No additional measures to separate fixed-wing and rotary-wing aircraft during daytime operations have been considered necessary since October 1988.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which units were responsible for (a) co-ordination of the night low-flying system and (b) deconfliction in the night low-flying system prior to the introduction of the revised system on 1 June.

Mr. Neubert: Co-ordination and deconfliction of night low flying during the trial period, to the introducion of the revised night low flying system on 1 June, were the responsibility of HQ strike command, RAF Germany and HQ 3rd air force.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of low-flying sorties over the United Kingdom in each year since 1979 by United States air force aircraft, providing a breakdown of the figures by aircraft type.

Mr. Neubert: Central records are not held in a form which would allow the data requested to be provided.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the scope and purpose of the additional low-flying activity in the Wash area at weekends between 6 May and 25 June.

Mr. Neubert: The only unusual military low flying activity identified in the general area of the Wash over the period in question was of Hercules transit activity on 3-4 June associated with exercise Blue Lanyard, about which those hon. Members, whose constituents were likely to be affected were notified in advance in the customary manner.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the figure for the proportion of RAF Germany low-flying training in 1988 which made use of the United Kingdom low-flying system, provided in the answer from the hon. Member for Romford (Mr. Neubert) to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy of 10 May, Official Report, column 475, included low-flying sorties by RAF Germany aircraft which originated from and terminated at airfields in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neubert: Yes.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the differences, in terms of the nature and force of their applicability to military low-flying aireraft, between (a) restricted areas for aviation, as shown on Civil Aviation Authority maps, (b) prohibited areas for aviation, as shown on Civil Aviation Authority maps, (c) provost-marshal prohibited areas, (d) provost-marshal restricted areas, (e) avoidance areas and transit areas in the United Kingdom low flying system, as shown on the Civil Aviation Authority chart entitled "Chart of United Kingdom Areas of Intense Aerial Activity and Military Low Flying System", and (f) military low-flying avoidances in force around individual installations and sites but which are not shown on the Civil Aviation Authority chart entitled "Chart of United Kingdom Areas of Intense Aerial Activity and Military Low Flying System."

Mr. Neubert: All restrictions applying to military low flying aircraft are detailed in United Kingdom military low flying regulations and marked, as appropriate, on military low flying charts. There are no differences in the nature and force of the applicability to military aircraft of the categories of restriction listed.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given to authorising low flying at less than 250ft over the United Kingdom during exercises other than work-up training for exercises in the United States of America and Canada.

Mr. Neubert: Training in tactical training areas consists mainly of work-up training for operational low-flying exercises in the United States and Canada. Occasional continuation training may also be carried out to maintain aircrew skills between such exercises, thereby reducing the quantity of work-up training required. There are no plans to change this.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy on retaining central records of requests from foreign air forces, including the United States air force in the United Kingdom, for authorisation to fly in the United Kingdom low-flying system at less than the normal minimum height; and when this policy was first established.

Mr. Neubert: Records of any formal requests by foreign air forces for authorisation to carry out training in the United Kingdom at less than normal height would be handled in accordance with the normal and long-standing arrangements applicable to public records in the Ministry of Defence.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the approximate proportion of RAF Germany low-flying training in each year between 1979 and 1987 which has made use of the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Mr. Neubert: As my answer to the hon. Member on 11 May 1989 at column 475 made clear, accurate figures are not available prior to 1988. It is assessed, however, that for 1987 the proportion of RAF Germany fixed-wing low level sorties that made use of the United Kingdom low flying system was between 20 per cent. and 30 per cent.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of available flying days in the revised night low-flying system from 1 June are allocated to (a) RAF strike command, (b) RAF Germany, (c) RAF support command, (d) the United States air force, (e) other NATO air forces and (f) other users.

Mr. Neubert: With the recent centralisation of co-ordination of night low flying at the tactical booking cell at RAF West Drayton, the use of the United Kingdom night low flying system is not allocated to commands on a daily basis.

Provost-Marshal Areas

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list all provost-marshal prohibited areas which have been (a) established and (b) disestablished since 1979, stating the reason for establishment or disestablishment in each case;

(2) if he will list all provost-marshal restricted areas which have been (a) established and (b) disestablished since 1979, stating the reason for establishment or disestablishment in each case.

Mr. Neubert: It is not our practice to release detailed information about the United Kingdom low flying system.

Hawk Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many accidents have occurred involving RAF Hawk aircraft since 1979; and if he will indicate the causes of such accidents where possible.

Mr. Neubert: Details of major accidents to RAF Hawk aircraft since 1979 are as follows:

Notes:
1. Category 4 Damage not repairable on site.
2. Category 5 Aircraft damaged beyond repair.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Hawk training aircraft are operating with the RAF and other air forces; and what design modifications have been made to the aircraft as a result of accidents.

Mr. Neubert: A total of 172 Hawk aircraft have been taken into service by the Royal Air Force. The aircraft has met fully its original design specification. As with all aircraft, modifications are introduced from time to time in the light of operational experience. The number of Hawk aircraft operational with other air forces is not a matter for my Department.

Cardigan Bay (Accident)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now in a position to publish in the Official Report details of the military aircraft accident which occurred on 14 June over the Cardigan bay area.

Mr. Neubert: On the afternoon of 14 June, while engaged on a training flight under instruction and practising a formation rejoin at 10,000 feet, two RAF Hawk aircraft from RAF Valley collided some 15 miles south-east of Llanbeder. One pilot, a Royal Navy officer, ejected successfully. Unfortunately, the pilot of the second aircraft—a Royal Air Force officer—did not eject and was killed. Wreckage fell on two sites about eight miles apart. A board of inquiry was convened in the normal way. A summary of the results of the inquiry will be published in due course.

Smoking

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the figures for smoking prevalence in the armed forces; if he will estimate the number and type of smoking-related diseases prevalent in the armed forces as a result of these smoking rates; what plans he has to reduce the incidence of smoking in the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: There are presently no current figures available for smoking prevalences in the armed forces. A recent survey into the health of service men, once analysed, will provide a comparison of smoking rates within the services at home and abroad. A British regional heart survey in 1981 produced the following statistics on smoking incidence in the armed forces: Never smoked 12 per cent, Ex-smokers 30 per cent., Current smokers 58 per cent. Service statistics on illness and causation are not kept in a manner which would enable a true identification of smoke-related illness. The Ministry of Defence is ever aware of the need to reduce cigarette smoking by service men and has a continuing health education campaign aimed at all ranks and levels.

Nuclear Submarines (Decommissioned Reactors)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the decommissioned pressurised water reactors removed from British nuclear submarines are stored; and what is the method of that storage.

Mr. Sainsbury: Only one nuclear-powered submarine Dreadnought, has so far been decommissioned. The defuelled reactor belonging to this vessel is inside the reactor compartment which remains an integral part of the submarine. Dreadnought has been berthed at Rosyth naval base since 1983.

HMS Southampton

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he hopes to announce the contract for the refit of HMS Southampton.

Mr. Sainsbury: Shortly.

Defence Land

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the total area of defence lands in 1979 and to date; and what plans he has to (a) release more, or (b) acquire further such lands.

Mr. Neubert: On 1 April 1979 the total freehold and leasehold land and foreshore held by the Ministry of Defence was 621,118 acres (251,358 ha). The equivalent figure on 1 April 1989 was 596,265 acres (241,300 ha); some 79 per cent. of this consists of ranges, training areas and airfields.

The MOD continues to keep the size of its estate under review. Land which is surplus to defence requirements is disposed of; receipts from the sale of land and buildings were £150 million in 1988-89, nearly double that of any previous year.

There remains, however, a shortage of training land for the Army and additional areas are being acquired when they become available.

SCOTLAND

Community Charge

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the information on how many people in Scotland have and have not paid the poll tax to be available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It will be some while yet before reliable information becomes available from local authorities on payment levels of the community charge. Such information as is available from local authorities is not a reliable guide to the numbers of people who are declining to pay, because it cannot as yet take account of those who, for example, have decided to pay by lump sum, who may still be awaiting rebated bills or who have decided to delay their first payment until the last moment before they become liable to pay the full annual amount. Local authorities recognise these factors and are, I understand, generally satisfied with the progress so far made in collecting the community charge.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance has been given to Scottish members of Her Majesty's forces living in Germany about requirements to pay the community charge in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Guidance prepared by the Ministry of Defence on all aspects of the community charge as it affects service personnel has been issued to all units and commands at home and overseas. Copies of this guidance have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

River Pollution

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the level of nitrate pollution in each of Scotland's river purification board areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested on levels of nitrate pollution in Scotland is not held centrally. Individual river purification boards will have information on nitrate levels in their areas; a number of boards publish this in summary form in their annual reports which are available in the Library.

Warrant Sales

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many warrant sales were granted each year from 1979 in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of warrants of sale and reports of warrant sales from 1979 to 1987 (the latest year for which figures are available) are set out in the table below.

	Warrants to sell	Reports of sale
1979	3,838	226
1980	5,829	231
1981	4,634	287
1982	4,886	477
1983	5,195	403
1984	5,644	512
1985	5,916	693
1986	5,836	678
1987	6,927	650

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to abolish warrant sales in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Arrangements for the enforcement of court decrees for debt were recently reformed in the Debtors (Scotland) Act 1987 following a detailed review by the Scottish Law Commission. The Government have no plans at present for further major reform of these arrangements.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many persons have finance companies initiated proceedings against in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information is kept on which finance companies have been successful in getting orders for warrant sales in Scotland since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not collected centrally.

AIDS

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the number of patients who have died as a result of AIDS-related diseases in 1989, and for each other year for which figures exist.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of AIDS deaths in Scotland reported to the Communicable Diseases (Scotland) Unit in each year for which figures are available are given below.

	Numbers
1984	3
1985	2
1986	6
1987	12
1988	14
1989[1]	14

[1] End of June.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers of patients in Scotland diagnosed as having developed AIDS in 1989, and for each other year for which statistics exist.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of AIDS cases in Scotland reported to the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit in each year for which figures are available are as follows:

	Numbers
1984	3
1985	4
1986	7

	Numbers
1987	25
1988	36
1989[1]	27

[1] End of June.

Hospices

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow, Official Report, 19 June, column 49, he will outline the reasons for the delay in answering the hon. Member's letter of 28 March regarding Scottish hospices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The reason was simply the careful consideration that I gave to the hon. Member's letter, to which I have now replied.

Tree Planting

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has evaluated the effect of the withdrawal of tax incentives for the private planting of trees upon the rate of new tree planting.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North on 9 May 1989 (Official Report, column 332).

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's reforestation programme introduced to help combat the greenhouse effect.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Although forestry policy has not been aimed specifically at combating the greenhouse effect, over the past 10 years nearly 250,000 hectares of land has been afforested in Great Britain.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in respect of Strathclyde (a) the average rate of unemployment and the European community average in the last three years and (b) the percentage of industrial employment in total employment and the European Community average.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1989]: The figures are as follows:

(a) Unemployment
Annual average percentage

	1986	1987	1988
Strathclyde region	19·2	18·4	15·8
European Community	10·8	10·4	10·0

(b) Industrial employment
Share of industrial employment in total employment percentage

	1984
Strathclyde region	37·3
European Community	34·3

Note: The figures are not directly comparable as a result of definitional differences.

Shipbuilding and Ship Repair (Redundancies)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of redundancies in the shipbuilding and ship repair industries in Strathclyde since 1 January 1984.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1989]: There are no comprehensive statistics on redundancies. The number of redundancies involving 10 or more workers confirmed to the Employment Department/Training Agency as having occurred in Strathclyde region in the shipbuilding and shiprepairing industry since 1 January 1984 was 4,221. This figure relates to redundancies confirmed up to 31 May 1989 and figures for 1989 are provisional.

ENVIRONMENT

Atmospheric Pollution

72. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans to undertake any joint initiative to further reduce lead in the atmosphere.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At the end of 1985, the maximum amount of lead permitted in petrol was reduced by 0·4 to 0·15 grammes per litre: This produced a 50 per cent. drop in airborne levels. However, lead from petrol still accounts for about 80 per cent. of lead in the air. The Government therefore fully support the move to unleaded petrol. The chancellor's budget incentive has resulted in unleaded petrol being on sale at about 10p per gallon cheaper than leaded fuel. The Government funded a major advertising campaign in April; further promotional initiatives are co-ordinated by the unleaded petrol group which I chair. The measures taken so far have contributed to the rapid uptake of the fuel which now accounts for over 20 per cent. of the market; the average for last year was just 1 per cent.

Community Charge

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is yet able to indicate what the average poll tax for England would be based on 1989-90 local government expenditure; and which local authorities would be above or below that figure.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

Illustrative 1989-90 community charges will be published in due course.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a community charge registration officer asking for telephone numbers on the same form as chargepayers are meant to sign certifying that the information given on the form is complete is operating within the limits of his Department's guidelines.

Mr. Gummer: A registration officer may require only such information as is necessary to enable him to compile and maintain the community charges register. In the case of the personal community charge this will usually consist of the names and addresses of adults living in a particular poperty and the dates of birth of those who will become 18 during the lifetime of the register. Information about telephone numbers need not be provided to a registration officer, and the Department's model form and guidance advise registration officers that if they seek any additional information of this kind they should make it clear that there is no obligation on individuals to provide it, and that no penalty can or will be imposed if they do not.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that (a) merchant seamen and (b) Royal Navy seamen, who are away from shore for more than six months in a year, are treated equally in respect of liability for the poll tax.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

The determination of a person's sole or main residence is a matter for community charges registration officers. I have no reason to believe that registration officers will adopt different criteria in relation to the two groups of people mentioned by the hon. Member.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the leaflets on the business rate and the collective community charge will be available; for what reasons the leaflets on (a) poll tax rebates and "You and the Community Charge" and (b) "Exemption Students, Second Homes and Appeal" were produced in different styles; and what are the estimated production and distribution costs of (i) the rebate booklet, (ii) "You and the Community Charge" and (iii) the other leaflets referred to above.

Mr. Gummer: As the information which the hon. Member requests is very detailed I am writing to him.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to exempt children on approved full time courses at colleges of further education, and who are not in receipt of any maintenance grant, from the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 4 July 1989]: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. Most young persons will be liable to the community charge either upon reaching their 18th birthday or at the date on which their parents are no longer entitled to child benefit, whichever is the later. Full time students will pay only 20 per cent. of the charge whilst others on low incomes can claim rebates of up to 80 per cent.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to prevent landlords making an additional charge for poll tax purposes where rates were previously included in rent; what steps he is taking to ensure that appropriate reductions in rent are made when rate revenue ends; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 4 July 1989]: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax. Legislation would be neither necessary nor appropriate in this area. The Department will be producing shortly a booklet on the impact between the community charge and rents in the series "You and the Community Charge".

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions his officials have had with the office of the Data Protection Registrar; and what steps he is taking to monitor the information being requested by community charge registration officers as a part of the registration process in England and Wales.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 6 July 1989]: My officials are in regular contact with the office of the Data Protection Registrar. It is for individual community charges registration officers to ensure that their requests for information are within their statutory powers and that they comply with the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to introduce a community charge concession for those who care for elderly friends or relatives in the community.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer, 6 July 1989]: No special provisions are necessary. I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 29 June 1989 to the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) Official Report, column 502.

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the extent of mischievous registration for community charge in each local authority.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 6 July 1989]: I understand that the registration process is proceeding in a generally satisfactory manner. A few mischievous responses to registration forms have been reported in the press.

Football Spectators Bill

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Football League clubs have indicated their support for the Football Spectators Bill [Lords]; and if he will indicate those doing so in the Official Report.

Mr. Moynihan: My consultations on the FSB have been with the Football Association and the Football League, who were represented on my working party on the national membership scheme last year. I have not formally consulted individual League clubs.

River Calder (Pollution)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ask the North West water authority to implement the necessary work to prevent pollution of the River Calder in Burnley from Black Clough.

Mr. Howard: I understand that the North West water authority is considering measures to remedy this pollution. Under the provisions of the Water Act, it will become the responsibility of the National Rivers Authority.

Clifton Marsh Sewage Works

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what the effect would be on bacterial levels in the River Ribble of uprating Clifton Marsh sewage treatment works to include full conventional treatment and disinfection using environmentally benign methods;

(2) If he willprovide estimates of what proportion of sewage pollution experienced by Lytham St. Anne's is due to (a) bacterial levels in the River Ribble and (b) existing local discharges of sewage.

Mr. Howard: Details of how much of the bacterial content of the bathing waters at Lytham St. Annes emanates from local discharges or from the river Ribble are not available. I understand that the North West water authority believes that the Ribble is a major influence and that the output from Clifton Marsh sewage treatment works is a major component of the bacteriological levels in the river. They are investigating a number of options for improving the quality of the discharge from Clifton Marsh sewage treatment works, including secondary treatment and disinfection.

Rate Arrears

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the 30 local authorities in England with the largest amounts of rate arrears, with the amounts outstanding and the number of people owing in each case.

Mr. Gummer: The latest information from CIPFA published statistics on gross rate arrears, including non-domestic rate arrears, show that the 30 local authorities in England with the largest amounts of rate arrears are as below. Information about the number of people and businesses owning rates is not available.

Inspectorate of Pollution

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact on dealing with emergencies of the regionalisation of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The inspectorate has no general responsibility for dealing with emergencies. However, one of the objectives of the proposed reorganisation is to increase the effectiveness of the inspectorate across the whole range of its activities, which includes for example the control of emissions from scheduled processes and discharges from premises subject to the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's responsibility for dealing with the consequences in the United Kingdom of overseas nuclear accidents remains as set out in the Department of the Environment publication "The National Response Plan and Radioactive Incident Monitoring Network (RIMNET)—a Statement of Proposals", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what impact his proposed structural changes to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will have on the county of Cleveland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what impact the regionalisation of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will have on the county of Cleveland; by what extent field work will be reduced as a result of increased travelling; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Cleveland will be the responsibility of the Northern region of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, based in Leeds. The detailed working arrangements that are being drawn up for each region are being designed to facilitate the integration of pollution control, and thus increase the effectiveness of the inspectorate.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proposals he has to place Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on a regional basis; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what structural changes he proposes to make to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Proposals are being developed for the reorganisation of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in order to integrate its responsibilities for air pollution control, radioactive substances, water pollution and other wastes on a regional basis.

Three regions are being established to cover the North, South West and South East. This approach was adopted to ensure sufficiently large management units to secure an adequate mix of skills.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future policy of the Government with regard to toxic waste incinerators.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Incineration will continue to play an important role in United Kingdom waste disposal arrangements. It is the only safe disposal route for some toxic wastes and it can reduce the volume and toxicity of many other wastes thus helping to conserve landfill capacity.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his best estimate of the species of mammals and birds most at threat from the dumping of toxic waste in the North sea.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Present levels of toxic waste entering the North sea do not represent a general threat to sea birds or marine mammals resident in United Kingdom waters. Moreover, as a result of important measures agreed at the second North sea conference in 1987 levels of toxic substances discharged to the North sea will fall substantially.

Persistent organic contaminants, including PCBs and pesticides, can accumulate in the blubber of marine animals which are at the top of the food chain. They have been implicated in damage to local populations of marine mammals in parts of the Wadden sea off the German and Dutch coasts. It has been shown that the heavy load of contaminants in this area comes largely from the Rivers Rhine, Weser and Elbe.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his priority to seek to ensure that each county authority has a toxic waste disposal facility capable of meeting the requirements of indigenous industries in each county.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. Waste disposal authorities have a responsibility to ensure that there are adequate safe disposal facilities for all waste arising in their areas, but they are not precluded from making agreements with other authorities. They are required to submit plans to my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment showing that satisfactory arrangements are in place or in prospect.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to tighten up and enforce existing regulations governing the disposal of toxic and other dangerous waste substances so as to safeguard the public from the effects of unsupervised disposals of these substances.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Stringent controls over the disposal of waste already exist. Waste disposal authorities (WDAs) are responsible for supervising disposal and safeguarding public health and the environment. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution monitor the performance of WDAs and aim by reports and advice to secure improvements. Legislation to strengthen and enhance existing controls is to be introduced at the earliest opportunity.

Bristol Channel (Pollution)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports he has received and what reporting system is in the use from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, in relation to pollution by sewage of beaches along the coastlines of the Bristol channel.

Mr. Howard: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution does not report on bathing water quality or beach pollution. Water authorities report to the Department of the Environment on the quality of bathing waters under the terms of the EC Bathing Water Directive and local authorities are responsible for dealing with the pollution of beaches.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the water pollution inspectorate last reported on the water quality in the Bristol channel and the degree of sewage deposits on the beaches; when the inspectorate will next make such a report, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave him earlier today.

Radio 1 Green Week

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the "green week" held by Radio 1, beginning 26 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Nature Reserves

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement concerning the proposed sell-off of national nature reserves.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the statement made by my noble Friend the Minister of State for Housing, Environment and the Countryside on 3 May in another place.

Cacti

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why his Department, to avoid the risk of rabies being introduced, requires a prospective importer of a cactus plant to notify the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food of his intention.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The requirement to consult the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food about rabies controls applies only to imports of live animals. I will ensure that this is made clear in the Department's standard letter acknowledging applications for import permits.

Possession Orders

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest available figures on the number of possession orders awarded to building societies and banks against mortgage holders during 1988 and the first two months of 1989.

Mr. Trippier: The number of possession orders awarded in England and Wales during 1988 against holders of private sector mortgages was 43,108. The figures do not distinguish between building societies, banks and other private mortgage lenders. The provisional figures for the first two months of 1989 are 3,819 during January and 3,564 during February. Most possession orders do not result in properties being taken into possession.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the rise in interest rates on the number of mortgaged properties that will be taken into possession or where possession will be granted during 1989.

Mr. Trippier: Evidence available for the United Kingdom in the last decade does not indicate any simple correlation between changes in the number of mortgaged properties taken into possession and changes in interest rates.

Defective Houses

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will waive the age limitation on defective timber framed houses purchased by residents under the right-to-buy legislation from Ashford council in Kent so that they can be designated as defective under the Housing Act 1985.

Mr. Trippier: There are no age limitations on the types of houses which can be designated as inherently defective under the housing defects legislation. Proposals to remove the current age limits under the home improvement grant system are contained in the Local Government and Housing Bill.

Land, Dorset

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report, for each of the last three years, details of all sites in Dorset, on the register of public unused and underutilised land, stating the ownership thereof, and the number of acres of each site.

Mr. Trippier: I am arranging for copies of tables giving this information in the most convenient form available to be placed in the Library of the House. Details of sites removed from the register are based on information provided by 30 June 1989.

Endangered Species

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether products made from the skin of the Nile crocodile require an import licence under CITES.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes.

Emergencies

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether expenditure incurred by a local authority in dealing with a major emergency, for which the Secretary of State provides discretionary financial assistance under the Local Government and Housing Bill, will be immune from grant penalties.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no grant penalties under the new local government finance system.

Environmental Impact Assessment Seminar

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department will be represented at the 10th international seminar on environmental impact assessment to be held in Aberdeen during July.

Mr. Chope: No.

National Park Quarries

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of the construction of de-sulphurisation plants at power stations on the demand for limestone from quarries in national parks.

Mr. Trippier: No assessment has been made of the demand for limestone from quarries in national parks arising specifically out of the the CEGB's flue gas de-sulphurisation programme, although my Department has commissioned a research project into high purity limestone resources and the demand for non aggregate uses. The report will be published at the beginning of next year.

The CEGB has indicated that the complete 12 GW retrofit programme would account for less than 2 million tonnes of limestone per year (less than 2 per cent. of current production). The board also announced in August 1987 that it would not take limestone from quarries in national parks for the three existing power stations selected for retro-fitting with the flue gas de-sulphurisation process. The board went on to state that it hoped to follow a similar policy when obtaining limestone for new stations. That assessment was made in the knowledge of the Government's policy on mineral working in national parks set out in the statement by my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West on 9 April 1987 (HC 393/394). I understand that the board's policy towards limestone supply has not changed since their August 1987 announcement.

Returnable Glass Bottles

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on the implementation of directive 339-185.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

Good progress is being made under the United Kingdom's programme for implementing the Beverage Containers Directive. For glass, we are on course to achieve the target of doubling the number of bottle banks to 5,000 by 1992, and the volume of glass being recovered is increasing rapidly: 275,000 tonnes were recycled in 1988. The amount of metal recovered from cans is also increasing and will be boosted still further by the Aluminium Can Recycling Association's recent launch of a nationwide scheme with 250 collection centres. British Steel is encouraging local authorities to become involved in extracting steel cans from household waste and about 900 million cans are now being recovered annually in this way. For plastic containers, both the British Plastics Federation and the British Soft Drinks Association are supporting recycling schemes and are actively participating in the Sheffield Recycling City experiment involving door-to-door collection and separate plastics bottle banks.

Packaging

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has commissioned into the environmental benefits of bio-degradable packaging and shopping bags.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 July 1989]: None. The plastics industry is continuing to develop bio-degradable plastics. We expect manufacturers and users of packaging to take advantage of such developments in responding to the demands of consumers.

Regent's Park

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the acreage of land leased with St. John's lodge to which the public do not have free access; what was the equivalent acreage in 1979; and whether any changes have been requested by the current lesses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 July 1989]: St. John's lodge with its associated buildings and private gardens occupy approximately 2¼ acres and are owned by the Crown Estate. That position has not changed since 1979. The Government have agreed with the Crown Estate that the present access route from the Inner Circle to the gardens behind the lodge will be closed to the public and a new public access route provided further to the east. This will not affect the area of Regent's park to which the public are admitted.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total land acreage of Regent's park to which the public have free access and what was the equivalent figure in 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 July 1989]: The public have free access to approximately 253 of the 358 acres of Regent's park.

The figures have not changed since 1979.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the total income from Regent's park in the way of leases, concessions, franchises and charges, respectively in 1978-79 and each successive year;

(2) what was the total spending by his Department on Regent's park in 1978-79 and each succeeding year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 July 1989]: Detailed income and expenditure figures for individual Royal parks are available only from 1987-88. The figures for Regent's park are as follows:

	1987-88 £	1988-89 (provisional) £
Total Expenditure	1,884,902	2,027,222
Total Income	137,485	144,631

These figures exclude some items of income and expenditure, such as the costs of policing the Royal parks, which are recorded centrally.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when London zoo first asked to be allowed to take over a further 10 acres of Regent's park;

(2) whether any users of Regent's park have been consulted about the use of an extra 10 acres of the park by London zoo;

(3) what considerations his Department will use in assessing which 10 acres of Regent's park can be taken over by London zoo.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 July 1989]: The suggestion that the Zoological Society of London should take over an extra ten acres of land under the terms of the Crown Estate Act 1961, arose in considering the consultant's report on the scope for improving the zoo's financial performance and led to my right hon. Friend's announcement on 11 May 1988. In agreeing the location of the ten acres we shall be concerned to minimise the impact on the park and to protect the historic landscape as far as possible. The Zoological Society of London has consulted local residents and amenity groups on the principle of the 10 acres. As soon as further plans have been developed, the Society will ensure that the views of local individuals and groups are sought again.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any request has been received by his Department to take over part of Regent's park besides the request by London zoo.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 July 1989]: The Crown Estate has asked to take over a piece of parkland of approximately 50 square metres on the edge of the Outer Circle near Hanover Gate Lodge. This will allow access to six villas being built by the Crown Estate on land that it owns. In exchange, the Crown Estate is making available for park use a small section of garden of similar size next to Chalbert Gate footbridge. This will improve the presentation of that area. There will be no loss of public amenity.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any request has been received to block any path, entrance or route within the outer circle of Regent's park.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer, 6 July 1989]: No such request has been received. London zoo's proposals to use an additional ten acres of Regent's park currently include an extension of the southern boundary of the zoo. This would require the rerouting of the existing footpath outside that boundary along the new perimeter line.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has any plans to charge for access to any part of Regent's park to which the public have free access at present.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 July 1989]: No.

Severe Mental Impairment

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the joint Department of Health/Department of the Environment working party to consider development in the assessment of severe mental impairment.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 7 July 1989]: There is, and will continue to be, close liaison between my Department and the Department of Health on this matter.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Electricity Privatisation

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost to date of advertising by his Department on the privatisation of the electricity supply industry; and what is the estimated total cost.

Mr. Viggers: Nothing to date—as expenditure on advertising is not likely to be incurred until well into the privatisation process, no estimate of the cost has yet been made.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated cost of the privatisation of the electricity supply industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: It is not possible to say at this stage since advisers have not yet been appointed.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the predicted number of consultants who will be required to assist in the development of proposals for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Viggers: It is expected that consultants will be required to advise on financial, legal, technical and accounting matters.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the salary for the position of the financial adviser to assist in the development of proposals for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Viggers: The fees will be negotiated at the time of appointment.

Students

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current number of (a) full-time and (b) part-time students in Northern Ireland; and what are the projections for these figures for the next 10 years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 6 July 1989]: Figures for enrolment on higher education undergraduate and postgraduate, and vocational further education courses in 1988-89 are as follows:

Full-time	Part-time
32,734	48,239

In addition, there are an estimated 80,000 part-time enrolments on continuing education and non-vocational further education courses.

Projections for these figures for the next 10 years are not available.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of people who applied for educational maintenance allowances in each of the last seven years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 6 July 1989]: The figures for 1982-83 are not readily available, but the applications for educational maintenance allowances in Northern Ireland for the succeeding six years are as follows:

	Number
1983-84	5,973
1984-85	5,219
1985-86	4,420
1986-87	3,599
1987-88	3,206
1988-89	2,446

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from the Fair Employment Agency regarding the White Paper, "Top-up Loans for Students"; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 6 July 1989]: The agency wrote to me on 13 March expressing concern that the partial substitution of loans for grants could discourage poorer people from entering university, and could therefore have the effect of diminishing Catholic participation in higher education. In noting the agency's view, I remain convinced that its fears are misplaced. In any event, as already indicated in the White Paper, the Government intends to monitor the introduction of the new funding arrangements, so as to measure their effects on such matters as participation by social class or gender.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what would be the cost at 1988-89 prices of introducing educational maintenance allowances for 16 and 17-year-olds in full-time education in schools and colleges at (a) the same rates as income support for young people and (b) the same rate as training allowances paid to 16 and 17-year-olds on YTP schemes.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 6 July 1989]: The estimated costs would be (a) £22 million and (b) £31 million.

Veterinary Services

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he estimates that officials from the Department of Agriculture (Northern Ireland) will complete their considerations regarding the future needs on veterinary manpower and training in the light of the Riley report of 1989.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 6 July 1989]: The Government announced on 7 June 1989 a review of veterinary manpower needs in both the public and private sectors. The review will be conducted by a committee under the chairmanship of Dr. E. S. Page. The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland will be contributing as required to the committee's work, which it is hoped will be completed by the end of the year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Short Money

67. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Lord President of the Council what representations he has received about the amount paid in assistance to Opposition parties.

Mr. Wakeham: Since 21 June 1988, when the House approved the existing arrangements for payment of financial assistance to Opposition parties, I have corresponded with a right hon. Member and an hon. Member from the party opposite on two separate matters and answered two parliamentary questions.

69. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Lord President of the Council by what percentage assistance to Opposition parties increased in the last year for which figures are available; and to what amount.

Mr. Wakeham: In accordance with the Resolution of the House of 21 June 1988, the amount of Short money paid to Opposition parties in 1988 was £1,203,322·97p, which includes arrears of £319,000 due in 1987. The amount paid in 1987, in accordance with the previous Resolution, was £597,741·27p. This represents a percentage increase of 101·3 per cent. between the calendar years 1987 and 1988. However, because of the change in basis of calculation of Short money, this comparison is of limited value.

71. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Lord President of the Council by how much assistance to Opposition parties increased in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer earlier today to the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington). The amount paid increased by £605,581·70.

Questions

70. Mr. Winnick To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he proposes to make any changes in the question rota for the next Session of Parliament.

Mr. Wakeham: I have no such plans at present.

European Legislation

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Lord President of the Council what progress he has made in his review of the consideration of European legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I am still considering the issues involved, taking account of the views of the Procedure and European Legislation Committees.

TRANSPORT

Disabled People (Mobility)

10. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures his Department has taken to increase mobility for people with disabilities.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The many measures that we have taken and our plans for the future are set out in "Transport and Disability, a Statement of Aims and Priorities" recently published by the Department. Copies have been placed in the Library. Drawing on the expert advice of the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee, Britain is a world leader in improving mobility for disabled people.

British Rail (Privatisation)

13. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has now formulated a timetable for the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: No decision has been taken on privatisation. My right hon. Friend has made it clear that privatisation could not take place during the current Parliament, although the necessary studies are already in hand.

21. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about proposals to privatise British Rail.

51. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about proposals to privatise British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: A small number from interested organisations and from individuals.

44. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had concerning the possible privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: The work which is currently being undertaken on the possible privatisation of British Rail has been discussed fully with British Rail. In addition a small number of representations has so far been received from interested organisations. My right hon. Friend expects to consult widely in due course if a decision is made to privatise.

Rail Services

16. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had from the Better Rail Campaign for improved services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, met representatives of NUR, ASLEF and TSSA after the NERA report was published last year. Since then we have received about 700 representations from hon. Members and members of the public.

Road Traffic

17. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to take steps to slow the increase of motor traffic on roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. It would be neither proper nor popular to try to stifle economic growth or to deny more ordinary people the freedom that car use brings.

We encourage the movement of freight by rail where there are clear environmental reasons. Investment in public transport is rising to record levels.

We do much to promote measures to reduce vehicle speeds and improve the environment in residential areas.

Better driving, management and maintenance could save some 20 per cent. of fuel and significantly reduce pollution.

With a 20 per cent. reduction in fuel usage, pollution levels would be no more than they were 10 years ago.

Automatic Ticket Barriers

18. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many personal and property injuries have been reported from automatic ticket barriers in the past six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No major injuries were sustained by passengers using automatic ticket barriers, though 31 minor personal injuries were reported. I understand that there were 99 cases of damage to property.

29. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on automatic ticket barriers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: In addition to five early-day motions, just over 100 representations have been received from Members of Parliament and members of the public since 1 January 1989.

32. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any proposals to ensure the travelling public have a choice between using an automatic ticket barrier or presenting their ticket to a member of staff.

Mr. Portillo: It is a matter for the operator concerned. London Underground stations with automatic gates have a separate manually-operated gate, under the control of uniformed staff, for use by passengers with physical disabilities or who are laden with bulky shopping or with pushchairs or small children.

Air Fares

19. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the EEC counterparts to discuss European air fares; and if he will make a statement on competition between European airlines.

Mr. Channon: I understand that the French Presidency plans to hold a meeting of EC Transport Ministers on aviation issues in the autumn.

We shall be pressing for further liberalisation, which by increasing competition will lead to lower fares.

National Bus Company

20. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what clawback provisions in relation to which assets at which locations were set out in contracts for the sale of National Bus Company subsidiaries to successful bidders.

Mr. Portillo: Mortgage charges were placed on 18 properties as part of the sale of 14 National Bus Company subsidiaries, so that the National Bus Company receives a share in any development profit if these properties are sold within 10 years.

Air Traffic

22. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the Civil Aviation Authority's policy on air traffic congestion.

Mr. Channon: I have received numerous representations on a variety of air traffic control policy issues.

East London Rail Study

23. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the report on the east London rail study to be published.

Mr. Portillo: I expect to announce the outcome of the ELRS shortly.

45. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the report on the east London rail study to be published.

Mr. Portillo: Shortly.

Luton Airport

24. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what rate of aircraft movements per hour from Luton international airport has been assumed in the study of airspace management in the London area currently being conducted by the Civil Aviation Authority.

Mr. Channon: In paragraph 3.47 of its consultation document "Civil Aviation Policy 548" the Civil Aviation Authority said that it had assumed a peak rate of about 16 aircraft movements per hour for Luton airport.

British Rail (Electrification)

25. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British Rail electrification projects the Government have approved since 1979.

Mr. Channon: Since 1979 the Government have approved nine electrification schemes, worth over £600 million in current prices. In addition the Government have approved a package of Channel tunnel-related investment including some £35 million of electrification work. British Rail has itself approved a further 14 smaller schemes.

Pedestrians (Casualties)

26. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he proposes to tackle pedestrian road casualties.

Mr. Channon: In 1988 there were at least 1,750 pedestrian deaths on our roads, and 57,000 other injuries. Tackling these unnecessary accidents is one of my top priorities.

I announced a series of proposals in the document "Pedestrian Safety: New Proposals for Making Walking Safer" on 19 April. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of Transport what representation he has had from British Rail regarding private sector involvement in the construction of the Channel tunnel rail links; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The British Railways Board will report to me on its progress in securing private sector involvement in the rail link schemes.

31. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss direct passenger services from the north, north-west, midlands, south-west and Scotland to European destinations using the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have discussed these matters with British Rail which is still working on the plan which it is producing under section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act.

35. Mr Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has made any progress with his plans to encourage participation by the private sector in British Rail's high-speed rail link; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail is currently discussing its proposals for the high speed rail link with a number of private sector interests.

48. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss the rail link from the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman regularly to discuss a wide range of issues, including from time to time, the Channel tunnel rail link. Our next meeting is tomorrow.

49. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much Government investment is taking place this year in Nottinghamshire (a) on roads and (b) on rail.

Mr. Portillo: The Department's planned investment on roads in Nottinghamshire in the year 1989-90 is £14·806 million. This includes new construction, preparation of new schemes, maintenance on trunk roads and motorways and TSG support for county council schemes.

The Government do not invest directly in railways. British Rail cannot provide information on its investment on a county basis.

East London Assessment Study

28. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultation he proposes with people affected by the east London assessment study plans after publication of the consultants' report.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on 24 April at column 441.

M1 (Sheffield)

30. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much of the transport supplementary grant has been allocated in 1989-90 for developing the Sheffield M1 link via Mossborough.

Mr. Bottomley: Transport supplementary grant is paid at a flat rate of 50 per cent. on an accepted programme of expenditure for each local highway authority. Expenditure of £1·025 million on the Sheffield—M1 link via Mossborough is part of Sheffield city council's 1989-90 accepted programme.

Road Deaths

33. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people were killed on Britain's roads in 1978 and 1988.

Mr. Bottomley: In 1978, there were 6,831 deaths in road accidents in Great Britain. Provisional figures for 1988 show that 5,041 people died on the roads, a fall of just over one quarter.

In the same period traffic has increased by 40 per cent. and the number of vehicles licensed has increased by 30 per cent.

Routemasters

34. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the implications for central Government financial support of London Regional Transport of the proposed sale of 50 Routemasters to Japan.

Mr. Portillo: Income from the sale of surplus assets by London Regional Transport offsets its need for Government grant.

British Rail

36. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what subjects he expects to discuss with him.

Mr. Portillo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) and the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) earlier today.

Western Environmental Improvement Route

37. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many letters he has received regarding the possible development of the western environmental improvement route; and what was the number in favour and the number against this proposed route.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The large response to the public consultation held earlier this year is being analysed.

A decision on the future of the western environmental improvement route will not be taken until we reach conclusions on the west London assessment study. We intend to announce the outcome of the public consultation.

Public Transport

38. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to prepare for a marked expansion of public transport within conurbations.

Mr. Portillo: The central and east London rail studies are considering proposals for three new rail lines in London as well as a programme to upgrade the existing network. The four London assessment studies are looking at whether public transport improvements might help to solve the problems which those studies are addressing.

The Department is considering a number of light rail projects in urban areas outside London for which grant support is being sought under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968.

London Regional Transport

39. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chair of London Regional Transport; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I met Mr. Wilfred Newton on 3 July. A variety of matters were discussed.

Barnstaple Roads

40. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on the early construction of the Barnstaple downstream bridge and the completion of the bypass around Barnstaple.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend will open the trunk road bypass of Barnstaple on 18 July. Devon county council is entirely responsible for the timing and priority accorded to its schemes for the Barnstaple downstream bridge and stage IV of the urban relief road.

Submarines and Fishing Boats

41. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about incidents involving submarines and fishing boats; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has received one representation. It was dealt with by way of ministerial correspondence.

Lane Rentals

42. Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his assessment of how much lane rental contracts have saved motorists.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: From their introduction in 1984 until March 1988, lane rental contracts on motorways and trunk roads are estimated to have saved about 2,000 days of delay worth £35 million to road users. Results for 1988-89 are not yet available.

Rail Freight (Wales)

43. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has had any recent discussions with the chairman of British Rail about the provision of European freight facilities in south-east Wales.

Mr. Portillo: I have discussed with British Rail its plans for Channel tunnel services.

British Rail is still working on the plan which it is producing under section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act.

Motorway Driving

46. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has conducted research to establish whether there is a form of technology that could be used on motorways as a means of establishing whether a particular driver is driving too close to the vehicle in front.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Existing technology can be used on motorways to help establish whether a particular driver is driving too close to the vehicle in front. It is for the police to decide when it may be appropriate to set up such equipment, and whether it is likely to be effective in persuading drivers to comply with the safe following distances recommended in the highway code.

Some police forces are also experimenting with the use of video camera to bring home to drivers the dangers of following too close.

Drivers should use their eyes, minds and experience.

Roads (Oxfordshire)

47. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent by his Department on roads in Oxfordshire over the last five years; and how much he anticipates being spent over the next five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Figures are not readily available in the form requested. In the three years from April 1986 to March 1989 the Department spent £37·8 million in connection with motorway and trunk road new construction and maintenance in Oxfordshire, excluding land costs.

We are planning to spend a further £47·5 million this financial year, mainly on A43 Partree Hill-Wendlebury, A41 Bicester bypass stage 1, and the M40 Waterstock-Wendlebury scheme for which the contract was let on 28 June.

In addition, for the five-year period from April 1985 to March 1990, £3·148 million has been made available to the county council under transport supplementary grant for local road schemes.

Further expenditure will depend upon progress with the scheme and availability of funds.

Transport Investment (Nottinghamshire)

49. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much Government investment is taking place this year in Nottinghamshire (a) on roads ad (b) on rail.

Mr. Portillo: The Department's planned investment on roads in Nottinghamshire in the year 1989-90 is £14·806 million. This includes new construction, preparation of new schemes, maintenance on trunk roads and motorways and TSG support for county council schemes.

The Government do not invest directly in railways. British Rail cannot provide information on its investment on a county basis.

Trees

50. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trees were planted by his Department in England in 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: One million four hundred thousand.

Drink-Driving

52. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider introducing a programme to change the attitudes of drunk drivers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We announced proposals to carry out a major experiment in the use of rehabilitation courses designed to influence the attitudes of drunk drivers in the White Paper "The Road User and the Law" published on 7 February this year. In England and Wales, enabling powers will be required for the courts to order rehabilitation for those convicted of drink-drive offences. In Scotland, we are looking into the possibility of setting up a trial scheme employing the existing powers of the courts.

Motorway Safety

53. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for making motorways safer.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In April last year, the Secretary of State announced a package of measures designed to improve the overall level of safety on motorways. Many of these measures were implemented rapidly. Others, involving regulatory procedures or new research are for the longer term.

We are anxious to improve the standard of driving on motorways. We have produced 1¼ million leaflets offering advice on the key safety rules for motorway driving. We are encouraging newly qualified drivers to take additional tuition on motorway driving after passing the L test and before actually taking to the motorway.

The motorway safety package included measures to improve safety at roadworks. From 1 August last year, speed limits at major motorway roadworks and contraflows were made mandatory and traffic at these sites is being monitored by video equipment. At contraflows, lorries are now normally restricted to the near side lane.

New regulations are currently being prepared which will allow vehicles at the end of a slow moving queue to switch on their hazard warning lights.

The "Lane Closed" gantry signal (flashing red lights) is being replaced so as to display a red cross which will be more readily understood. Similarly, the symbol showing the end of restrictions will be replaced by the word "End". These changes will be implemented progressively, over several years.

A trial of 70 mph speed limit repeater signs on the M1 has been taking place since last September to establish their effect on vehicle speed.

We shall shortly be experimenting with "Chevron markings" to see if they help drivers to keep a safe distance from the vehicle in front.

The Department is also co-operating with some private sector companies to produce road safety publicity material. Amongst recent initiatives is a video recently produced by the Association of British Insurers called "Happens All The Time". This brings home the main lessons on safer motorway driving to 17 to 24-year-olds.

Sprinter Trains

54. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed the supply of Sprinter class trains with the chairman of British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: In April of this year, when I gave approval for a further tranche of class 158 express Sprinter trains.

"New Roads by New Means"

55. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in response to his consultation document "New Roads by New Means".

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received a number of representations to date, mostly positive. The consultation period does not expire until 14 July.

British Rail (Inadequate Services)

56. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to make British Rail financially accountable to its customers for failed or inadequate services.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail's conditions of carriage already allow for refunds to be considered in cases where timetabled connections cannot be made or where services have been altered, withdrawn or suspended for any reason. I have no present plans for legislation.

Air Traffic Control

57. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the Chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss air traffic control delays.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State frequently meets the chairman of the authority to discuss a whole range of topics of mutual interest.

Horne Report

58. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now announce a timetable for introducing legislation to implement the recommendations of the Horne review in connection with public utility undertakings engaging in works on the highway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Detailed proposals for legislation have been prepared following extensive consultation on the Horne report. Comments from interested parties on these proposals are currently being considered.

Legislation will be introduced as soon as there is a suitable opportunity.

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 12 June, Official Report, column 334, to the hon.Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Mr. Lofthouse) about the Horne report, what he regards as a suitable opportunity.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The earliest available opportunity.

Pedestrians (Injury Compensation)

59. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will introduce legislation to provide compensation for pedestrians injured by cyclists.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A pedestrian injured by a negligent cyclist can already seek compensation through the courts. Regular cyclists should try to ensure that their normal household insurance policies are extended to cover injury to third parties caused when cycling. This is in fact often the case under such policies anyway.

A1/M1 Link

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to approve tenders for the A1/M1 link Thrapstow-Brampton.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Tenders for the western part of the Thrapston to Brampton section of the M1 to A1 link road (contract 7) are due for return on 4 August. A contract will be awarded when the checking procedures have been carried out.

A41 (Bypass)

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the difference in the approved route as between the first and second inquiry covering the Northchurch to Kings Langley A41 bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The centre line of the Kings Langley and Berkhamsted bypasses was established by orders made under the Highway Act following the first inquiry. Draft amendment orders considered at the second inquiry would, if made, modify that line to the minor extent necessary to reflect the dual carriageway standard and grade separation of the junctions now proposed.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the second inquiry into the A41 bypass covering Northchurch to Kings Langley (a) opened and (b) closed; when the inspector was expected to report; and when it is anticipated he will report.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The second inquiry into draft line, side roads and compulsory purchase orders for the Kings Langley and Berkhamsted bypasses opened on 27 April 1988 and closed on 6 September 1988. The inspector's report was received in March.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the first inquiry into the A41 bypass covering Northchurch to Kings Langley (a) opened and (b) closed; and when the inspector reported.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The first inquiry, into the draft line orders for the Kings Langley and Berkhamsted bypasses, opened on 3 February 1983 and closed on 12 May 1983. The inspectors's report is dated 26 September 1983.

M66

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to change the level of the parapet on the Brinnington road and Lingard lane road bridges and the Lapwing lane footbridge over the M66.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The parapets meet the Department's standards applied throughout the country.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill, of 27 June, Official Report, column 376, if he will state the amount of transport supplementary grant allocated to Liverpool city council for the Park road relief road in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Expenditure on this scheme accepted for transport supplementary grant was £300,000 in 1988-89 and £2,060,000 in 1989-90. The grant payable on those figures would be £150,000 and £1,030,000 respectively.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his Department's procedures to ensure that funds allocated to a council as transport supplementary grant are spent on the project for which they were intended.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Transport supplementary grant is not a specific grant paid in support of individual projects. It is paid towards the cost of accepted programmes of expenditure on named major schemes and on blocks of minor works expenditure on roads of more than local importance.

If an authority's expenditure on its approved programme in any year is significantly less than the amount accepted for TSG, an adjustment may be made to the grant paid in a subsequent year to ensure that grant is not paid twice on the same piece of planned expenditure.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the inspector's report into toll charges on the Severn bridge; and when he expects to announce his decision on the inspector's recommendations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As soon as possible.

Thames Riverbus Service

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the agreement between his Department and the Thames Riverbus service concerning the payment to the service of a £500,000 grant.

Mr. Portillo: I have arranged for a copy of the agreement to be deposited in the Library of the House.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the agreement between his Department and the Thames Riverbus service concerning the payment of a £500,000 grant specifies that the service must be maintained to only some of the piers served by the Riverbus at the time the agreement was made.

Mr. Portillo: The provision concerning a service to certain piers was designed to ensure that a substantial core service would be provided so that Riverbus would contribute to the relief of road congestion and encourage the development of riverside areas in need of regeneration. The piers specified for this purpose in the agreement, Charing Cross, Festival, Swan Lane, London Bridge/City and West India, were those serving the core route.

Manchester Airport Rail Link

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the Government's current position about the Manchester airport rail link; what recent contact he has had with British Rail in relation to the project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) earlier today.

Trawlers (Accidents)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents involving fatality have occurred to fishing trawlers which remain unexplained; and what is the number of deaths recorded.

Mr. Portillo: During the last 12 months, Department of Transport marine surveyors have been appointed to investigate all accidents to United Kingdom fishing vessels involving fatalities. In the cases where the investigation is complete, the probable causes have been established.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions accidents involving Royal Navy or United States submarines and fishing trawlers have resulted in fatality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: There have been no known fatal accidents involving United Kingdom registered fishing vessels and United Kingdom or United States submarines.

Underground Fares

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to meet the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss Underground fares.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of London Regional Transport (LRT) regularly to discuss a range of issues.

FV Fay (Sinking)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the sinking of the FV Fay at 5 am on Thursday 6 July; if there were any British or North Atlantic Treaty Organisation submarines in the area at the time; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Fay was returning home from the Isle of Man after acting as escort boat for a charity event. Some two hours after sailing it was found that the vessel was flooding. A Mayday signal was sent before the boat had to be abandoned. A rescue operation was mounted involving aircraft, helicopters and lifeboats and all hands were picked up.

An investigation is being carried out. At this stage the cause of the sinking is not clear; it does not, however, appear that any other vessel was involved and, in particular, it has been established that no British or other NATO submarines were in the vicinity. The incident took place in waters that are too shallow for dived submarine operations.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Initiation Rites)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has of initiation rites in police forces; and what procedures there are for ensuring that young recruits are able to complain to an independent person.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have no evidence that this kind of conduct is widespread but, where it occurred, it would be likely to constitute a disciplinary offence. A police officer who was the victim of such an offence would be expected to bring the matter to the attention of a supervising officer or his Police Federation representative. In addition, every police officer has the right to ask for an interview with HM inspector of constabulary, during the annual inspection of the force, to discuss any grievance over his treatment.

Wandsworth Prison (Staffing)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present position of staffing levels at Wandsworth prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are 445 officers, including principal and senior officers, at Wandsworth compared with 437 at 1 April 1989. The total full and part-time staff at the prison now stands at 584.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department expects to reply to the current year's report by the board of visitors of Wandsworth prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I shall be writing shortly to the chairman to thank him for the 1988 report of the board of visitors. The recommendations of the board are receiving detailed consideration.

West Midlands (Chief Constable)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chief constable of the West Midlands; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend last met the chief constable on 16 September 1988 in the course of a visit to the West Midlands police force. A range of topics was discussed as is usual in such occasions.

Passport Applications

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passport applications by United Kingdom citizens now remain uncleared.

Mr. Renton: The latest available figures are for the week ended 2 July, when about 500,000 applications remained outstanding, a reduction of over 36,000 from the previous week. Following the settlement of the recent industrial dispute at the passport offices, efforts are being made to reduce the backlog of applications as quickly as possible, and a number of special measures are being taken to ease the difficulties facing the travelling public. These were described in the reply given by my right hon. Friend to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 4 July, at columns 99-100.

Nazi War Crimes

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the report he has now received regarding allegations of Nazi war crimes committed by those now resident in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 27 June 1989 at column 399.

Section 11 Money

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much section 11 money has been made available to (a) local education authorities and (b) other bodies; and for what purposes in the past year, five, 10 and 15 years ago, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The amount of grant paid under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for 1987-88, the most recent year for which actual expenditure figures are available, and for five, 10 and 15 years previously was as follows:

Year	Total grant £	Education £	Other £
1972-73	7,787,873	5,904,346	1,883,527
1977-78	24,745,627	20,777,102	3,973,525
1982-83	65,817,318	51,342,459	14,474,859
1987-88	72,851,394	55,052,417	17,798,977

The majority of section 11 funded posts involve educational expenditure and are mainly concerned with the teaching of English as a second language. Grant is also paid for posts concerned with bilingual classroom assistance, adult education, youth work, education welfare and home-school liaison.

Other principal users for section 11 apart from education span the range of local authority responsibilities including social services, business development, housing and environmental health, translation and interpretation services. The Government are presently considering the results of the scrutiny report into section 11 funding and will announce its conclusions in due course.

Summer Time

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the times of sunrise and sunset on the first day of each month in 1992 in (a) Dumfries, (b) Edinburgh, (c) Dundee, (d) Aberdeen, (e) Inverness, (f) Thurso and (g) Lerwick, respectively, under (i) the status quo and (ii) single-double summer time as described in his Department's Green Paper on summer time.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not immediately available. I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Drinking (Public Places)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the safer cities initiative and the ban on drinking in public places.

Mr. John Patten: The experimental byelaw in Stockton-on-Tees, which makes it an offence to drink alcohol in designated public places, came into force on 5 April. The byelaw is in force in five other local authority areas—Bath, Coventry, Restormel (Cornwall), Rushmoor (Hampshire) and Scarborough—and will be in force in Chester shortly. The experiment is due to run for two years and will be closely monitored by participating local authorities, the police and the Home Office. Preliminary results are encouraging. The byelaw has been shown to be popular in most places and public drinking on the streets has largely stopped: the relatively few number of police requests to desist have almost always been heeded. There have been just six prosecutions, three in Bath and three in Coventry. A Home Office crime prevention unit paper containing the results of a survey, of Coventry city centre users, on the byelaw has recently been published. The survey shows that nine out of 10 users of the city centre who were questioned welcomed the introduction of the ban.

The safer cities programme is making good progress. Three projects are fully operational, at Bradford, Nottingham and Wolverhampton. They have already started crime prevention work there, most of it improving physical security but some directed to lessening the fear of crime and to preventing offending by young people. Projects at Lewisham and Birmingham begin this month. Five further projects are due to begin operating by the end of September, and six more by the start of the new year.

Community Radio

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the names of the people and of the stations that have been granted a community radio licence.

Mr. Renton: The incremental local radio scheme is administered by the IBA. To date they have offered franchises to the following:

Name of applicant	Proposed station name	Coverage area
Clement Mclarty	FTP	Bristol
Ravinder Jain	West London Radio	Hounslow/Ealing/ Southall
Mike Shaft	Sunset Radio	Manchester
Daniel Macleod	Stirling Community Radio	Stirling
Ashok Joshi	Radio Harmony	Coventry
Dr. Zannetos Tofallis	London Greek Radio in association with WNK Radio	Haringey

John Simpson	Belfast Community Radio	Belfast
Pervez Akhtar	Bradford City Radio	Bradford
Lester Cowling	KNBC Radio	Kettering
Charles Turner	KFM Radio	Stockport
Des Shepherd	North East Essex Community Radio	Tendring

Broadcasting

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing (a) how many cable franchises have been granted, (b) which communities they serve, (c) how many cable franchises are switched on, (d) which communities they serve, (e) the estimated subscribers in each case and (f) whether interactive services are provided.

Mr. Renton: I understand from the cable authority that a total of 41 cable franchises have been granted, of which 16 have been licensed by the cable authority, and 11 of which are operational. A further 30 franchises have been advertised by the authority. The granting of a cable franchise has no standing in law. It is simply an indication that the cable authority intends to award a licence under the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984 to the franchise holder provided it meets certain conditions.

West Midlands Police

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the west midlands as to during which years the following officers served in the west midlands serious crimes squad: Detective Chief Inspector John Moore (retired), Detective Superintendent James Kelly, Detective Superintendent Alan Watson, Detective Sergeant Michael Hornby, Detective Constable Rex Langford, Detective Chief Inspector Roger Ball (retired), former Detective Sergeant Michael French, former Detective Constable John Brand, former Detective Sergeant Roy Bunn, former Detective Sergeant Ray Bennett, former Detective Constable Alan Buxton (retired), former Detective Sergeant David Millichamp, former Detective Constable Thomas Sutcliffe, former Detective Constable Terence Woodwiss and former Detective Sergeant Colin Morris.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that the information is as follows:

Name	Dates of service with the Serious Crimes Squad
Detective Chief Inspector (later Detective Superintendent) Moore	1 April 1974 to 9 February 1975 25 December 1979 to 21 November 1982
Detective Superintendent Kelly	13 May 1974 to 9 January 1977
Detective Superintendent Watson	14 October 1974 to 9 January 1977
Detective Sergeant Hornby	14 August 1973 to date
Sergeant Langford	no service with the Squad
Detective Chief Inspector Ball	1 February 1977 to 22 January 1978
Detective Constable French	10 June 1974 to 5 February 1978
Detective Constable Brand	13 May 1974 to 7 May 1984
Detective Sergeant (now Chief Inspector) Bunn	no service with the Squad
Detective Sergeant (now DCI Bennett)	1968 - 1976 1988 to date
Detective Constable Buxton	no service with the Squad
Detective Sergeant (now Superintendent) Millichamp	8 September 1970 to 31 October 1971
Detective Constable Sutcliffe	6 January 1969 to 28 October 1979
Detective Constable Woodwiss	no service with the Squad
Detective Sergeant (now DCI) Morris	no service with the Squad

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the west midlands as to whether Detective Sergeant Brian Morton was in Queen's road police station when the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings were being interviewed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that general records that would show the whereabouts of officers are destroyed after seven years. The information requested is therefore not available.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his answer of 5 July, if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the west midlands as to which officer involved in the Ronnie Boldon case was also involved in the questioning of those later convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 5 July, if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the west midlands police force as to which two officers involved in the Derek Gordon case were also involved in the questioning of those convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No, in the absence of any evidence to suggest that there was anything untoward in their involvement in the matters referred to.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the west midlands as to how many complaints have been received against Detective Sergeant Michael Hornby since 1974; what action was taken in 1980 on the one occasion he was disciplined; and what was the nature of the complaint against him.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that the recorded information relating to the earlier years covered by the hon. Member's question is not fully comprehensive and it is not therefore possible to establish the exact number of complaints made against Detective Sergeant Hornby. As discipline records are destroyed after seven years, the other information requested is not available.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands police for a report as to what reason Police Cadet Adrian Dart gave for his resignation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that Mr. Dart was a probationary constable who resigned from the force in March 1984 and that he is now pursuing a claim for wrongful dismissal. In these circumstances, it would not be right to comment on the circumstances of his resignation.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands police on the nature of the offences for which Detective Superintendent Kelly was reprimanded.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It would not be right to give details of the offences. I understand from the chief constable of the West Midlands police that they have no bearing on the current allegations of malpractice within the serious crime squad, and that Mr. Kelly was not a member of the squad at the time.

Parole Decisions

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners whose parole eligibility date has passed are awaiting decisions by the parole board on recommendations by the local review committee; and what is the current average time lapse between that date and the decision being made.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Statistics are not readily available in the form requested. For further information, I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 4 July 1989 at column 95.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost of keeping prisoners after their parole eligibility date whilst awaiting decisions by the parole board on recommendations by the local review committee.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not possible to distinguish the cost of keeping prisoners eligible for parole from that of other prisoners. The average weekly cost of keeping a prisoner in a penal establishment in 1987-88, the latest period for which information is available, was £275.

National Stud

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to privatise the National Stud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Experiments on Animals

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received the second annual report of the Animal Procedures Committee; and when he intends to lay copies of the report before Parliament.

Mr. Hurd: I have laid before Parliament copies of the report, which is published today by HMSO as HC458.

This report reflects the continuing contribution which the Animal Procedures Committee is making towards the effective operation of the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, the protection of animals used in scientific procedures and the debate over how animal procedures should be regulated.

I welcome the report's conclusion that

"this country has an up-to-date and sound legislative framework for regulating and controlling all scientific procedures involving living animals" and I am grateful to the committee for its work.

THE ARTS

Museum of the Moving Image

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether the museum of the moving image has achieved the targets set out for it at its inception.

Mr. Luce: The Museum of the Moving Image had a target of 435,000 visitors in its first year and this target is expected to be reached by the end of July, two months ahead of schedule. Over 53,000 schoolchildren have visited the museum emphasising its educational appeal.

Libraries

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will state the names of persons and their occupational posts who are to serve on the Library and Information Services Council for England working party on public library objectives, and the terms of reference of this working party.

Mr. Luce: The Library and Information Services Council (England) has appointed the following to serve on its working party on public library objectives:

- Mr. Royston Brown, Management Consultant (Chairman)
- Mr. A. R. Blick, Co-ordinator of Information Services, Beecham Group plc
- Mr. R. Bowden, Deputy Chief Executive, the Library Association
- Mr. W. A. Butler, Assistant to the Chief Inspector of Audit, The Audit Commission
- Mr. P. F. Cox, City Librarian, Westminster City Council

The terms of reference are: to examine the present nature of current public library objectives (including unpublished material), and to develop a model set of objectives from which any library authority might select those appropriate to its own circumstances, and which could provide a starting point for the development of exclusive local objectives. To suggest ways of testing/developing/promoting the model set of objectives.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service Dispersal

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to disperse Civil Service manpower to the South Western region.

Mr. Brooke: As I announced to the House on 9 February 1989, at columns 751-52, individual departments are reviewing the location of their work with a view to finding locations offering easier labour markets and better value for money, and departmental Ministers will be announcing their decisions.

Exchange Rate (Canada)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the rate of exchange between the United Kingdom and Canada at present; and what it was one year ago.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 5 July 1989]: At close of business on 5 July the exchange rate was C$2·0570/£ against C$1·9252/£ a year ago.

LINK Schemes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all LINK schemes so far approved with the expenditure on each and the location of sites at which the research is carried out.

Mr. Forth: To date, 17 LINK programmes have been approved, with total expected expenditure of nearly £245 million. The list gives approved expenditure for each programme.

Project selection under these announced programmes is still at an early stage, but already agreement has been reached with 60 collaborators from industry and the universities; these are also listed.

EEC Telecommunications Initiative

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what is the value of the EEC telecommunications initiative programme; and how much he expects to be spent in Britain;

(2) which regions of the United Kingdom are participating in the EEC telecommunication initiative; and if he will list the projects, with their programme spend value, in each region.

Mr. Atkins: The policy towards telecommunications in Europe adopted by the Council of Ministers is of significant value to the United Kingdom as a major influence on the liberalisation of European telecommunications markets.

If the hon. Member has in mind direct financial receipts, the only EEC telecommunications initiative to provide funding on a regional basis is the Special Telecommunications Action for Regional Development (STAR). Northern Ireland, alone in the United Kingdom, qualifies for support under this programme, and has been allocated 25 mecu—about £16·9 million—of the 780 mecu —about £527 million—total programme funding.

The only other exclusively telecommunications EEC initiative involving the provision of financial assistance is the Research and Development in Advanced Communications Technologies in Europe (RACE) programme of collaborative R and D projects. Total expenditure authorised by the Council of Ministers on the definition and main phases is 571 mecu—about £386 million. Of the 541 mecu allocated so far United Kingdom companies and other bodies may be expected to receive 161 mecu—about £105 million.

Imports

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the following items sold in Britain in 1988 were imported (a) colour television sets, (b) electric toasters, (c) micro wave cookers, (d) goods vehicles, (e) cameras, (f) personal computers, (g) ball point pens, (h) pocket combs, (i) tooth brushes, (j) crockery, (k) cutlery and (l) saucepans.

Mr. Atkins: The available information is shown in the table.

	Percentage
Colour television sets	39
Micro wave cookers	58
Goods vehicles[2]	40
Ceramic table and kitchenware	20

United Kingdom Market = Manufacturers' sales plus Imports less Exports

Task Force Scheme

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many jobs have been created in each task force area; how many were not funded by temporary employment programmes, including the employment training schemes; how many led to full-time and permanent, longer than one year, employment; how many were in effect self-employment; and how many went to black and ethnic minority groups.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 10 July 1989]: The information sought about the breakdown of jobs created by task forces is not available in the form requested, nor could it be practically obtained by the task forces. However, the table gives estimates of total anticipated jobs and training places created, and businesses helped directly by projects in each task force since inception.

	Jobs created	Training places created	Businesses assisted
Bristol	307	1,034	572
Coventry	379	1,784	83
Doncaster	536	2,424	1,372
East Birmingham	127	1,319	77

Hartlepool	301	2,130	590

Rochdale	72	890	810
Spitalfields	232·5	2,140	324
Wolverhampton	408	600	115
TOTAL	6,890·5	29,939	7,137

Separate records on ethnic minority jobs are not kept. However, the evaluation report on the Handsworth task force, prepared by PA Cambridge Economic Consultants —available in the House Library—noted that 69 per cent. of the jobs created by the task force, at the time of writing the report, were taken up by members of ethnic communities (paragraph 7.2.3).

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what criteria have been used to select inner city areas for task force status.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 10 July 1989]: A range of criteria are used including the levels of local long-term unemployment, other indicators of deprivation and the ethnic minority proportion of the population. Task forces must also be located within the 57 urban priority areas.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the total expenditure on inner city task forces in each year since their inception; how much of that expenditure has been provided from private sources; and how much has gone to national organisations and how much to local community organisations.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 10 July 1989]: Over £100 million has been committed to task force areas since their inception. The table shows total committed spend on task force projects by calendar year—the figures for 1986 are included in the 1987 total as they were not separately collected. Besides the financial contribution shown in the table, the private sector also provides other assistance such as secondees, advice, loan of premises/equipment etc.

	1986-7	1988	[1]1989	Total
Total spend committed	35,254	53,347	14,103	102,704

Private sector contribution	4,591	9,215	2,336	16,142
Public sector contribution	17,962	23,925	6,135	48,022

[1] To 31 March 1989.

Committed expenditure is counted for the year in which the project has received approval to go ahead, although not all the money may be spent in the same year. We do not keep separate information on how much money has gone to national or local organisations.

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the total cost of the advertising campaign for the enterprise initiative; and what has been the average cost per take-up.

Mr. Forth: Expenditure on advertising the enterprise initiative since January 1988 has been about £19 million. The enterprise initiative covers a number of schemes and services for firms and there is no single measure of take-up which would justify the calculation of an average cost.

WALES

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites in Wales are authorised to discharge radioactive liquid waste to the public sewer.

Mr. Peter Walker: There are currently 55 authorisations under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 to dispose of liquid radioactive waste. The authorisations prescribe discharge into drainage systems which could include public sewers.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those premises in Wales registered under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 being monitored by a commercial company on behalf of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Peter Walker: The following sites are subject to monitoring by a contractor as part of the national environment monitoring programme conducted by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

1. Trawsfynydd nuclear power station, Gwynedd.
2. Wylfa nuclear power station, Gwynedd.
3. Amersham International plc, South Glamorgan.
4. Cilgwyn quarry waste disposal site, Gwynedd.

None of the above sites is subject to registration under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, although the first three are subject to authorisation under the Act.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of premises in Wales registered under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960; and if he will separately distinguish how many are sited in each parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Peter Walker: There are 640 registrations covering Wales under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. Details are not maintained by parliamentary constituency. A list of registrations by county is provided in the DOE/Welsh Office/Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution publication "List of Registrations in England and Wales issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 for the keeping and use of radioactive materials and mobile apparatus", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Environmental Audit

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of any premises in Wales currently subjected to an environmental audit by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Peter Walker: There are no premises in Wales currently subjected to an environmental audit by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Training Grants Scheme

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will detail all the submissions from each local education authority for funding of national priority areas under the training grants scheme and the amount of funding allocated for each submission.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The total expenditure to be supported under the local education authority training grants scheme is determined each year by my right hon. Friend. Expenditure under the scheme is divided between national priorities, as specified by my right hon. Friend, and local priorities which are determined by the authorities themselves. Eligible expenditure on training in Wales in 1989-90 will total £13·18 million, of which £5·58 million is expenditure on national priorities and £7·6 million on local priorities. Authorities are free to spend more on in-service teacher training than the amounts specified as eligible for specific grant under the scheme. Allocations are in the main calculated pro rata to the authorities' student population. The allocation of expenditure to each authority for 1989-90 is as follows:

Expenditure to be supported under the Training Grant Scheme in 1989-90

Nature Conservation

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals relating to the future organisation of the statutory agencies responsible for nature conservation and the countryside in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has today announced our intention to reorganise the agencies responsible for nature conservation and countryside matters in Great Britain.

Legislation will be brought before the House at the earliest opportunity to give effect to the proposed changes. Responsibilities for nature conservation and countryside matters in Wales are currently undertaken by the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission. These agencies are funded by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. My right hon. Friend and I are agreed that the present functions of those two agencies in Wales should in the future be exercised by a single separate Welsh body appointed by and directly responsible to the Secretary of State for Wales. This new body will incorporate the functional responsibilities of the present offices in Wales of the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission with full executive authority for its work in Wales, compared with the current advisory role of the two committees for Wales. This will give continuity to much of the work now carried out by the existing organisations and will provide valuable expertise for the new body. It also means that decisions affecting Wales will in future be taken in Wales. A single body attuned to the needs of the Principality will be of undoubted benefit to Wales.

The proposals represent a significant change in arrangements and should result in improvements in the efficiency, accountability, and above all the sensitivity of administration for conserving and managing the unique natural assets of Wales. The arrangements should also ensure that full regard is given to the protection of the environment without damage to our natural resources.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

El Salvador

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government support the United States Congress proposal to link aid to El Salvador to respect for human rights.

Mr. Eggar: Respect for human rights is one of several factors that we take into account when determining the level and nature of our bilateral aid to individual countries.

Prime Minister of Pakistan (Visit)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during the forthcoming visit of the Prime Minister of Pakistan, Ministers of Her Majesty's Government intend to ask Pakistan to sign the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and to discuss the status of nuclear programme development in the sub-continent.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister raised non-proliferation matters with Ms. Bhutto during her visit.

Karel and Jindriska Korinek

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Czech Government about the detention of Karel and Jindriska Korinek, in a psychiatric hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have been in touch with the Czechoslovak authorities for some time about the Korineks, most recently on 6 July. We will continue to follow the case.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make inquiries of the Government of Indonesia about reports of killings, arrests and reported disappearances in Bacou, East Timor which began on 5 May.

Mr. Eggar: We are aware of these reports. Her Majesty's embassy has not been able to substantiate them.

SCOTLAND

Nature Reserves

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those nature reserves assisted by grant from the Nature Conservancy Council where it has been made a condition of grant that the shooting of birds or other creatures will continue.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 4 July 1989.

Scottish Office Activities

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made with the brief, "The Scottish Office and its Activities," issued in June 1988; and whether he still intends to appoint consultants in terms of that brief to raise the profile of the Scottish Office.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on Tuesday 7 March 1989, at column 483.

Sheriff Courts

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there are any plans to increase the maximum claim in the small claims procedure in the sheriff court; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The small claims procedure came into operation on 30 November 1988 and I understand that my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has no plans at present to increase the upper financial limit of £750. The operation of the new procedure is being monitored by the central research unit of the Scottish Office and by a research team from the law schools of the universities of Strathclyde and Dundee.

Pearl Fishing

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he has any proposals to issue licences for traditional pearl fishing in Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has considered proposals to place the freshwater mussel, margaritisera margaritisera, on the schedule of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 as a protected species; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am currently considering with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment whether increased protection should be afforded to the freshwater pearl mussel.

Nature Conservation

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the present organisation of the statutory agencies responsible for nature conservation and countryside in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has today announced our intention to reorganise the agencies responsible for nature conservation and countryside matters in Great Britain.

With the growing interest and concern in all aspects of our environment, I am clear that we need a more integrated approach to nature conservation and countryside matters in Scotland. Our scenery, habitats and wildlife —indeed our natural resources as a whole—are priceless assets and they have characteristics which are distinctive to Scotland. We must ensure that we protect and manage them wisely. To achieve this the machinery of Government should be organised effectively and be on a basis that can best take account of Scottish conditions. I consider that the establishment of a single body with responsibility for the natural heritage in Scotland is the right approach. A single agency could take a more comprehensive view of the many issues presently facing us and help to secure our natural heritage, resources and countryside for the benefit of future generations. The experience and expertise of the existing agencies will complement each other in this task, giving an integrated approach to conservation and countryside matters in Scotland.

I propose to create such an agency in two stages. First, as my right hon. Friend has announced, legislation will be brought before the House at the earliest opportunity to establish a separate Nature Conservancy Council in Scotland. The Government will ensure that the new Scottish body is fully equipped to continue to carry out its present duties towards nature conservation. I would then bring forward a Scottish Bill to merge the proposed Scottish Nature Conservancy Council with the Countryside Commission for Scotland to create a single natural heritage body. I would appoint its members and it would report directly to me. The new body will have full executive responsibility for its work in Scotland and be sponsored by my Department. Our proposals represent a significant change from present arrangements. They will result in substantial improvements in the effectiveness, accountability and, most important of all, in the sensitivity of administration in the vital task of conserving and managing Scotland's natural heritage.

I am publishing a consultation paper inviting views on the principles of these proposals. Copies are being placed in the Library. I hope that there will be a large and positive response.

Community Charge

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that (a) merchant seamen and (b) Royal Navy seamen, who are away from shore for more than six months in a year, are treated equally in respect of liability for the poll tax.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 July 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my hon. Friend the Minister of State gave him on 2 May 1989, Official Report, columns 17-18. Anyone who is dissatisfied with the decision of the registration officer has a right of appeal, first to the registration officer and then to the sheriff.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Loans

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many banks and building societies have indicated that they are willing to administer the student loans scheme.

Mr. Jackson: It is for the individual banks and other financial institutions to reach their own decisions in the light of the detailed negotiations now under way, but it is clear from the discussions that have already taken place that there is substantial interest in participating in the top-up loans scheme.

Planning Courses

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current number of places on planning courses in universities and polytechnics; and what was the number in each of the previous three years.

Mr. Jackson: The numbers of higher education students on planning courses were as follows:

	1984	1985	1986	1987
Universities (GB)[1]: full-time and sandwich students	1,316	979	1,002	1,124
Polytechnics (England)[1]: full-time and sandwich students	2,180	2,090	2,075	2,158
part-time (including evening only) students	951	958	924	1,145

[1] The subject classification for universities was changed between 1984 and 1985.
The figures for universities for 1984 are not therefore directly comparable with those for the later years. The subject classification for polytechnics differs from that for universities. There is therefore incomplete comparability between university and polytechnic figures.

School Premises

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what sanctions the Government intend to use against local authorities and governing bodies which fail to bring their school premises up to the standard required by 1991 in accordance with the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981;

(2) whether the Government intend to implement fully the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 by insisting that school premises are up to the minimum standard by 1991 as determined by those regulations.

Mr. Butcher: The duty of ensuring that school premises conform to the standards prescribed by the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 rests with local education authorities and governors. Local authorities have been aware since 1981 of the requirements of the regulations.

Immunisation

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to amend the law relating to the statutory school starting age in order to make starting school dependent on certification of completion of a basic child immunisation programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to him today.

Secondary Education

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimates he has made of the numbers of young people who will be in secondary education in 1990-91 beyond their 18th birthday; what are his estimates of the relevant numbers in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Department projects that there will be some 19,600 pupils in English secondary schools in 1990-91 aged 18 or over at the start of the academic year. The corresponding numbers in 1991-92 and 1992-93 are projected to be 18,600 and 17,700 respectively.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the City of Durham constituency receive severe disablement allowance.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in the precise form requested.

The City of Durham constituency is served by the Department's local office in Durham but their boundaries are not conterminous. The numbers of people receiving severe disablement allowance at the Durham local office as at 31 May 1989, the latest date for which the information is available, were 449.

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action. The figure quoted may include a small number of cases not actually in receipt of benefit. Data are provisional and subject to amendment.

Family Credit (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number of families are now in receipt of family credit and living in the area covered by Durham department of social security.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the end of June 1989 the number of families receiving family credit who, at the time their awards were made, were living in the area covered by the Durham local office was 705.

Computerisation

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what safeguards, under the Data Protection Act, will exist to ensure that information will be confidential to Department of Social Security staff only when local Department of Social Security offices are computerised.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department keeps the security of its computer systems under constant review to ensure that the confidentiality requirements of the Data Protection Act are met. For the computer system now being introduced into local offices, we have strict measures in place to limit access to records to authorised users. It would not be prudent to publish details of those security measures.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what facilities are to be provided for non-English speakers and for those who are unable to communicate by telephone because of physical disability when local Department of Social Security offices are computerised.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Computerisation of the benefit system, and the relocation of work from some London offices, will not affect the way that people communicate with the Department. Interpretation facilities will be available for telephone calls routed to remote sites.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what safeguards will ensure an adequate service to the public should there be serious problems with the operation of new technology in local Department of Social Security offices.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Improving service to the public is a key objective in providing new technology for local offices. Safeguards have been built into the development of the computer systems to ensure that an adequate service to the public is maintained.

The computer programmes have undergone rigorous test programmes which include simulated operations in a model office followed by pilot running in 23 local offices. Resilience has been built into the system to reduce the effects of equipment breakdown and contracts have been established with suppliers to ensure rapid response should breakdowns occur.

In the event of a loss of computerisated support by natural disaster or other unavoidable incident, emergency plans are in place to maintain an adequate service to the public using clerical procedures.

One-parent Families

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what form, and when, the ministerial review of policy on one-parent families will be available; and what relation this review bears to the research carried out by his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of lone-parent families has increased from 840,000 in 1979 to just over 1 million in 1986, but their dependence on benefit has increased at an even faster rate. In 1979, 40 per cent. of lone-parent families were dependent on supplementary benefit, but by 1986 the proportion had increased to 60 per cent. No maintenance at all is paid for 77 per cent. of lone parents on income support. In these circumstances the Government must be concerned and examine their own arrangements to see what further can be done to ensure that these fathers meet their responsibilities and to help those lone parents who wish to work to do so.

We have commissioned an independent study of the motivations and perceptions of lone parents on benefit and the results will be fully and carefully considered.

Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate for each year since 1980 the numbers and proportions of (a) council tenants, (b) private tenants, (c) outright owner occupiers and (d) owner occupiers with mortgages in receipt of supplementary benefit, income support or housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information available is in the table. Detailed information for owner-occupiers is available only for supplementary benefit. Housing benefit did not begin until 1983-84.

Notes:

1. From April 1983 most supplementary benefit recipients, and from April 1988 most income support recipients, received assistance with rent and rates through housing benefit. The figures in (C) above therefore include those in (A) and (B) who qualified for housing benefit.
2. The information in (A) above is on the basis of receipt of supplementary benefit irrespective of assistance through housing benefit. From April 1988 information about the tenure type of Income Support recipients is on the basis of those who also receive housing benefit.

Immunisation

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to link the receipt of child benefit and other family-related benefits to certification of completion of a basic child immunisation programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to him today.

Social Fund

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions the maximum loan of £1,000 issued from the social fund was to a claimant in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde, (c) Scotland and (d) England and Wales in the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested.

Child Benefit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the effects on the net income of families receiving family credit of an increase in child benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Child benefit is ignored when assessing family credit in individual cases. Instead, the level of child benefit is taken into account when setting the rates of child credits in family credit. So in April 1989, when child benefit remains unchanged, the new family credit rates included an additional 45p to reflect what would have been the increase in child benefit had it been uprated. This was on top of the increase to restore the value of the child credits and the further 50p added to all the children's rates in the income-related benefits. Increasing child benefit would not therefore have added to the total value of the child credit and child benefit.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to arrange for child benefit to be paid in respect of those young people who are aged over 18 years in secondary education who will be required to pay poll tax from April 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Child benefit will continue in payment for young people under 19 who are in full-time non-advanced education (ie, up to A-level or equivalent standards) regardless of whether or not they are required to pay the community charge.

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will announce the social fund allocation for the new office in New Malden and also the revised allocation for Kingston following the closure of Surbiton local office on 29 June.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 5 July 1989, column 195]: I regret that the reply does not announce the revised annual allocation for Kingston. The information requested is as follows:

	Loans £	Grants £	Period
New Malden	62,213	29,006	29 June 1989 to 31 March 1990
Kingston	138,146	62,251	1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990

Incomes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the source of the data on real income by decile group referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead on 3 July, Official Report, columns 5-6; and when he expects to make this data available.

Mr. Moore: The methods and assumptions used can be found in "Households below Average Income: A Statistical Analysis 1981-85", a copy of which is in the Library. Full details were provided in my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) on 15 November 1988 at columns 629-30. Details are as follows:

Notes:
1. Income is defined as income from all sources less tax and national insurance contributions.
2. The incomes of all individuals within households have been adjusted for the size and composition of those households.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the money and percentage gains in real income of ech decile group for each year since 1979;

(2) when he expects to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Birkenhead on changes in real income by decile group to which he gave a holding answer on 30 June.

Mr. Moore [holding answer 30 June 1989]: The available information, which is adjusted for household size and composition, is as follows. Percentage changes in real equivalised household incomes by deciles of all individuals are set out in table I. It is not meaningful to produce results by decile of the whole population without allowing for the size of composition of households. For further discussion of this point the hon. Gentleman should see Cm 523 "The Measurement of Living Standards For Households Below Average Income". What the figures in table I mean in terms of changes in real income for a single person household is set out in table II.

Notes:

1. Income is defined as income from all sources less income tax and national insurance contributions.
2. The incomes of all individuals within households have been adjusted for the size and composition of those households.
3. The equivalence scales used to adjust for household size and composition use as their basis the income for a single person household. In other words, a single person household has been attributed an equivalence scale of one so that the income of these households is the same both with and without equivalisation.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Speech Therapists (Grading)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the grades of speech therapists in Northern Ireland following the regrading under HSS(TC7)3/88 broken down by area board and showing the percentage in each grade before regrading and the percentage after.

Mr. Needham: The percentage of speech therapists in each grade at 31 March 1988 broken down by area board is as follows:

Grade	Eastern Board	Northern Board	Southern Board	Western Board
Area Senior Chief	1·39	—	—	—

Communications

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial support has been granted to British Telecom, NI, STC and any other agencies, companies or bodies to provide advanced communications and information infrastructure.

Mr. Viggers: During the financial years 1987-88 and 1988-89 £10,689,473.

Young Mature Entry Index

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he hopes to provide information regarding the young mature entry index for Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 6 July 1989]: This index cannot be calculated from existing sources but the possibility of doing so in the future is under review.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Joyce Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, if he will list in respect of Northern Ireland (a) the average rate of unemployment and the European Community average in the last three years and (b) the percentage of industrial employment in total employment and the European Community average.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 7 July 1989]: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Annual Average Unemployment[1] Rates

	Northern Ireland[2]	European Community[3]
1986	17·6	10·8
1987	17·6	10·4
1988	16·4	10·0

1. The Northern Ireland and European Community rates are not directly comparable because they are based on different definitions of unemployment.
[2] The Northern Ireland figures are based on the seasonally adjusted unemployment series.
[3] Produced by Eurostat.

(b) For 1987 (the latest year for which figures for the EC are available) industrial employment is estimated to have constituted 26·4 per cent. of total employment in Northern Ireland and 32·8 per cent. of total employment in the European Community.

European Economic Community

Q9. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish a White Paper setting out the views of Her Majesty's Government on their future policy with regard to the European Economic Community in the light of the decisions made at the Madrid meeting of the European Council.

The Prime Minister: No. I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 27 April at column 614 to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames), and to my statement to the House of 29 June.

Q71. Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding economic and monetary union in the European Economic Community.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations on this subject.

Gwent

Q169. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister when she next intends to make an official visit to Caerleon, Gwent.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Rain Forests

Q14. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding the tropical rain forests in Brazil.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of letters and other representations about the tropical rain forests of Brazil. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has returned from Brazil where he visited the Amazon region and signed a memorandum of understanding with the Brazilian Government. It provides for greater co-operation on environmental problems, including the rain forests. We shall now work to agree the details of the projects where we can assist.

Intensive Farming

Q48. Mr. Marland: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding intensive farming methods.

The Prime Minister: Intensive farming methods are among the subjects on which I receive correspondence from the public.

Low Flying

Q64. Mr. John Browne: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding the use of low-flying aircraft by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in West Germany.

The Prime Minister: No.

Water Privatisation

Q65. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received on water privatisation.

The Prime Minister: I receive many representations about water privatisation, which represents the quickest and most cost-effective way of achieving even higher standards of water quality.

Litter

Q69. Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding litter in Britain.

The Prime Minister: I have received a large number of letters from people concerned about litter. They demonstrate wide support for tougher measures to control litter. The Government intend soon to announce a range of proposals for improving legislation in this area.

Forestry

Q70. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations on forestry policy.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of such representations.

Aid Programme

Q97. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Prime Minister when she expects to meet OXFAM to discuss Britain's aid programme as a percentage of gross national product.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so. The Government maintain close contact with non-governmental organisations such as OXFAM. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development met OXFAM as recently as 8 June and discussed a variety of aid issues. United Kingdom aid as a proportion of gross national product stood at 0·32 per cent. in 1988—14 per cent. up on the figure for 1987.

Japan

Q121. Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding relations with Japan.

The Prime Minister: A few. Japanese investment continues to grow. Over 100 manufacturing firms have now invested or are committed to invest a total of £3 billion to £4 billion in the United Kingdom.

Chancellor Kohl

Q133. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent meeting with Chancellor Kohl in Madrid.

The Prime Minister: The Government have received several recent representations on EC competition policy issues. Most concern the draft EC merger control regulation.

Social Charter

Q157. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding the proposal of the European Commission in relation to a social charter.

The Prime Minister: I am aware of the views of both British and European employers on the Commission's proposal. They share the Government's concerns that the current proposal will do nothing to create jobs and reduce unemployment; that it will restrict flexibility in industrial relations; and that there must be clear distinctions drawn between action which is appropriate for the Community, for national Governments and for collective agreements. This last point was made strongly in the agreed conclusions of the European Council in Madrid.

Better Made in Britain

Q159. Mr. Page: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding the Better Made in Britain campaign.

The Prime Minister: Yes. I support efforts to stimulate the competitiveness of British goods and identify opportunities to compete in the market place.

NATO

Q175. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received about the future of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

The Prime Minister: None. Last month's summit reaffirmed the vital importance of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in preserving peace and security, as it has done for the last 40 years.

China

Q176. Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions took place at the European Economic Community meeting on recent events in China; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to my statement in the House on 29 June.

Health Service

Q194. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding the Health Service.

The Prime Minister: The Government receive large numbers of representations on the National Health Service from members of the public, the professions and various interest groups. Many share the Government's desire for a Health Service that give patients more choice and rights as consumers, that is more responsible to the needs of local communities, and that builds on its existing successes and efficiency to give better value for money.

Legislative Programme

Q203. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to review Her Majesty's Government's legislative programme in the light of recent election results.

The Prime Minister: No.

EC (Financial Services)

Q204. Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding financial services in the European Economic Community.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of such representations about financial services in the Community. As I made clear at the recent European Council in Madrid, the United Kingdom leads in liberalising financial markets and services. We want other member states to liberalise as we have done.

Scientists (NHS)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister what were the pay scales of (a) scientific civil servants and (b) medical scientists employed in the National Health Service as at 1 March, both gross and net of the effects of contributory pensions.

Immunisation

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to encourage the pre-school immunisation programme by making starting statutory school or receipt of child benefit dependent upon child immunisation.

The Prime Minister: The Government have no plans to introduce either requirement. Take-up rates for the last year available (1987-88) were 87 per cent. for diphtheria, tetanus and polio, while measles and whooping cough at 76 per cent. and 73 per cent. respectively showed marked improvement on the previous year. We believe that the successful launch of the combined measles, mumps and rubella (MMR) vaccine from October 1988, and the proposed introduction of immunisation targets for general practitioners, will enable us to reach the World Health Organisation's objective of 90 per cent. for all these immunisations, without need for compulsion.

Cyprus

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Prime Minister (1) in which ways the United Kingdom now proposes to help to progress the United Nations sponsored talks between the two Cypriot communities following her most recent meeting with President Vassiliou; and whether she will make a statement.

(2) what further steps she plans to take over the next three months to encourage Turkey, Greece, the United States of America and the European Community to promote a successful outcome of the talks between the two Cypriot communities being held under United Nations sponsorship;

(3) what recent contacts she has had with President Bush on ways of assisting a successful outcome of the United Nations-sponsored talks between the two Cypriot communities;

(4) whether she will convene a meeting of the Turkish and Greek Prime Ministers to assist the United Nations-sponsored inter-communal talks between the two Cypriot communities before their leaders meet again in New York in September.

The Prime Minister: By continuous diplomatic contacts with all the parties concerned, including our fellow guarantor powers, Turkey and Greece, our other EC partners, the United States of America and other allies, the United Kingdom is working to promote agreement on a draft outline settlement of the Cyprus problem before the next meeting in September between the United Nations Secretary General and the leaders of the two communities in Cyprus. I had a further discussion on progress towards this goal with President Vassiliou of Cyprus on 10 July. I have not discussed Cyprus with President Bush for some time, but my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and the United States Secretary of State, Mr. Baker, agreed on the need for our two Governments to follow developments closely when they met in Washington on 17 April. Meanwhile I do not believe that a meeting with the Foreign Ministers of Greece and Turkey would serve any useful purpose at this stage.

Madrid Talks

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the discussions in Madrid with Sir Leon Brittan.

The Prime Minister: Sir Leon Brittan did not attend the Madrid European Council.

Engagements

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 11 July.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 11 July.

Mr. French: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 11 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. Mulroney.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cereal Fields

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many reports he has received of the flattening of circular areas in cereal fields in the south-west and other areas of England respectively: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The flattening of circular areas in cereal fields is a phenomenon known to occur from time to time. It is confined to winter cereal crops and is more prevalent in dry seasons, but we have no arrangements for recording such occurrences and therefore cannot comment on their frequency.

Bottled Water

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements are made to ensure that bottled water offered for sale is tested as being safe and acceptable for public consumption.

Mr. Ryder: Natural mineral waters, sold as such, must meet certain quality standards. The recognition of such waters and checking thereafter is the responsibility of local authorities who enforce the Natural Mineral Waters Regulations 1985. I am considering the need for other bottled waters to be covered by specific regulations. At present, local authorities may request analytical information from producers and take and analyse samples to check they they comply with the standards prescribed in EC directive 80/778/EEC relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption.

River and Coastal Protection

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total expenditure on river and sea walls, coastal protection and defences in each standard region in each year since 1979, including an estimate for the current year.

Mr. Ryder: Details of expenditure on flood and coastal defence maintenance works and non-grant-aided capital works are not available. The total expenditure on capital flood and coastal defence works including river and sea walls, in receipt of Government grant in each English region since 1979 is as follows:

Intervention Board

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many employees were employed by the intervention board for agriculture in each of the last four quarters ending 30 June; at which locations they were employed; and, in each case, how many were temporary staff.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Department's headquarters operation is based in Reading and Guildford. A temporary headquarters outstation has been opened in Newcastle. It also has a small regional network. The permanent and temporary staff in each location at each of the last quarters are as follows:

United Kingdom Fishing Fleet

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the size of the United Kingdom fleet of fishing vessels in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is as follows:

United Kingdom fishing fleet 1979-88 by length group[1] as at 31 December of each year

[1] Changes in the number of under 40 ft vessels are due partly to changes in the definitions used for this sector of the fleet.
[2] Provisional.
The figures relate to active commercial fishing vessels.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the extent of the required reduction of the United Kingdom's fishing fleet in percentage terms and actual number of vessels under the multi-annual guidance programme over the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The required reductions during each calendar year in terms of tonnage and engine power are as follows:

	1989	Per cent.	1990	Per cent.	1991	Per cent.
Gross registered tons	15,575	9	10,895	7	8,716	6
Engine power (Kw)	52,353	6	46,368	6	37,095	5

Radioactive Foodstuffs

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the current levels of radioactivity in bq/kg or bq/l for various foodstuffs that apply after a nuclear accident and the changes proposed to those levels in the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: In the event of a nuclear emergency, the current limiting values for radioactivity in all foodstuffs placed on EC markets would be those laid down under Council regulation (EURATOM) 3954/87. This regulation was adopted on 22 December 1987. The levels so far annexed to that regulation are as follows (Bq/kg or Bq/l):

	Dairy Produce	Other foodstuffs except minor foodstuffs
Isotopes of strontium, notably Sr-90	125	750
Isotopes of iodine, notably I-131	500	2,000
Alpha-emitting isotopes of plutonium and trans-plutonium elements, notably Pu-239, Am-241	20	80
All other nuclides of half-life greater than 10 days, notably Cs-134, Cs-1387	1,000	1,250

Minor foodstuffs listed in the annex to Commission regulation (EURATOM) 944/89 will be subject to maximum permitted levels 10 times those applicable to "other foodstuffs except minor foodstuffs". Separate levels will in due course be set for liquid foodstuffs, babyfood and animal feedingstuffs. No changes to the present levels are currently under discussion within the EC.

Aquagard

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the evidence which his veterinary products committee considered prior to giving approval to give a product licence to Nuvan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Extensive data regarding safety, quality and efficacy were provided by the manufacturer of Aquagard in accordance with the requirements of article 5 of directive 81/851/EEC and directive 81/852/EEC governing product licence applications. In addition, since Aquagard is necessarily released into the marine environment the VPC considered all available data relating to the dispersion of dichlorvos and its effects on marine life.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what factors he took into account in granting a product licence for Aquaguard sea lice treatment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he took account of the red list status of the active ingredient dichlorvos when granting a product licence for Aquaguard sea lice treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The factors to be taken into account before granting a product licence are set out in the Medicines Act 1968. The recommendation that I received from the veterinary products committee about Aquaguard took into account the reasons underlying the inclusion of dichlorvos in the Department of the Environment's provisional red list and the need for appropriate safeguards on use and disposal.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has imposed conditions and restrictions on the use of Aquaguard sea lice treatment in granting a product licence; and whether he will place a copy of the product data sheet in the Library.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I will be arranging to deposit a copy in the Library of the House when available.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish the data supplied in support of the product licence application for Aquaguard sea lice treatment by his Department, the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland and Ciba-Geigy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland intends to publish later this year the results of studies into the toxicity of dichlorvos to fish and lobster larvae which were undertaken in concert with my Department and Ciba-Geigy and considered by the VPC along with other data when assessing the product licence application for Aquaguard.

Beef

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tissues and organs of a cow can be labelled as beef; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: In common with all foodstuffs, butchers' cuts of meat and meat products are subject to the general labelling provisions of the Food Labelling Regulations 1984, which require the name of food products to be sufficiently precise to inform a purchaser of the true nature of the food and to enable the food to be distinguished from products with which it could be confused.

Under the Meat Products and Spreadable Fish Products Regulations 1984, "meat" is defined for the purposes of those regulations as "flesh including fat, and the skin, rind, gristle and sinew in amounts naturally associated with the flesh used" and may include diaphragm, head meat, heart, kidney, liver, pancreas, tail meat, thymus, and tongue. These tissues and organs may be described as beef, if appropriate, in the statutory minimum meat content declaration.

Salmon Farming

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he has made provisions for the salmon farming industry to investigate an alternative, less environmentally damaging solution to the sea lice problem than the use of Aquaguard sea lice treatment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he is conducting research into alternative and environmentally benign solutions to control sea lice on salmon farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Marine scientists in my Department and the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland are in close touch with the Scottish Salmon Growers Association which has commissioned such research from the Institute of Aquaculture at the university of Stirling and from the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland.

Boxworth Experimental Husbandry Farm

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to publish the results of his study into environmentally friendly agriculture carried out at Boxworth experimental husbandry farm; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. Ryder: The final report of this study is currently in preparation for publication by HMSO in 1990. Annual reorts are available for the years 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987 and articles on the research have been published.

Abbatoirs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the recent inspection of abattoirs was completed; when he expects to receive a report on the condition of abattoirs in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: EC Commission veterinary inspectors visited a sample of export-approved premises in Great Britain between 6 and 16 March. In Northern Ireland they visited premises between 3 and 6 July and will visit again between 17 and 20 July.

The confidential technical reports on the individual premises visited in Great Britain have been received from Brussels and passed to the managements of those premises and the appropriate local authorities. A formal EC Commission report on the visit as a whole is still awaited.

Fishing Licences

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications for rod and line fishing licences in (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland of the establishment of the National Rivers Authority as proposed in the Water Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In England and Wales the requirement to hold appropriate fishing licences will remain under the National Rivers Authority. The procedures with regard to changing fishing licence duties will be slightly modified by the Water Act. The NRA will be required to publish the full scale of any new licence duties that it proposes. Where there are objections the changes may not take effect without the approval of the relevant Minister. We have removed an outmoded provision which prevented new licence duties from taking effect before the start of the next calendar year. We are, however, retaining the principle that not more than one increase in licence duties will be permitted in any 12-month period.

Fishing licences are not required in Scotland, and this remains unchanged by the Water Act.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

HMSO Publications

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the published price totals of Her Majesty's Stationery Office publications ordered by hon. Members for the latest available period, tabulated per Member.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is not available as individual issues ordered by right hon. and hon. Members are not recorded.

Council of Europe (Visit of President Gorbachev)

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make arrangements to make the statement of President Gorbachev to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe on 6 July available to hon. and right hon. Members.

Mr. Wakeham: Copies are available in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Merchant Shipping

96. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the total tonnage of merchant shipping which could be requisitioned for supplying reinforcements during a war.

Mr. Portillo: At the end of April 1989, 71 British flag dry cargo vessels, totalling 1·8 million deadweight tonnes, were earmarked for carrying transatlantic reinforcement equipment and supplies to Europe. All this tonnage could be requisitioned.

Traffic Speeds

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average speed of traffic in (a) central London and (b) central Liverpool.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The average speed of traffic in central London is about 11 miles per hour throughout the working day. Comparable information is not available for central Liverpool.

Road Standards

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines his Department issues to local authorities as to (a) road surface condition and (b) standards of road repair; and how these are enforced.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Local highway authorities determine standards for their roads. Advice on standards for local roads is contained in the local authority associations' code of good practice for highway maintenance. We understand that a revised edition of that code will be published later this year. The standing committee on highway maintenance is planning to monitor the introduction of the code, and the application of certain key standards relating to road surface condition.

For trunk roads, where local highway authorities act as the Department's agents for maintenance, authorities receive instructions on the standards to be applied. The Department works closely with local highway authorities in developing these standards, many of which are helpful to local authorities in setting standards for their own roads.

Fishing Vessels

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals to introduce regulations covering the carriage of immersion suits on United Kingdom registered fishing vessels over 10 metres in overall length as part of their life-saving equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The carriage of life-saving appliances, including immersion suits, on fishing vessels is under examination by the Department in consultation with the fishing industry as part of the review of the Fishing Vessel (Safety Provisions) Rules 1975.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the names, number of fatalities and port of registration of United Kingdom registered fishing vessels which have been lost in each of the past five years.

Mr. Portillo: The names of United Kingdom registered fishing vessels which have been lost in the past five years are listed together with fatalities.

It is not possible in all cases to give the port of registry for vessels for the years 1984-86 as this information is not readily available.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to increase the penalty for abuse of the orange badge scheme for severely disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Misuse of an orange badge already carries a maximum fine of £400. The level of penalty is kept under review. Badges can be withdrawn by local authorities in cases of persistent misuse.

We must make it easier for the police and traffic wardens to spot abuse of the scheme. We have proposed that the orange badge should be redesigned in the form of a more robust personal passport-type of document. There would be space for a photograph of the holder. We shall be looking at ways in which the badge could be displayed which would avoid fixing it permanently to the windscreen, thereby making it difficult to remove. This approach has been widely welcomed by people with disabilities and their representative organisations and by other groups.

Driving Tests (Durham)

Mr Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average waiting time for a driving test in Durham.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Twelve weeks.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what constraints his Department sets on financial investment in new infrastructure by British Rail, with particular reference to the required rate of return from investment: if these constraints apply to the British Rail proposals to build a Channel tunnel rail link through Kent and south east London; what is the present projected cost of the Channel tunnel rail link project; at what rate of return the line will operate under the present plans; and at what projected date the CTRL line is expected to make a return on the investment.

Mr. Portillo: The Government's required rate of return for commercial public sector programme is 8 per cent. If the Channel tunnel rail link were to be financed by British Rail, it would be appraised using a discount rate reflecting this rate of return. British Rail is currently discussing its proposals with the private sector with a view to securing private investment in the scheme.

The cost of the high-speed link is estimated at about £1·7 billion. Appraisal of the scheme to estimate a rate of return is not yet complete.

Motoring Offences

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many persons in London have been reported for offences of (a) having no current excise licence, (b) no insurance, (c) no Ministry of Transport certificate, (d) having vehicle in unroadworthy condition and (e) driving whilst disqualified since 16 May.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand that the information sought could not be assembled except at disproportionate cost.

Road-side Checks (Tax Discs)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many (a) police officers and (b) Department of Transport officials have been engaged in the campaign to identify motorists without tax discs announced for Greater London on 3 May;

(2) how many motorists have so far been stopped in the road-side checks announced on 3 May for Greater London;

(3) what has been the cost to public funds so far of the campaign in London to identify tax disc dodgers announced by his Department on 3 May;

(4) what results have been obtained so far in the campaign against motor tax dodgers in London announced on 3 May.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As part of their continuing enforcement duties, the Department's officials spent 1,600 man hours during the recent campaign in London in detecting vehicle excise evaders. The estimated manpower cost was £7,000. I understand that the Metropolitan and City police devoted a similar effort to the task.

Only vehicles whose tax discs were not clearly visible or appeared to be out of date were stopped. Of these, 3,800 are being investigated with a view to prosecution where an excise offence has been committed. The Department's publicity costs totalled £145,000.

Road Accidents

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people were killed on roads in (a) Merseyside and (b) St. Helens for each of the last five years; how many of those killed were children or pedestrians or both; how many were sitting in the rear seats of motor vehicles and unstrapped; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 10 July 1989]: The following table show the number of deaths in road accidents for each of the last five years for which complete information is available, broken down as requested, for (a) Merseyside and (b) St. Helens.

	Total	Children Killed	Pedestrians	Child Pedestrians	Rear seat strapped	Rear seat unstrapped/ unknown
Road deaths in Merseyside: 1983-87
1983	95	20	56	16	0	8
1984	128	25	80	21	0	4
1985	109	11	62	8	0	6
1986	102	10	59	9	1	5
1987	105	9	61	7	0	3
Road deaths in St. Helens: 1983-87
1983	14	4	7	2	0	1
1984	15	1	8	0	0	1

1987	4	0	0	0	0	0

The use of seat belts saves lives. We should continue to take every opportunity to get that message across.

In April this year we published a major package of measures aimed at improving pedestrian safety, which we intend to implement as quickly as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

Benefit Disqualifications

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what are the results of his monitoring of the disqualification periods imposed on people deemed to have left work without good cause, since the increase in maximum disqualification period from 13 to 26 weeks;

(2) in how many cases, where a claimant for unemployment benefit has been disqualified on the ground of leaving employment without good cause, the disqualification period has been 26 weeks.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply. An analysis of a sample of adjudication officers' decisions taken during the first three months of this year indicates that disqualification for unemployment benefit in circumstances generally known as "voluntary unemployment" was imposed for the full 26-week period in less than two-thirds of the cases. The sample included those disqualified for leaving employment without just cause. The full information obtained from the monitoring exercises is currently being analysed and the results will be published shortly.

Children (Employment)

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he intends to bring into force the Employment of Children Act 1973.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have no plans to implement the Employment of Children Act 1973. All local authorities (except Isles of Scilly) have byelaws which regulate the hours and conditions of children's employment. The majority of byelaws follow departmental guidance of 1976 which is based on the proposed content of regulations under the 1973 Act.

Strikes

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many working days were lost through strikes in 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In the 12 months ending March 1989, 2,858,000 working days were lost through stoppages of work due to industrial disputes. This figure is about one quarter of the average for the previous 10 years.

Low Pay

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to deal with the problem of low pay.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on Tuesday 16 May at column 164.

Labour Statistics

44. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current levels of employment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: In December 1988 the work force in employment in the United Kingdom stood at 26,510,000, the highest level on record. This represents an increase of 2,948,000 or 12·5 per cent. since March 1983. The rising trend has now continued for more than five years. The figures have been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's forces and participants on work-related Government training programmes.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been unemployed for 12 months or more in the City of Durham constituency.

Mr. Lee: The information is available from the Library. In April 1989, the latest available date, the number of unemployed claimants in the City of Durham parliamentary constituency who had been unemployed for over 12 months was 1,109.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish an analysis of known job vacancies in Durham by skill category required.

Mr. Lee: There is no analysis available by skill category. However, vacancies are analysed by occupation and industry.

Industrial Accidents

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to monitor the accident rates for trainees on the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Yes. Accident statistics will be collected and monitored on the employment training scheme along lines already operating in YTS.

Tourism

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has further to encourage the growth of tourism and tourist-related jobs in East Anglia currently and after 1992.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave on 6 July at column 287 to a question from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Yardley (Mr. Bevan). The changes to the operation of both the British Tourist Authority (BTA) and the English tourist board (ETB) set out in that statement are intended to result in even more effective support by these boards and by the East Anglia tourist board for the growth of tourism in East Anglia now and after 1992.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations he has received on the proposals of section 4 grants for tourism development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received representations expressing a variety of views about the section 4 scheme. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend on 6 July to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Yardley (Mr. Bevan) concerning the future of the scheme.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has had recently from operators of the touring caravan sites section of the tourist industry; and what advice his Department will be giving them further to develop their job-creating potential.

Mr. Lee: The caravan sector is an important part of the tourism industry, providing a large number of jobs, both in caravan manufacture, and in servicing caravan sites. The quality of both has improved substantially in recent years, and I am keen to see the caravan industry continue to develop its potential. I welcome the industry's initiative in marketing itself through a national promotional campaign, in introducing a grading scheme for parks, and in bringing the industry's potential to the notice of planning officials to encourage positive attitudes towards planning applications. I also welcome the substantial capital investment that is currently taking place in this sector.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list information available to him on the top 10 national visitor-paying tourist attractions by (a) number of visitors, (b) revenue received and (c) where appropriate, profit made during 1988, and the top 10 in the East Midlands tourist board area according to the same criteria.

Mr. Lee: The financial information requested could be made available only at disproportionate cost. The national tourist boards' annual surveys of numbers of visits to paying attractions give the following figures for Britain and for the East Midlands tourist board area:

	Number of visits Thousands

Madame Tussaud's, London	2,705

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total value of tourism in Leicestershire at current prices in each of the years from 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Lee: The available information for Leicestershire is shown in table 1 and relates to expenditure by overseas visitors to the United Kingdom who made a trip of at least one night to Leicestershire. Information about spending by domestic residents is available only for the whole of the East Midlands tourist board region, and is shown in table 2 together with the equivalent information for overseas visitors. Figures for tourist expenditure by United Kingdom residents on day trips to Leicestershire or the east midlands are not available.

EC Blue Flag Award

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department has taken to congratulate those responsible and to promote the winners of this year's European Community blue flag award for beaches and bathing waters.

Mr. Lee: Today I took part in flag-raising ceremonies at two of the 1989 award-winning beaches, namely Bournemouth and Poole, as part of national Blue Flag Day. I would like to congratulate this year's 22 winners, including Lowestoft South beach in my hon. Friend's constituency, and the Tidy Britain Group, the Water Authorities Association, and the English Tourist Board, who support the awards in this country.

Employment Training

Mrs. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total amount to date expended on the employment training scheme; and what is the amount of money expended per trainee.

Mr. Nicholls: Some £566 million had been spent on employment training up to the end of May 1989. The estimated cost per trainee is £2,300.

ENERGY

Hinkley Point C Inquiry

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply of 26 June, Official Report, column 350, on the extent of the cost to public funds of the Hinkley Point C inquiry, if he will state (a) the best estimate given to him to date by the Central Electricity Generating Board of the costs of the inquiry borne or to be borne by it and (b) his assessment of the costs so far incurred by local authorities.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The costs incurred by the CEGB are a matter for them. I have asked the chairman of the board to write to my hon. Friend.

Harwell

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all the facilities currently subject to either Euratom or the International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards at Harwell.

Mr. Michael Spicer: All civil nuclear material at Harwell is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the UK/IAEA/Euratom safeguards agreement. The IAEA has not chosen to designate facilities at Harwell for inspection.

Energy Technology Support Unit

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current and past contribution of the energy technology support unit to the United Kingdom energy programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Since 1974, the energy technology support unit has provided, and continues to provide, project management services for the Department's renewables and energy efficiency research, development, and demonstration programmes. Through the chief scientist's group, it also provides technical and analytical support for the Department.

Sizewell C

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has had recently on the case for a public inquiry into the Central Electricity Generating Board proposal to build Sizewell C in Suffolk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend has directed the CEGB to advertise its application for his consent to construct a second PWR nuclear power station at Sizewell and has allowed a period up to 30 September in which objections can be made to him.

Until he has seen all such objections and has received the views of the relevant local planning authorities, it is too early to say whether a public inquiry will be necessary.

To date, my Department has registered some 700 objections to the application.

New Headquarters (Cost)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the cost per occupant of the construction and equipment of his Department's new headquarters offices.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department's headquarters is being fitted out to normal Government standards, including those covering fire and security, set by the Property Services Agency and the Treasury. The cost is borne on the PSA's vote. My Department will be paying a rent to the PSA reflecting the full opportunity cost of the building.

Wylfa

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will extend the time for submitting objections and making representations to the inquiry into the Central Electricity Generating Board's application for a pressurised water reactor at Wylfa to 31 October 1989.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. I believe that the period of three months that my right hon. Friend has allowed for objections is ample time for anyone wishing to object to the CEGB's application to do so.

The requirements for publicity to be given to power station applications are set out in the Electricity (Publication of Applications) Regulations 1957. These regulations state that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State must give a period of not less than 21 days in which objections can be made to him. The period of three months that my right hon. Friend has allowed is simply for objections to be registered pursuant to section 34 of the Electricity Act of 1957. If he calls for an inquiry to be held, all registered objectors will be sent details of the inquiry including the procedures to be followed if the objector wishes to give evidence.

HEALTH

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by district health authority (a) the current nursing staff establishment, (b) the number in post at the latest available date and (c) the number who have left the National Health Service in the preceding year.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 4 July at column 152, regarding the number of nursing staff in post.

We do not collect information on nursing staff establishments centrally. We expect to have some information on the number leaving the NHS later this year.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether decisions have been made on proposals made by health authorities under the pilot scheme for flexible pay supplements for nursing and midwifery staff in 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. Regional health authorities are being notified today of the decisions which have been taken on their bids and of their additional financial allocations. Copies of the notifications will be placed in the Library.

District health authorities were invited to bid, through their region, against the sum—not exceeding £5 million—which the Government have made available in 1989-90 for a pilot scheme on flexible pay supplements for nursing and midwifery staff. I received a very positive response. Many authorities welcomed the opportunity to use this scheme to meet particular recruitment and retention difficulties for such staff. In total, I received 157 bids from 10 regions, covering 7,792 posts.

Decisions on the bids were taken by Ministers, following detailed analysis by a small panel of departmental and NHS officials. The main criteria used in assessing the bids were vacancy rates; turnover rates; degree of use of agency/bank staff and of overtime; the impact of these factors on service delivery; non-pay initiatives taken by authorities; and local labour market issues.

Altogether, 116 bids (covering 5,804 posts) were accepted as they stood; 19 bids (1,235 posts) were accepted but reduced in coverage to 963 posts; 9 bids (281 posts) accepted but extended in coverage to 397 posts; and 13 bids (472 posts) were rejected.

The supplements which cover all grades in the clinical structure and which range from £200 to £1,000, are payable from 1 July 1989.

Our evidence to the nurses' pay review body on the future of the scheme will take account of our experience of this first round of bids and of the close monitoring of the effects of the supplements that we are undertaking.

A summary of the bids approved, and their cost, is set out in the table.

Mersey Regional Health Authority

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases were on the inpatient waiting list in the Mersey regional health authority at the latest available date.

Mr. Mellor: On 30 September 1988, there were 32,121 such cases.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what services have been contracted out within the Mersey regional health authority to date; and what savings have been made or are expected from such contracting-out.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected centrally in the form requested. As a result of the Government's 1983 competitive tendering initiative for domestic, catering and laundry services annual savings of almost £6 million have been generated in the Mersey region with around £1½ million resulting from contracts awarded to outside contractors. This tendering process is being extended within the region, to varying degrees, to portering services, grounds and gardens, building, engineering and equipment maintenance, energy management, waste disposal and computer information services, with outside contractors winning some contracts or otherwise stimulating improvements in in-house services. For more detailed information my hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of the regional health authority.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many capital schemes of over £1 million (a) have been completed and (b) are under construction in the National Health Service Mersey region since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: Information held centrally shows that 22 schemes over £1 million have been completed in the National Health Service Mersey region since 1 January 1979, for a total expenditure, including fees and equipment of approximately £140 million, and one is under construction.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the percentage bed occupancy was in (a) the Mersey regional health authority and (b) England in the latest available year.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table. The health services information steering group (chaired by Mrs. E. Korner) recommended in its first report that bed occupancy statistics no longer be used as an indicator of efficient bed use.

Average daily available beds and occupied beds, 1987-88

[1] Estimate

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of health expenditure in the Mersey region, expressed per household in (a) 1978-79 and (b) the latest available year in (i) cash terms and (ii) terms adjusted for inflation.

Mr. Freeman: Expenditure by household for individual regional health authorities is not available centrally. My hon. Friend may therefore wish to write to the chairman of Mersey regional health authority who may be able to provide information.

My hon. Friend may however find the following centrally available information of help. Per capita expenditure by Mersey regional health authority on hospital and community health services in 1978-79 = £91·34 million.

The comparable figure for 1987-88 (latest year available) = £229·77 million in cash terms and (ii) £112·47 million expressed by 1978-79 values (a real terms increase of 23 per cent.).

These figures exclude expenditure on the family practitioner services in the Mersey region.

Neonatal and Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the neonatal and perinatal mortality rates are for each of the last five years for which figures are available in the United Kingdom; and what are the comparable figures for the other individual member states of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Freeman: The tables give the latest available data from the Statistical Office of the European Community's "Eurostat" volume 1988 and the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' "Population Trends No. 56."

Nursing Teachers (Salaries)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to inform nursing teachers of the salary to be awarded to the grades they have recently been allotted; and whether he will publish the grades and salaries attached in the Official Report.

Mr. Mellor: The review body has submitted its report to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. Decisions on the implementation of the review body's recommendations will be taken in the normal way.

Private Health Screening Clinics

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to the code of practice recently published by the Independent Hospitals Association for the conduct of private health screening clinics; and what assessment has been made of the medical qualifications required of the staff.

Mr. Mellor: We welcome the Independent Hospitals Association's initiative to improve the quality of services in the private sector. We are considering the association's proposals in the light of the White Paper "Working for Patients" and our objectives for improved levels of care and wider patient choice.

Water Contamination (North Cornwall)

Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the South West regional health authority in conjunction with the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority are continuing to interview patients in the Camelford area of north Cornwall; and if he will make a statement on the progress of these investigations.

Mr. Freeman: The Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority has arranged for a consultant to see those people from the Camelford area who wish to have a medical check following exposure to the water contaminated with aluminium sulphate. These medical checks are carried out every Saturday morning at the East Cornwall hospital. The necessary support facilities are available should the consultant wish to refer anyone for further medical examination.

These sessions will continue for as long as is needed. They are additional to the normal health service provision, available at the time of the pollution incident and since, whereby anyone can consult a general practitioner for both diagnosis and treatment and can be referred to a hospital consultant by the general practitioner.

Medical Services (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the current average waiting times for women in Durham district health authority waiting for results of cervical smear.

Mr. Mellor: All results are made available to the patient's GP within two weeks.

Anthony Porter

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the death of Anthony Porter after an incident at North Tees hospital in December 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I am considering my hon. Friend's letter of 23 June on this subject, to which a reply will be sent shortly.

Hospital Facilities

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report for each of the past five years, those hospital facilities in England that fell short of acceptable standards referred to in paragraph 16 of the first annual report of Her Majesty's inspector of pollution.

Mr. Freeman: I assume that the inquiry relates to the paragraph 16 on page 26 of the report which refers to the inspections of hospitals under the Medicines (Administration of Radioactive Substances) Regulations.

Following these inspections, Her Majesty's inspector of pollution reports to the Department on various requirements for certification under these regulations. These reports may include general comments about the facilities available to clinicians administering radioactive substances. If the Department feels that there is cause for concern, the matter is pursued with the health authority. Should the Department consider, following investigation, that the facilities no longer reach an acceptable standard, certificate(s) of the clinician(s) using those facilities would be suspended or revoked. No certificates have been so suspended or revoked during the last five years.

Scientists

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the percentage contribution from employers to the pension scheme of scientists in medicine employed by the National Health Service over the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: Over the last five years, the contribution from NHS employers to the NHS superannuation scheme for all NHS employees was 7·5 per cent. of superannuable pay up to and including 31 March 1989 and 4 per cent. from 1 April 1989.

Rotherham Hospital

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received the recent letter from the Rotherham Hospital Medical Staff committee expressing grave concern about the maintenance of services; and if additional resources will be provided for the Rotherham health authority.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has received a letter from the Rotherham Hospital Medical Staff committee. Allocation of resources to individual health authorities is a matter for the relevant regional health authority; in Rotherham's case, this is Trent.

Immunisation

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to extend basic child immunisation for the 0 to 5 years age group.

Mr. Freeman: The joint committee on vaccination and immunisation, which advises the health departments on all aspects of immunisation, has set up a group to consider and make recommendations on the present childhood immunisation schedule and on future developments. We shall consider the JCVI's views when they are available.

Alcohol Problems

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to recognise new centres for the management of alcohol problems as designated places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health is at present considering the designation of one new centre for the management of alcohol problems in Southampton.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of (a) botulism, (b) salmonella enteriditis, (c) salmonella typhimurium and (d) other types of food poisoning had been detected or reported for each month since Janaury.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 3 July 1989]: The information requested is given in the tables. Laboratory reports of campylobacter infections are collated weekly, and four-weekly totals to 16 June are given, but it is not known how many of these infections are food-borne.

ENVIRONMENT

Sewage Outfall, Royal Portbury Dock

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will instruct Wessex Water to extend the proposed 900 m sewage outfall being built adjacent to Royal Portbury dock to the full 2 km length; and if he will make a statement on what length outfall is appropriate in coastal waters such as the Bristol channel.

Mr. Howard: Before granting a discharge consent for any new sea outfall scheme, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution must be satisfied that the scheme will enable bathing waters in the vicinity to meet the standards of the EEC bathing water directive. The length of the outfall required to achieve this objective will depend on local factors such as tides, currents, depth of water and prevailing winds. The average length of long sea outfalls is around 2 km. However, local conditions may mean that they can be longer or shorter than this. Relevant studies of the hydrographical conditions near the Royal Portbury dock indicated that a 900 m outfall would be the most appropriate length. Accordingly, a discharge consent for such an outfall was granted by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in July 1987.

Air Conditioning

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has undertaken into air conditioning of office buildings.

Mr. Trippier: The Building Research Establishment has carried out research into the design and performance of air conditioning of office buildings over a number of years. Working with the Property Services Agency and the industry, the establishment has provided a major contribution to industry standards, such as the design guides, application manuals and building energy codes of the Chartered Institute of Building Service Engineers. The topics covered have included air infiltration, calculation of summertime overheating, plant capacity, thermal comfort conditions and operating costs. More recently, work has been focused on the "sick building syndrome", the emerging problems of CFCs, and means of improving energy efficiency. A copy of the published research programme of the Building Research Establishment is in the Library of the House.

[1] Cumulative rent arrears are reported to the Department on local authorities' Housing Subsidy Claim forms, but these do not give the number of tenants in arrears.

[2] Local authority tenants owing rent, rates and other charges as reported to the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy and published in "Housing Rents Statistics at April 1988" are given where available (. . indicates not available).

[3] Department of the Environment estimate of rent arrears based on reported total tenants' arrears (including rates etc.) of £16·7 million.

Council House Sales

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals for a code of conduct for the offer by local authorities of council housing to ex-service personnel.

Mr. Trippier: Advice to local authorities is already available in my Department's circular 54/75, which requests that local authorities consider sympathetically applications from men and women leaving Her Majesty's forces.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he or Ministers or officials of his Department have recently met the head of the United Nations environment programme's industry and environment office to discuss matters pertinent to the United Kingdom or European Community environmental protection.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government fully support the work of the United Nations environment programme's industry and environment office. Officials in the Department of the Environment are in regular contact with the industry and environment office and have recently been discussing the creation of an international network to promote the exchange of information on clean technology.

Environment and Development

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what initiatives he has taken to implement recommendations made by the Brundtland committee on world environment and development.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The United Kingdom is one of a very small number of countries to have published a formal response to the report of the world commission on environment and development. The London "Saving the Ozone Layer" conference in March, attended by 123 countries, gave strong support to the report's concept of sustainable development. In September the United Kingdom is to host a workshop on awareness raising and public participation as part of the preparations for next year's ministerial conference in Bergen which will examine the implementation of the report in the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government policy towards proposals by the United Nations to hold a conference on environment and development in 1992.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government fully support the proposal for a United Nations conference on environment and development in 1992. The United Kingdom will be taking an active part in the preparations and will aim to ensure that the conference reaches agreement on the actions needed to tackle global environmental problems.

Planning Applications (Harrogate)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of appeals carried out into planning applications in the Harrogate borough council area during each of the last three years.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is as follows.

Year	Planning appeals
	Received	Decided	Allowed	Withdrawn
1986-87	92	64	21	11
1987-88	104	87	30	17
1988-89	121	96	28	15

Ivory

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what powers he has imposed a unilateral ban on ivory imports.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The ban on ivory imports is based on article 10 1(b) of EC regulation 3626/82. We consider that the decline in African elephant populations is so serious that the conditions set out in that article for the issue of import permits cannot be met.

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications of the unilateral ban on ivory imports for the terms of the CITES convention which regulates and controls the legitimate trade in ivory.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Article XIV of the convention indicates that the provisions of the convention shall not affect the right of parties to adopt stricter domestic measures. The action that we have taken is entirely compatible with the provisions of the convention.

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households were housed from the waiting list and by which category in each local authority in England and Wales in 1988.

Mr. Trippier: Local authorities report the number of dwellings let on secure tenancies to households under normal waiting list allocation procedures on their annual housing investment programme returns. The figures for 1987-88 appear in column E9c of the "198 HIP1 All Items Print", a copy of which is in the Library. Information on categories is not held centrally.

For corresponding information about Welsh authorities I refer the hon. Member to the Secretary of State for Wales.

Housing (Voluntary Agencies)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the continuation of funding to voluntary agencies in the housing field under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment hopes to make an announcement soon.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the funding of voluntary organisations by the statutory sector in the field of housing.

Mr. Trippier: Our policy is that voluntary organisations in the shape of housing associations have a major role to play in the future, as providers of housing, and should be supported by Government and local authorities, with important contributions from private funding.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the role that voluntary housing organisations should play in relation to statutory housing services.

Mr. Trippier: Housing associations should in future be the major providers of social rented housing, supported by public and private funds, and co-operating fully with local housing authorities.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the service provided by those organisations in receipt of funding under section 16 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 and under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985; and what are his concerns in each case with which he is not satisfied.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has been reviewing the section 73 grant regime; we hope to announce conclusions soon. A review of section 16 grants in relation to housing management training is now under way and we shall be consulting interested bodies.

Sewage Discharges

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the establishments that have applied for consent to discharge sewage in excess of the levels set in the Control of Pollution Act 1974 following the privatisation of water authorities.

Mr. Howard: Consents for discharges from sewage treatment works by water authorities are issued by the Secretary of State under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. The Act itself does not set permissible levels of discharge. Lists of sewage treatment works for which applications have been made for time-limited discharge consents, pending completion of capital improvement schemes, have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Harwell Incinerator (Closure)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the closure of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority Harwell laboratory incinerator has posed any disposal problems for slightly radioactive organic solvents used in scintillation counting.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The closure of the Harwell incinerator has not posed any disposal problems. Slightly radioactive solvents are now disposed of in other incinerators authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Environmental Monitoring

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution intends to publish reports on the results obtained from monitoring private water supplies for radioactivity;

(2) when he expects Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to publish its first annual report on the national programme of environmental monitoring in the vicinity of selected premises controlled under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The inspectorate intends to publish the reports by the end of this year.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all sites of special scientific interest presently renotified under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in England and Wales on a county by county basis.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Nature Conservancy Council is currently preparing an up-to-date list of SSSIs in England and Wales. I will write to the hon. Member with this information as soon as it is available, and will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Sizewell C

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had recently on the case for a public inquiry into the Central Electricity Generating Board proposal to build Sizewell C in Suffolk; and whether he now intends to order such an inquiry.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has received one letter from a member of the public which was forwarded to the Department of Energy for a reply. As far as a public inquiry is concerned, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy.

Community Charge

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of his Department's community charge practice notes were designed to assist registration officers in the compilation of the registration form; and on what dates each was dispatched to local authorities.

Mr. Gummer: The following five practice notes have been issued to local authorities about various aspects of the task of compiling their community charges register:

Date of issue	Title
26 August 1988	Practice Note No. 3: The Community Charges Register
26 August 1988	Practice Note No. 4: Data Protection and the Community Charge (Volumn 1)
14 October 1988	Practice Note No. 6: Omission of Names from the Public Extract of the Register
11 November 1988	Practice Note No. 8: The Community Charge Canvass
1 February 1989	Practice Note No. 10: Data Protection and the Community Charge (Volume 2)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to exempt from poll tax young people who are required to remain in secondary education beyond their 18th birthday; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Young people who remain at school after their 18th birthday are exempt from the community charge for as long as their parents are entitled to claim child benefit on their behalf.

Building Regulations

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made with the review of the building regulations.

Mr. Trippier: The first part of the review of the building regulations has been completed and my right hon. Friend has today laid regulations amending the Building Regulations 1985. The main changes concern parts F (Ventilation), G (Hygiene), H (Drainage and Waste Disposal), J (Heat Producing Appliances) and L (Conservation of Fuel and Power). It is intended that the new regulations should come into force on 1 April 1990, to allow time for users to familiarise themselves with the new requirements. Revised approved documents, which provide practical guidance on meeting the requirements, will be published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office later this month, together with a publication produced by the Building Research Establishment on good practice for securing effective thermal insulation in buildings. Proof copies of these documents have been placed in the Library, together with a summary of the changes that have been made. My right hon. Friend has decided not to proceed at present with amendments to the mandatory rules for means of escape in case of fire which were the subject of consultation in December 1988 and the need for these amendments will now be considered as part of the review of part B (Fire). Further consultation papers on this and other outstanding parts of the review will be issued later this year.

Nature Conservancy Council/Countryside Commission

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the current organisation of the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The Government are concerned to improve the way we handle the conservation of wild fauna and flora and the countryside. There are great differences between the circumstances and needs of England, Scotland and Wales in this respect. The present organisational arrangements do not match these differing requirements. The Nature Conservancy Council is responsible for nature conservation throughout the whole of Great Britain. The Countryside Commission is responsible for conserving and enhancing the natural beauty of the countryside in England and Wales, while there is a separate Countryside Commission for Scotland. There are increasing feelings that these arrangements are inefficient, insensitive and mean that conservation issues in both Scotland and Wales are determined with too little regard for the particular requirements in these countries.

We have therefore concluded that the functions which the Nature Conservancy Council at present exercises throughout Great Britain and the functions which the Countryside Commission exercises in England and Wales should be exercised in future by separate bodies for England, Scotland and Wales. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales have decided that the nature conservation and countryside functions should be the responsibility of a single body in each country. They are making parallel statements about their detailed plans today. The Government believe that combining these responsibilities in one body for Scotland and one for Wales will allow a more comprehensive approach to pursuing the special inheritances of wildlife and natural beauty in these two countries.

We have also considered what would be best for England. In view of the much greater density of population and consequent pressure upon the land, we believe that it would be right to maintain the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission as separate bodies in England.

I shall continue to be responsible for representing the United Kingdom's interests on nature conservation matters within the European Community and under international conventions. Arrangements will be made for all the necessary advice to continue to be available to me for that purpose.

These changes require legislation, which we shall bring forward at the earliest opportunity, and which will be confined to organisational matters.

I should like to pay a warm tribute to the manifest achievements of the chairmen, members and staff of the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission. We have the most comprehensive administrative arrangements for dealing with wildlife and countryside issues anywhere in the European Community, and perhaps the world. It has become clear that these arrangements will be even more effective if they can take more account of differences in local conditions between different parts of Great Britain. These proposals will achieve that.

"Releasing Enterprise"

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to issue further policy guidance about planning agreements, as envisaged in the White Paper "Releasing Enterprise."

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales have today issued a consultation paper seeking views on proposals to amend section 52 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 and on draft guidance to local authorities about the proper limits of their statutory development control powers.

The three proposed legislative changes are: to enable a developer to give a unilateral undertaking to carry out certain works or to do whatever the undertaking specifies; to make provision for a planning agreement or unilateral undertaking to be discharged when its planning purpose has ceased; to enable the Crown to enter into section 52 agreements.

The proposed draft guidance substantially reaffirms, with some amendments, the guidance given in this Department's circular 22/83. (Welsh Office Circular 46/83.)

Barkby Thorpe Road, Leicester

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received opposing the development of the landfill site on Barkby Thorpe road, Leicester.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 11 July 1989]: Leicester city council has given outline planning permission for the site, subject to a number of conditions. Several representations have been received, including those from the hon. Member for Leicester, East.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions over the past 10 years judicial reviews have been sought to change a decision on a town and country planning appeal determination; and in how many of these cases the review has led to a change in determination.

Mr. Chope [holding answer, 10 July 1989]: The chief planning inspector's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library, include tables for England and for Wales showing the number of High Court challenges from 1981 to 1987-88 to different kinds of appeal decision and their outcome. In relation to appeals under sections 36 or 37 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, in 1986-87 the original decision was reversed in 14 out of 27 inspectors' cases redetermined; in 1987-88 eight out of 18 such decisions were reversed. Similar information is not available for the outcome of the redetermination of appeals decided by my right hon. Friend, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Plastic Waste

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of the Environment whether he is satisfied that adequate advice is available to the general public on the preferable means of disposal of the various types of plastic waste other than by burning; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 7 July 1989]: The Government are concerned to ensure the highest possible standards in the management of waste. Our proposed new environmental legislation will have the effect of further improving these standards. All producers and holders of waste, except private households, will be placed under a statutory duty to take reasonable steps to ensure the legal disposal or reclamation of their waste. A code of practice will be issued together with technical advice on how to meet this duty. Most domestic plastic waste is put out for collection with other domestic waste. Its safe disposal is the responsibility of the disposal authority. The Government support a number of experimental schemes, for example in Sheffield, designed to evaluate the feasibility of recycling domestic plastic waste. We hope that these will demonstrate ways of overcoming the problems associated with recycling this material. Appropriate advice is offered to those concerned. The Government also support Waste Watch, which provides advice to industry and voluntary organisations on all aspects of recycling. These initiatives have resulted in industry recycling an increasing proportion of its own plastic waste.

Light Bulbs

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to commission the building research establishment to evaluate the energy savings that could be achieved in installing energy efficient light bulbs in differing sectors of the economy.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 6 July 1989]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy has instituted programmes at the Building Research Establishment to promote all aspects of energy efficiency in buildings, including energy-efficient light bulbs, in differing sectors of the economy.

The work will draw on research on the performance of lighting systems carried out by the establishment on behalf of the Property Services Agency and the construction industry directorate. Cost-effective applications will also be promoted, to ensure widespread take-up, through the energy efficiency demonstration scheme and through the best practice programme of the Energy Efficiency Office of the Department of Energy.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has recently received from Cleveland on toxic waste incinerators.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Secretary of State for the Environment has received several individual letters and a number of pre-printed letters from members of the public residing in Cleveland. Twelve letters have also been received from several hon. Members on behalf of constituents about the proposed siting of industrial and special waste incinerators.

DEFENCE

Universities (Defence Research)

16. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will indicate the current amount of research work his Department is financing at British universities (a) in total and (b) into the development of nuclear weapons; and what percentage increase that represents over the last five years.

34. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will indicate the current amount of research work his Department is financing at British universities (a) in total and (b) into the development of nuclear weapons; and what percentage increase that represents over the past five years.

80. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will indicate the current amount of research work his Department is financing at British universities (a) in total and (b) into the development of nuclear weapons; and what percentage increase that represents over the last five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department currently has 690 research agreements and contracts with United Kingdom universities and other institutions of higher education, with a total value of some £55 million, of which the Atomic Weapons Establishment has 40 with a total value of some £2 million. In real terms, from 1985-86 to 1989-90, total annual spending on these arrangements has increased by 6 per cent. and the Atomic Weapons Establishment's element by 9 per cent.

Low Flying

17. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum height for NATO warplanes overflying the south-west on exercise; whether he will reduce the number of these flights overflying from outside the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on his policy on low-level flying over centres of population.

Mr. Neubert: NATO aircraft authorised to conduct low flying training in the United Kingdom are required to follow United Kingdom low-flying regulations which stipulate a normal minimum separation distance of 250 ft. Low flying by non-RAF aircraft based outside the United Kingdom accounts for under 2 per cent. of total low flying activity in the United Kingdom and will continue to be kept under close review. Military pilots are instructed to avoid overflying the centres of major conurbations and built-up areas at low level. It is not possible to avoid overflying the outskirts of major towns or every small community, but pilots will make every effort to avoid populated areas wherever possible.

33. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list exercises involving low-flying aircraft between July and October 1989.

Mr. Neubert: Low flying exercise activity in 1989 is expected to be similar to that in previous years. I will, as is usual, seek to notify members whose constituencies are likely to be affected, prior to individual exercises taking place and as soon as detailed planning permits.

Maritime Strategy

18. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about maritime strategy.

21. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about maritime strategy.

91. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about maritime strategy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend regularly holds discussions with the United States Secretary of Defence on a wide range of matters of mutual interest. However, it is not our general practice to disclose the details of such discussions.

Nuclear Depth Bombs

19. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration he has given to providing the Royal Navy with a new generation of nuclear depth bombs.

23. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration he has given to providing the Royal Navy with a new generation of nuclear depth bombs.

29. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration he has given to providing the Royal Navy with a new generation of nuclear depth bombs.

84. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration he has given to providing the Royal Navy with a new generation of nuclear depth bombs.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of the studies related to modernising the United Kingdom's theatre nuclear weapons capability, consideration is being given to the replacement of the full spectrum of United Kingdom tactical nuclear weapons, including sea-based systems. However, no decisions have yet been taken.

F111 Aircraft

20. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the deployment of F111s in the United Kingdom.

45. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the deployment of F111s in the United Kingdom.

57. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the deployment of F111s in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is currently on an official visit to the United States of America, where he will meet Mr. Cheney and discuss a range of issues of mutual interest.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the safety records of the F111E and the F111A aircraft based at RAF Upper Heyford.

Mr. Neubert [pursuant to his reply, 5 July 1989, c. 155]: In addition to the accident in 1984, there were two other accidents in the 1980s involving F111E aircraft from RAF Upper Heyford. The details of these are as follows. In April 1980 there was an accident to an F111E near Wimborne in Dorset while en route to France, and in March 1981 an F111E was involved in an aborted take-off at RAF Fairford. The latter was an airfield accident to an aircraft which had diverted from Upper Heyford. Although there was considerable damage to the aircraft, there was no danger to the general public.

Hospitals

12. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the under-utilisation of armed services hospitals.

59. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the under-utilisation of armed services hospitals.

70. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the under-utilisation of armed services hospitals.

94. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the under-utilisation of armed services hospitals.

Mr. Neubert: The utilisation of service hospitals was considered by the Public Accounts Committee in its 9th report of the 1987-88 Session. The Government replied in a Treasury Minute in February 1989. The Committee's 21st report of the 1988-89 Session, which also deals with service hospitals, was published on 22 June. It contains further observations which are now being considered and will be answered by Treasury Minute.

Chemical Weapons

22. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has as to the current size of the Soviet Union stockpile of chemical weapons; and what proportion of such weapons he estimated are stationed in eastern Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to page 9 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989 (Cm 675-I). We believe the size of the Soviet stockpile of chemical weapons to be several times higher than the 50,000 tonnes that the Soviets have claimed. We also have good grounds for believing that the Soviet Union has stationed chemical weapons in eastern Europe, but I am unable to say what proportion of the total Soviet stockpile these might currently comprise.

Gurkhas

24. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about the future role of the Gurkhas.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence said in the House on 22 May, it is expected that the future Gurkha force will have roles that lie within the mainstream of the Army's defence commitments.

Reserve Forces

25. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the number of men and women recruited for the reserve forces during the past year.

Mr. Neubert: During the training year 1988-89 a total of 19,345 men and 3,108 women were recruited into the volunteer reserve forces.

Demography

26. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further steps he will take to deal with the effects upon the armed forces of the demographic reduction in youth in the 1990s.

81. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further steps he will take to deal with the effects upon the armed forces of the demographic reduction in youth of the 1990s.

87. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further steps he will take to deal with the effects upon the armed forces of the demographic reduction in youth in the 1990s.

Mr. Neubert: I have nothing to add to the information contained in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989 (Cmnd 675-I).

Salisbury Plain

27. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his policy on conservation and archaeology in the Salisbury plain training area.

Mr. Neubert: I refer my hon. Friend to recent Statements on the Defence Estimates, which confirm the considerable importance that we attach to conservation and archaeology. This applies on Salisbury plain, as elsewhere on the defence estate.

Royal Ordnance Factories

28. Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that, following the closure of royal ordnance factories, he will take steps to ensure that defence materials formerly produced by them continue to be produced from within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: In considering alternative sources of production, we take into account the needs of an efficient defence industry and the value of continuing production within the United Kingdom, but we purchase from overseas when the advantages of cost, performance and timescale outweigh the benefits of procuring a British alternative.

32. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his most recent calculation of the difference between the sale price and current market value of the sale of royal ordnance factories, land and patent rights.

40. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his most recent calculation of the difference between the sale price and current market value of the sale of royal ordnance factories, land and patent rights.

63. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his most recent calculation of the difference between the sale price and current market value of the sale of royal ordnance factories, land and patent rights.

77. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his most recent calculation of the difference between the sale price and current market value of the sale of royal ordnance factories, land and patent rights.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department has had no reason to attempt to calculate the current market value of the assets of Royal Ordnance plc since the company was sold in April 1987. Royal Ordnance plc was sold as an entity, with all its liabilities as well as its assets for £190 million to the highest bidder in keen and open competition. There was therefore no sale price for any of the assets of the company.

The National Audit Office, for its recent report on the sale of Royal Ordnance plc, commissioned surveyors to carry out an alternative use valuation of the three company sites (Enfield, Waltham Abbey and Patricroft) for which there have been highly speculative and exaggerated estimates of development value. The assessment of the current market value of the three sites prepared for the NAO was between £26 million and £38·5 million.

Army Manpower

30. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about Army manpower levels.

Mr. Neubert: On 30 April 1989 the Army was about 3,500 below strength. My hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces made a statement to the House on 8 June, column 388, about the measures that the Army was taking to improve recruitment and retention.

Air-to-Surface Missiles

31. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the provision of a tactical air-to-surface missile.

47. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the provision of a tactical air-to-surface missile.

73. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the provision of a tactical air-to-surface missile.

89. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the provision of a tactical air-to-surface missile.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is currently on an official visit to the United States of America, where he will meet Mr. Cheney and discuss a range of issues of mutual interest.

Army Trucks

35. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce which company has won the order for new military trucks for the Army; and if he will make statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Sir H. Miller) on 29 June 1989 at columns 531-32.

Force Reductions

36. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the defence implications of reductions in (a) conventional forces and (b) short-range nuclear forces.

60. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the defence implications of reductions in (a) conventional forces and (b) short-range nuclear forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith).

Warsaw Pact

37. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any recent evidence to suggest that the Warsaw pact forces are adopting a defensive rather than an offensive strategy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The military reductions and restructuring of forces along defensive lines recently announced by Warsaw pact states have, of course, only just begun to be implemented. They are due to be completed by the end of 1990. Although they will to some extent reduce Warsaw pact offensive capability, we will not be able to judge their full impact until then. However, in terms of fielded capability, the Warsaw pact would still possess a significant advantage over NATO in all the systems needed to conduct conventional operations deep into an enemy's territory.

Defence Exports Services Organisation

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will indicate the annual salary of the head of the defence exports services organisation and the extent of the bonuses for which he could be eligible.

38. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will indicate the annual salary of the head of the defence exports services organisation and the extent of the bonuses for which he could be eligible.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 6 July 1989, col. 260-61.

Armed Forces (Recruitment)

39. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many recruits were taken into the armed forces over the last three years for which figures are available; and what are the projections for the next three years.

Mr. Neubert: The number of men and women recruited into the armed forces from civilian life in each of the last three financial years was:

	Number
1986-87	34,049
1987-88	33,826
1988-89	33,863

While the services do project recruiting achievement for planning purposes, the figures are necessarily very tentative and it would not be appropriate to make them public.

79. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people were recruited into the armed services and how many left the armed services during 1988.

Mr. Neubert: During the financial year 1988-89, 33,863 men and women entered the armed forces from civilian life and 39,278 service men and women left the armed forces.

Northern Ireland

41. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to introduce changes in the terms and conditions upon which members of the armed services serve in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Neubert: SDE 89 explained that it is the Government's aim to ensure that terms and conditions of service remain relevant to modern conditions. Against this objective, terms and conditions of service, including those relevant to Northern Ireland, are kept under review. However, I am able to offer an assurance that there are no plans to remove the existing waivers of food and accommodation charges which apply in Northern Ireland.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

42. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the implications for British defence policy of the current extent of countries accepting the principle and practice of nuclear non-proliferation.

49. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the implications for British defence policy of the current extent of countries accepting the principle and practice of non-proliferation.

58. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the implications for British defence policy of the current extent of countries accepting the principle and practice of nuclear non-proliferation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer).

Sea Systems Control Staff

43. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what study has been made of staff savings due to the colocation of sea systems controllerate staff; and what notional saving in staff has been used to justify the costs of relocating over 1,000 Ministry of Defence personnel.

Mr. Sainsbury: The organisation of the sea systems controllerate has been subject to several recent major studies, including by the Ministry of Defence's manpower auditors, which concluded that significant economies in working efficiency could be achieved by a reorganisation on abovewater and underwater ship systems lines coupled with colocation of the dispersed project staffs. Colocation would lead to efficiency savings from fundamental changes in working practices. These savings are expected to amount to at least 10 per cent. of the manpower requirement of the sea systems controllerate. In the initial investment appraisal of colocation carried out last year, the consequent saving of 460 posts was valued at £8·1 million per annum.

Air Safety

69. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the comparability of air safety for United Kingdom forces and those of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies.

44. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the comparability of air safety for United Kingdom forces and those of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies.

75. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the comparability of air safety for United Kingdom forces and those of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies.

Mr. Neubert: The air safety record of United Kingdom forces is broadly comparable with those of other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation forces operating similar equipment.

Nuclear Tests (Compensation)

46. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has yet been able to assess the implications for his policy on compensation arrangements to United Kingdom ex-service men and their families who were nuclear test victims of the recent decision in the Australian courts.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. The court in Australia has yet to make available the judgment, and consequently we cannot say at present what implications, if any, there might be for British participants in the United Kingdom nuclear test programme.

Surplus Property

48. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the disposal of Ministry of Defence quarters which are found to be surplus to requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: It is our policy not to retain quarters for which we have no long-term requirement. Wherever possible surplus properties will be offered for sale, either to service personnel through the services' own discount scheme or on the open market at full market price, if the quarters are not suitable for individual sale through this scheme. Quarters which cannot be sold, for example because of their location, may be reappropriated for other defence purposes or demolished.

Nuclear Free-fall Bombs

50. Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about progress on the replacement of the WE177 nuclear bomb.

54. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on his policy towards the replacement of the nuclear free-fall bombs.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are still studying a number of procurement options for possible replacement of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb, but no decisions have yet been taken.

Nuclear Test Bans

51. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what would be the implications for United Kingdom nuclear forces of a (a) partial and (b) total nuclear test ban.

55. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what would be the implications for United Kingdom nuclear forces of a (a) partial and (b) total nuclear test ban.

61. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what would be the implications for United Kingdom nuclear forces of a (a) partial and (b) total nuclear test ban.

72. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what would be the implications for United Kingdom nuclear forces of a (a) partial and (b) total nuclear test ban.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 1963, the United Kingdom has been a party to the partial test ban treaty, which prohibits nuclear tests in all environments except underground. As was made clear in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989 (Cm. 675-I, paragraph 217), a comprehensive test ban remains a long-term goal. For the foreseeable future, however, our security will depend on deterrence, based on nuclear weapons. We must, therefore, continue to test our nuclear weapons to ensure that they remain effective and up-to-date.

NATO

52. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet the Supreme Allied Commander Europe to discuss the defence requirements of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend will meet SACEUR at the meeting of NATO's Nuclear Planning Group in the autumn.

95. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet the secretary general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Frend will meet Dr. Woerner at the Royal Tournament on 20 July.

66. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will next have meetings with Defence Ministers of other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend will have a number of opportunities for discussion with NATO colleagues over the coming months. The next NATO ministerial meeting will be at the Nuclear Planning Group in the autumn, when Ministers will discuss a range of issues of mutual interest.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

53. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the United States stockpile of chemical and biological weapons (a) currently and (b) over the next five years.

85. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the United States stockpile of chemical and biological weapons (a) currently and (b) over the next five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms. Abbott).

Cancer Clusters

56. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations his Department has had about cancer clusters around nuclear installations for which he is responsible.

71. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations his Department has had about cancer clusters around nuclear installations for which he is responsible.

76. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations his Department has had about cancer clusters around nuclear installations for which he is responsible.

78. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations his Department has had about cancer clusters around nuclear installations for which he is responsible.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am not aware of any recent representation to my Department on this matter.

Out-of-area Commitments

62. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the United Kingdom's defence budget is currently spent on out-of-area commitments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The estimated cost in 1989-90 of maintaining our overseas commitments in Belize, Cyprus, the Falkland Islands and Hong Kong is £243 million, which represents 1·2 per cent. of the defence budget. This figure includes directly attributable expenditure on capital works and equipment and on running costs for material and manpower. It is not possible to provide directly attributable costs for the Armilla patrol since financial provision is made for the operation of the fleet as a whole.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many animal experiments for warfare testing purposes his Department has been directly responsible for in the last full year for which figures are available.

64. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many animal experiments for warfare testing purposes his Department has been directly responsible for in the last full year for which figures are available.

65. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many animal experiments for warfare testing purposes his Department has been directly responsible for in the last full year for which figures are available.

93. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many animal experiments for warfare testing purposes his Department has been directly responsible for in the last full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence does not conduct experiments for warfare testing purposes with live animals. Live animals are not used in the development or testing of weapons, but only to develop protective measures against attack and to improve the treatment of injuries. The Ministry of Defence complies fully with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, and the figure recorded under the Act by the Home Office for 1987, the last full year for which figures are available, was 9,200. This represents less than one half of 1 per cent. of all animal experiments conducted in the United Kingdom.

AWACS Offset Agreement

67. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made by his Department in monitoring the number of jobs involved in contracts placed under the AWACS offset agreement.

83. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made by his Department in monitoring the number of jobs involved in contracts placed under the AWACS offset agreement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Mr. Lofthouse).

Dog Training

68. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made with his consideration of the report of the consultants into the future of dog training at the Royal Army Veterinary Corps, Melton Mowbray; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The Peat Marwick McLintock study into future arrangements for canine and equine-related training in the services has recommended that the Ministry of Defence should vacate and sell the land at Melton Mowbray currently occupied by the RAVC and set up a service animal centre at RAF Syerston, encompassing canine and equine-related training, and allied functions, and using RAF Newton for administrative/domestic support. I am minded to accept the recommendation that a service animal centre should be formed embracing the existing separate service establishments.

The choice of site may, however, be affected by a current study into the future of the whole RAF estate including RAF Newton and RAF Syerston. In any event, as a result of the Peat Marwick McLintock study, some land at Melton Mowbray has been identified for disposal, whether or not the service animal centre is established there. We shall be exploring the possibility of the development of the site with the local planning authority. An announcement on the long-term location of the service animal centre will be made as soon as possible.

Meanwhile, we are implementing other recommendations made by the consultants concerning the common adoption of best practices, in preparation for the formation of the joint centre. This is expected to save at least £4 million in running costs over the next 10 years. The proposals for the formation of the joint centre are consistent with Government policies on the optimum utilisation of the defence estate, and the introduction of more efficient practices in those areas working in support of the operational capabilities of the armed forces.

Bullying

74. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with each of the initiatives intended to reduce bullying in the armed forces.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the right hon. Member to the statement I made on 28 June, column 1075. A copy of my letter of 23 June to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill), setting out the progress made in implementing the measures, has been placed in the Library.

European Fighter Aircraft

82. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in respect of the radar system for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) and for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett).

Force Verification

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart about the defence implications of inspection and verification of United Kingdom forces, and those of other nations in the event of an early agreement to reduce conventional and nuclear forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend regularly discusses arms control matters, including the defence implications of inspection and verification regimes, with Mr. Cheney and will do so during the course of his current visit to the USA.

Helicopters

88. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what low-flying restrictions are imposed on service helicopters.

Mr. Neubert: The general regulations governing the use of the United Kingdom low flying system by fixed-wing aircraft apply also to rotary wing aircraft but with appropriate modifications to take account of their different capabilities.

Railgun

90. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will report on the progress of the Railgun project.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer to the replies that I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neil) on 28 June, at column 456.

Independent European Programme Group

92. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made through the Independent European Programme Group in achieving a more open defence market among North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies.

Mr. Sainsbury: Significant progress is being made by the Independent European Programme Group towards the creation of an open European defence equipment market, based on measures set out in the action plan approved by Ministers at the Luxembourg meeting in November 1988. At their subsequent meeting in Lisbon on 28 June this year, Ministers reviewed the steps being taken to achieve the key objectives. The central feature of the open market is the dissemination to potential suppliers of information about bidding opportunities. To this end, Governments have now nominated one or more focal points to which companies in other Independent European Programme Group countries can register interest in bidding for defence contracts. Countries have also agreed to publish contracts bulletins by the turn of the year. The bulletins will be similar to those already issued by the United Kingdom and France. This more open market will bring benefits to all participating states. It will also be of considerable value to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation as a whole by enhancing efficient procurement and thereby strengthening the European contribution to the Alliance. With this in mind the Independent European Programme Group will continue to discourage any protectionist tendencies on either side of the Atlantic. Another important initiative which complements the open market is the creation of a European technology plan—to be known as Euclid—which will foster co-operation in research among Independent European Programme Group nations. During its current chairmanship of the Independent European Programme Group, the United Kingdom's aim will be to ensure that the work of the group is taken forward effectively in the best interests of all the allies.

Toxic Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), Official Report, 19 June, column 60, on toxic waste at Ministry of Defence premises, he will give the reason why it is not the practice to release details of such materials; and if he will consider revising his policy towards publication in line with the practice adopted by United States military facilities.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the basis for his policy not to disclose details of radioactive and toxic waste stored or disposed of at Ministry of Defence premises.

Mr. Sainsbury: Disclosure of such information could indicate the scale and nature of operations in certain programmes on which detailed revelation would not be in the national interest.

Fuel Containers (Devon)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which two 10ft x 2ft fuel containers were dropped at Stowford Cross in North Devon on Thursday 29 June; and what steps he is taking to prevent this happening in the future.

Mr. Neubert: The fuel containers in question were jettisoned by a Royal Navy Sea Harrier operating from the Royal Naval air station at Yeovilton, while the aircraft was on an air combat training exercise. The aircraft unintentionally went into a spin and the pilot, following the correct procedures, released the fuel tanks as part of his spin recovery action. The fuel tanks were empty at the time. A local investigation has established that the pilot was not in breach of any regulations.

To minimise the risk to the public, air combat training is carried out over the least populated areas available and always well away from towns and cities. It is also very rare for a Sea Harrier to enter into a spin in this way. The risk therefore of a repetition of this incident or of any consequent injury to persons on the ground is considered to be remote.

Cereal Fields

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the inquiries initiated by Army helicopters based in the south-west in investigating the origin of flattened circular areas of wheat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The Ministry of Defence is not conducting any inquiries into the origins of flattened circular areas of crops. However, we are satisfied that they are not caused by service helicopter activity.

Service Children Education Authority

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many children currently attend schools run by the service children education authority in (a) north-west Europe, (b) Gibraltar, (c) Hong Kong, (d) Cyprus and (e) elsewhere.

Mr. Neubert: Figures at summer term 1989:

	Number
North West Europe	23,880
Gibraltar	679
Hong Kong	1,610
Cyprus	1,655
Elsewhere	163
TOTAL	27,987

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many teachers are employed in schools run by the service children education authority.

Mr. Neubert: Figures are for summer term 1989:

	Number
North West Europe	1,319
Gibraltar	38
Hong Kong	108
Cyprus	122
Elsewhere	11
TOTAL	1,598

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the members of the service children education authority.

Mr. Neubert: Controller of the service children education authority (SCEA) is a tri-service rotational appointment currently filled by a Royal Air Force group captain of the administrative branch (education specialisation). There are three deputy controller appointments, currently filled by a Commander RN, a lieutenant colonel RAEC, and a civil servant, senior executive officer. The three deputy controllers are between them responsible for SCEA sections each headed by a major (or service-civilian equivalent), and staffed mainly by civil servants. The total complement of SCEA headquarters is currently 30 personnel.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the relationship between the service children education authority and Hampshire county council.

Mr. Neubert: Hampshire local education authority is one of a number of authorities represented on the standing committee for the education of service children (UK), chaired by controller SCEA. SCEA purchases from Hampshire local education authority, among other sources, a range of advisory support services for service children's schools (SCS) overseas. This includes careers guidance, which is provided by local education authority careers officers visiting overseas schools. In addition SCEA buys in Hampshire local education authority advisory time for both primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether schools run overseas by the service children education authority are subject to inspection by Her Majesty's inspectors operating from the Department of Education and Science; and whether the inspectors' reports are published.

Mr. Neubert: Yes.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether work experience programmes are available to children in north-west Europe attending schools run by the service children education authority.

Mr. Neubert: Yes. Work experience in north-west Europe is normally organised for 4th-year children (age 14 to 15) in two-week blocks usually during the summer term. Fifteen to 16-year-old children who are following CPVE (Certificate of Pre-Vocational Education) also have a short period of work experience.

IUKADGE Command and Control System

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to publish his assessment of the independent audit of the IUKADGE command and control system.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. Both the independent audit of the IUKADGE command and control system and the Ministry of Defence's subsequent assessment of its report will contain information that is both classified and commercially sensitive.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date were all of the elements of the IUKADGE command and control system originally intended to be in service use, and when the system was first ordered.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not our practice, nor has it been the practice of previous Governments, to release planned in-service dates of defence equipment.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the differences between the operational capabilities of the IUKADGE command and control system that is currently on order and the system that it is due to replace.

Mr. Sainsbury: When the IUKADGE is fully functioning, the CCS will be the focus of the management of all air defence resources, including early warning and reaction systems. Information on its specific operational capabilities is, however, classified.

Single Software Language

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the current rules of NATO international competitive bidding now allow the specification of a single software language.

Mr. Sainsbury: ADA is now NATO's single preferred language standard for real-time defence computer applications. According to the present rules for NATO international competitive bidding, the use of ADA for such applications is strongly recommended although not mandatory.

Berthing Facilities (East Coast)

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many east coast ports adopt a policy of refusing berthing and bunkering facilities to Royal Navy ships.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Navy has not encountered any ports which adopt such a policy.

RAF Upper Heyford

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all accidents or potentially hazardous incidents involving aircraft flying from RAF Upper Heyford while the base has been under the operational control of the United States Air Force.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 7 July 1989]: Since 1970, the period for which records are readily available, there have been 14 accidents to aircraft from the 20th tactical fighter wing based at RAF Upper Heyford. These accidents all took place during training exercises well away from the base. The dates and locations of the accidents are as listed:

Date	Aircraft	Area
28 May 1970	F-100	The Wash
18 January 1972	F-111E	Leuchars, Scotland
11 January 1973	F-111E	West of Stratford upon Avon, Warwickshire

Date	Aircraft	Area
15 May 1973	F-111E	Kintyre, Scotland
5 March 1975	F-111E	Cumbrian Mountains
5 November 1975	F-111E	Wainfleet range, Lincolnshire
31 October 1977	F-111E	4 miles North West of Llangadfan
24 July 1979	F-111E	North Sea near Wetherset
30 October 1979	F-111E	Harlton, Cambridgeshire
12 December 1979	F-111E	Wainfleet range, Lincolnshire
12 December 1979	F-111E	Newton Stewart, Scotland
29 April 1980	F-111E	Wimborne, Dorset
13 March 1981	F-111E	RAF Fairford
9 August 1984	F-111E	Tain range, Scotland

It is not the practice of the United States Air Force to classify incidents as "potentially hazardous".

Written Answers to Questions

DEFENCE

Battle Tanks

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards dismantling and storing battle tanks as part of conventional force reductions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As regards dismantling, I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 17 of the declaration of the heads of state and Government participating in the meeting of the North Atlantic Council in Brussels, 29 to 30 May 1989, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. This proposes that all equipment withdrawn under a CFE agreement should be destroyed. In addition, the Alliance proposals make provision for certain assets to be held in store. Detailed provisions on how both these aspects should be carried out have yet to be tabled.

Independent European Programme Group

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the Independent European Programme Group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) on 11 July.

Fighting Ships

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department has carried out into the use of front wheel drive propulsion for fighting ships; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department keeps under review a variety of warship propulsion techniques, including forward facing propulsors and bow mounted propellers; the latter, however, appear to have a number of disadvantages over conventional arrangements.

HMS Southampton

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the award of a contract for the repair and refit of HMS Southampton.

Mr. Sainsbury: A firm price contract has been placed today with Swan Hunter Shipbuilders. I would wish to pay tribute to the quality of the tenders we have received, which fully justifies our decision to seek competition. Together with parallel contracts for replacement equipment, and other costs, the full cost of the repair and refit will be some £45 million.

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reach a decision on the allocation of work to the FMRO Portsmouth following the removal of HMS Southampton from the FMRO programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have agreed a package of additional work to cover the remainder of this financial year. Details are being made known locally. Any further changes will depend on the outcome of the longer term studies into the future of the FMRO which I hope to announce shortly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the effect on the contribution income of the national insurance fund for 1989-90 if average earnings rose between 1988-89 and 1989-90 by 10 per cent. instead of the 7¼ per cent. in the Government Actuary's report on the 1988 Uprating Order (Cm. 537).

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government Actuary's report on the 1988 Uprating Order estimated that contribution income to the National Insurance Fund in 1989-90 would be £28·1 billion. If it had then been assumed that earnings would increase in 1989-90 by 10 per cent. then the national insurance fund's estimated income from contributions would have been £28·7 billion.

This report was prepared before the changes to national insurance contributions announced in the Budget. Taking these changes into account the national insurance fund's estimated income would have been £28·5 billion in 1989-90 assuming a 10 per cent. increase in earnings. The increased take-up of personal pensions will reduce this estimated income by about £2 billion.

Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when income support applicable amounts are increased in October 1989 how many (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples on income support will receive an increase in weekly benefit of the same or less than the transitional addition awarded to them in April 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The estimates are:

(a) 100,000
(b) 20,000

The increases for income support recipients in October will be paid on top of any transitional additions.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples will become newly entitled to income support when the applicable amounts are raised in October.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We estimate that 40,000 single pensioners and 20,000 pensioner couples will become new recipients of income support in October.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioner couples in receipt of income support will receive an increase in benefit of £3·50 a week when the applicable amount is increased in October.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: An estimated 140,000.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single pensioners in receipt of income support will receive an increase in benefit of £2·50 a week when the applicable amount is increased in October.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: An estimated 730,000.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis the applicable amounts for single pensioners and pensioner couples were uprated to £2·50 and £3·50, respectively, with effect from October; and what factors were taken into consideration in making this uprating.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the announcement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 24 November at columns 241-51.

Income Support

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases income support or housing benefit was reduced in the year April 1988 to April 1989 on the grounds that the claimant had spent more than six weeks in hospital.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to change the basis on which social security benefits are paid to residents of residential care and nursing homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health has today announced that the Government are to make local authorities responsible for meeting the costs of care for residents in residential care and nursing homes who are unable to finance it from their own resources. This is to be implemented in April 1991. From that date I will therefore be making changes to the way the benefit system provides support.

At present income support can be available to help with the fees charged by residential care and nursing homes, subject to specified limits which I review annually. I propose that from April 1991 residents of homes will be given access to help from the normal income support system and from housing benefit on a similar basis to the help they would receive in their own home. The special income support system for those in homes will be ended and local authorities will be responsible for providing any further help required towards the cost of residential care in the cases where they decide that that form of care would be best.

The present system will remain in place until April 1991 for all those who need it. Claimants who are receiving income support in a home at the date of change will continue to receive the full level of help available via income support under current rules for as long as they need it and the system will continue after April 1991 for these cases. The limits will continue to be subject to annual review. The Government have also decided that other residents of registered residential care and nursing homes in April 1991 will also be eligible for help through the continuation of the existing income support system, should they need to turn to the state for support.

The Government have decided that community care grants should continue to be available from the social fund after April 1991, broadly as they are now. We will keep this under review.

We are not proposing to make any changes to the benefit rules for residents of local authority homes.

Full details of the new system will be published in the White Paper later this year, which will also include the Government's proposals for the calculation of housing benefit in residential care and nursing homes.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Horticultural Research Stations

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of his plans to close horticultural research stations.

Mr. Ryder: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on 10 July to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) at columns 350-51.

Farming (Employment)

Mr. Bright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of how many people now employed in farming may move out of the agricultural industry in the next 10 years; and if he will make a statement on the National Economic Development Office's report "Work in the Countryside", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In view of the crucial assumptions that have to be made in estimating the number of people currently employed in agriculture who are likely to leave the industry in the next 10 years, I have not considered it appropriate to make my own forecast. However, the report of the National Economic Development Council, "Work in the Countryside", provides an interesting insight into the corporate view of a group made up of a wide range of different interests. I am not in a position to judge whether what they term their least and most optimistic assumptions will prove accurate but, in broad terms, their forecast represents a continuation of past trends.

It is an interesting report which, among other things, highlights some of the alternative business opportunities for farmers. I welcome the contribution that the report makes in stimulating debate on the development of new job opportunities in the land base sector. My Department is already pursuing some of the action points mentioned in the report.

Chimpanzees

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has of the infectivity of BSE to chimpanzees.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No research has been carried out or is planned on the transmission of BSE to chimpanzees.

Baby Food

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many brands of baby milk and weaning food contain concentrates of aluminium above 200 microgrammes per litre.

Mr. Ryder: All the brands tested in the recent Ministry programme had levels of aluminium well below the intake maximum recommended by the World Health Organisation. The figure of 200 microgrammes per litre quoted has no significance from the point of view of health.

Food Irradiation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the development of a diagnostic test to determine whether food has been irradiated; and what are the implications of such a test for his proposals to permit the irradiation of food.

Mr. Ryder: I have nothing to add to my replies of 25 May to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) at column 1109.

Intervention Board for Agriculture

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many employees of the Intervention Board for Agriculture were employed at Kenton Bar, Newcastle at the end of each of the last 12 months up to 30 June; and, in each case, how many of these were temporary staff.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The board employed the following permanent and temporary staff at Kenton Bar, Newcastle during the last 12 months up to 30 June 1989.

	Permanent	Temporary	Total

ENVIRONMENT

Beaches

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has made to (a) Wessex Water or (b) South West Water over sewage contamination of beaches; and what steps he is taking to monitor the work of these authorities.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend is currently discussing with the water authorities an accelerated capital programme for identified bathing waters with the aim of bringing them up to the standards of the EC bathing water directive by the mid-1990s.

The National Rivers Authority will be responsible for monitoring and enforcing bathing water quality standards in accordance with the requirements of the directive.

Housing (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the numbers of local authority housing stock in the area of Durham district council as at April 1979 and at the latest date.

Mr. Trippier: The information for April 1979 and April 1988 was reported by local authorities in their annual housing investment programme returns (HIP1) and appears in columns B11 and A11 of "HIP1 All Items Print" for 1979 and 1988 respectively.

Copies of both documents are in the Library.

Married Couples

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest figure he has for the number of married couples who are living in a household headed by another person nationally and in Durham City constituency.

Mr. Trippier: The most reliable estimates of the number of married couples living in a household headed by another person in local areas are provided by the census of population. The 1981 census identified 140 such families in Durham City. The corresponding figure for England in 1981 is 145,000.

Ivory

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what official announcement was made, and when, regarding the United Kingdom's unilateral ban on ivory imports into the United Kingdom; and what notice was given to the United Kingdom ivory trade.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My noble Friend the Minister for Environment, Housing and Countryside announced on 23 May our intention to call for a complete ban on trade in new ivory at the Environment Council meeting on 8-9 June, and our decision to impose a unilateral ban on ivory imports was announced by my noble Friend at that meeting. A written statement giving further details was issued on 9 June.

Cemeteries

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to amend the Local Authorities Cemeteries Order 1977 (S.I., 1977, No. 204), as amended, to require local authorities to give details of the number of burial places available in each grave sold by the authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. There is no evidence of a widespread need for such a requirement.

Water Privatisation

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much has been set aside by his Department for the water flotation marketing campaign; how much has been allocated for the institutional lunches and dinners; and how much has been allocated for the national and regional roadshows;

(2) what was the cost to his Department of the paper of 9 May on the offer structure for the sale of the water industry, prepared by J. Henry Schroder Wagg & Co. Limited.

Mr. Ridley: It is not our practice to publish details of individual contracts. The cost of the water flotation will be reported to Parliament in due course in the usual way.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the specific prospectuses being prepared for potential foreign investors in the water industry.

Mr. Ridley: As announced in November 1988, the Government and the Water Authorities Association have appointed banking advisers to consider the feasibility and desirability of offering shares in the forthcoming privatisation in Japan, the United States of America, Canada and continental Europe. Firm decisions will not be made until later in the year on whether shares will be offered in any or all of the markets but preparations for such offers are being undertaken on a contingent basis.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the written question by the hon. Member for Norwich, South of 3 February, Official Report, column 431, concerning the sites of special scientific interest in the ownership of the Anglian water authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer, 12 April 1989]: I wrote to the hon. Member for Norwich, South on 28 June 1989 about this matter.

Quangos

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the appointments he has made since June 1987 to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations together with the salary payable in each case.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 10 July 1989]: The appointments to public bodies for which I am responsible are shown in the annual HMSO publication "Public Bodies" which gives informaton on the number of these posts and the levels of remuneration. The appointments are made under a variety of arrangements, and my involvement varies.

In addition, I make appointments to the following other bodies:

Architectural Heritage Fund:
Five members—unpaid
National House Building Council:
Chairman unpaid
National Park Planning Board and Committees:
One third of the members—unpaid
Sutton Housing Trust:
Four Trustees—Honorarium
Dartmoor Steering Group:
Chairman (appointed jointly with Secretary of State for Defence)—unpaid
Parliamentary Boundary Commission
One member—unpaid
The Chequers Trust
One Trustee—unpaid

A full list of the particular appointments made since June 1987 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sea Pollution

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the temporary licences in place earlier in the current year relating to waste discharge, including glycol and anti-corrosion substances from the North sea gas terminal at Bacton in north Norfolk, have been extended; what reassurances have been received from the operators, Shell, Amoco and Phillips, that the discharges constitute no hazard to the environment in general, and sea birds in particular; what action he has taken to test these reassurances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 10 July 1989]: My right hon. Friend is currently considering requests received under section 36(6)(b) of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 to direct the Anglian water authority to transmit to him for his own determination applications for discharge consent made by Amoco (UK) Exploration Co. Ltd. and Phillips Petroleum Co. UK Ltd. These involve discharges of surface water and glycol regenerator condensate to the sea from the gas terminal at Bacton. No temporary consents have been granted to either company; nor have they applied for consent to discharge anti-corrosion substances.

A consent to discharge these substances was issued to Shell UK by the Anglian water authority earlier this year. Regular monitoring by the authority indicates that there is no evidence to suggest that the discharge has had an effect on either the water environment or sea birds.

Community Charge

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice has been sought by, or given to, Solihull district council's community charge registration officer as to the range and scope of the questions on his registration form; what additional funds could be made available for a re-issue of the form following complaints about the questions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 10 July 1989]: All registration officers in England were given the same advice on registration together with a model form. I have no plans to allocate additional funds to any authority that chose not to comply and which may be required to amend its procedures.

Landfills

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those local authorities in England and Wales that did not respond to the 18 December 1987 letter from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on the licensing and control of landfills evolving gas.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 11 July 1989]: All waste disposal authorities in England and Wales have responded to the letter sent to them on 18 December 1987 by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals on environmental protection have been made by the United Kingdom ambassador to the United Nations during its 43rd session.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack), and the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 6 June, volume 154, column 33.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Single European Market

92. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress was made during the Spanish presidency of the Community towards completion of the single European market.

Mr. Maude: Very considerable progress was made under the Spanish presidency. Over 60 individual single market agreements were reached, which is a record for any one presidency. These included common positions in the Council of Ministers on very important directives to liberalise banking services in the EC and to ensure more effective compliance with EC rules on procedures for the award of public contracts. The presidency also saw the final adoption of several key measures to break down technical barriers to trade, for example in the areas of food law and machine safety.

Debt

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to alert people in Scotland to unscrupulous practices used by some finance companies whereby they entrap people into debt and sell the debt off to debt-collecting agencies.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

This is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading. If the hon. Gentleman has any evidence of unfair business practices in the marketing of consumer credit, I hope that he will make it available to the director general.

Finance Companies (Interest Rates)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the range of interest rates set by licensed finance companies in Scotland.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

The Government do not keep information on the ranges of interest rates available from licensed finance companies. Regulations ensure that a prospective borrower under a consumer credit agreement receives clear information on the interest rate being offered and that the information is on a basis which facilitates comparison with other sources of consumer credit.

Student Loans

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if a company established to administer the Government's student top-up loan scheme has been registered at Companies house.

Mr. Maude: The Registrar of Companies is not aware that any company has been incorporated for the purposes of administering the proposed scheme.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest balance of trade in manufactured goods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the three months to May 1989, trade in manufactures, on a seasonally adjusted balance of payments basis, was in deficit by £3·8 billion compared with a deficit of £4·3 billion in the previous three months.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total deficit in all trade with the rest of the European Economic Community over the past 12 months; and what was the comparable deficit five and 10 years previously.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the following table:

United Kingdom visible trade balance[1] with EC[2]

12 months ending	£ billion
May 1989	−16·1
May 1984	−4·3
May 1979	−3·1

[1] Imports cif (ie including insurance and freight costs). Exports fob (ie excluding insurance and freight costs).
[2] Present membership throughout.
Source: United Kingdom Overseas Trade Statistics.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the changes in recent months in United Kingdom statistics of overall trade with other European Community member states; and when he next expects to discuss such matters with the Council of Trade Ministers.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the six months to May, compared with the same period last year, United Kingdom exports to the other EC countries increased by 12 per cent. while those to the rest of the world rose by 9 per cent. Imports from the EC countries increased by about the same amount as those from the rest of the world, 15 per cent.

I have no plans to discuss these figures in the Council of Ministers.

Petrol (Monopolies and Mergers Commission Report)

Mr. Andrew McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to receive the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on petrol retailing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The commission is due to submit its report on the wholesale supply of petrol to my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State by 8 November.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Kemp report on the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: The report on the future status of ECGD was submitted to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in May 1989. Ministers asked that the report should be published immediately to facilitate consultation with interested parties. This has been done. An inter-departmental working party of officials has been convened under the chairmanship of the ECGD's chief executive to examine the recommendations in the report and to give advice to Ministers. No decisions have yet been taken on any of the options identified in the report.

Hotol Project

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what initiatives his Department has taken in the last 12 months to promote international participation in the Hotol project.

Mr. Atkins: We have been able to facilitate contacts with the relevant United States authorities. Contacts have also taken place with European industry. This is an industry-led project and it will be for the companies themselves to provide any further information.

Post Office Services

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, in view of the deterioration in the quality of postal services recently documented by the Post Office Users National Council, if the Government will introduce more competition into the postal services.

Mr. Forth: Postal service quality is a matter for the Post Office board. However, I understand that, disregarding last September and Christmas, there has been no significant change in performance over the last year.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what studies have been made of the benefits of disposing of the Post Office Counters to the private sector.

Mr. Forth: I am not aware of any detailed studies on this subject.

Estate Agents

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he intends that the code of practice for estate agents should cover commercial as well as residential estate agents.

Mr. Forth: As I announced on 21 June, the code is to be drawn up by the Director General of Fair Trading and discussed with the industry. It will be for the director general in drawing up a draft code for discussion with the industry to decide whether it should cover commercial as well as residential estate agents. I will ask the director general to write to my hon. Friend on this matter.

Milford Haven Dock Company

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in the light of the appointment of inspectors to investigate and report on the affairs of the Milford Haven Dock Company under section 432 of the Companies Act 1985, he will make a statement on the proposed acquisition of the company by the Milford Haven port authority.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 10 July 1989]: No. Any such proposed acquisition is a matter for the parties concerned.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Family Courts

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stockton, South of 3 July, whether he will give the total number of representations on the subject of family courts received in the last six months, what was the number in favour of the idea, and the number against; and if he will summarise the arguments presented in representations against.

The Attorney-General: As I indicated in my answer to the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) of 3 July, precise information about representations to my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor is not readily available as much of the correspondence refers to family courts as one of a number of issues or as an ancillary matter to the main focus of the correspondence. While it is true to say that correspondents generally favour a family court, there are none the less divergences of opinion on the many specific issues comprehended by the concept. Moreover, correspondents often fail to explain what they mean by the phrase in any meaningful detail so that it is not possible to identify what it is that they are in favour of and why.

Conciliation Service

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stockton, South on 3 July, Official Report, column 1, whether the Lord Chancellor's Department has accepted the costings and staffing levels proposed by the conciliation project unit based at the university of Newcastle upon Tyne; what further consideration is being given to these matters and by whom; to whom copies of the report had been passed for comment; and what response has been made.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has said that proposals relating to conciliation, including the report of the conciliation project unit at the university of Newcastle, will be considered as part of a rolling programme to review family law and procedures. That review will consider any costing and staffing levels estimated or proposed by the project unit. The Government are considering how that programme should be carried forward and hope to be in a position to make a statement later this year. Although formal comments on the report have not been sought ahead of the review the Lord Chancellor's Department has received comments from Relate, the Inner London probation service, the National Family Conciliation Council and from two individuals engaged in running conciliation schemes.

TRANSPORT

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to reopen the public inquiry into the east London river crossing to enable it to consider the revised design of the bridge over the Thames.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce a decision about the re-design of the new bridge for the east London river crossing; and why the review which he announced on 28 July 1988 has taken longer than the expected six months.

Mr. Channon: I expect to make an announcement very shortly about the design of the bridge and the next steps. Consultation with the relevant authorities indicated further possibilities which the consultants have been exploring. Their report has therefore taken longer than expected to complete.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of people in prison at the latest available date; and what it was 12 months ago.

Mr. Hurd: On Friday 30 June, 48,638 prisoners were held in prison service establishments in England and Wales. A further 230 prisoners were held in police cells. The total of 48,868 is 1,434 less than the total of 50,302 12 months ago. This is welcome news.

Prevention of Terrorism Act

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of people detained under the Prevention of Terrorism Act in Liverpool for each year from 1975 to 1989.

Mr. Hurd: The available information relates to detentions by Merseyside police and is published quarterly in Home Office statistical bulletins which are placed in the Library. The latest, issue 17/89, gives in table 3 information from 1979 up to the first quarter of 1989; it is planned to publish the bulletin for the second quarter at the end of this month. Corresponding information for individual years before 1979 is not available but the total detained between 1974 and 1978 is published in issue 11/87.

Disturbances, Bradford and Dewsbury

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of West Yorkshire as to the estimated costs of the police operations during the recent disturbances in Bradford and Dewsbury; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of West Yorkshire that the estimated additional costs of policing the disturbances are £194,250. This covers police officer and civilian overtime, subsistence for police officers, transport and aid from other forces provided under section 14 of the Police Act 1964.

Custody (Compensation)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state for each of the last five years (a) the number of people awarded ex gratia compensation for periods in custody and (b) the total amount paid in ex gratia compensation.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested, based on the date upon which the final payment of compensation was made, is as follows:

Year	Number awarded compensation	Total amount paid £
1984	12	14,450
1985	17	216,163
1986	13	154,890
1987	14	153,806
1988	8	56,925

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Chlorofluorocarbons

91. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the proposal to establish an international fund to compensate developing countries for the cost of phasing out production of chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have already made it clear that we are willing to help developing countries to find ways of avoiding the use of CFCs. An international fund has been suggested as one means by which such help could be given. The various possible means are to be considered by a working group, established by the parties to the Montreal protocol at their meeting in May, which is to start work next month.

Nicaragua

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the grounds for rejection of Oxfam's application under the Overseas Development Administration joint funding scheme for aid with the following Nicaraguan projects: (a) the Atlantic coast livestock loan scheme, (b) the Fanor Urroz co-operative farm and (c) CISAS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: All three project applications were rejected after the usual consultations. Oxfam has asked us to reconsider projects (a) and (b) and we have agreed to do so.

EC Budget

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for each of the years 1979 to 1987 (a) the total amount of expenditure under line 941 of the Community budget, (b) the amount granted to United Kingdom non-governmental organisations under line 941 of the Community budget, and (c) the percentage that (b) represents of (a).

Mr. Chris Patten: Figures in the precise form requested are not readily available. Figures for 1986, 1987 and for the period 1976 to 1987 are as follows:

	Total commitments £ million	To United Kingdom NGOs £ million	Percentage share United Kingdom NGOs Per cent.
1986	31·418	6·120	19·5
1987	43·906	8·086	18·4
1976-87	205·805	38·9	18·9

Note: All calculations assume a rate of £1 = 1·42 ecu.

ENERGY

South Africa (Oil Embargo)

94. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the international oil embargo of South Africa; and if he proposes measures to improve its effectiveness.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 19 October 1988, at columns 859-60. The Government's export guidelines rule out the sales of crude oil from the United Kingdom continental shelf to South Africa; I have no plans to make any changes to that policy.

Off-shore Work Permits

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends to revise work permit procedures for off-shore installations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department has today made available for comment a paper setting out proposals for strengthening the statutory requirements for permit procedures on off-shore installations. Copies of the document have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Council

93. Mr. Bell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what alternative proposals to the Delors report Her Majesty's Government will submit in time for the next meeting of the European Council.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's statement to the House on 29 June on the outcome of the European Council in Madrid on 26 and 27 June.

Directors' Pay

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) of 4 May, Official Report, column 352, what further advice he has given or intends to give on the effects on industrial competitiveness of excessive pay rises for directors of large companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Pay is for the parties involved to agree and not for the Government to intervene. But clearly pay rises for directors, workers or anyone else must not be above what can be afforded.

Warstock

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to announce when the Government will redeem the 3½ per cent. war stock issued in the 1939-45 war.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 6 July 1989]: There are no plans to redeem 3½ per cent. war stock.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect of a 1 per cent. change in United Kingdom interest rates and a 1 per cent. change in import prices, respectively, on the retail prices index.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 6 July 1989]: The effect of an increase in interest rates is to encourage saving, reduce spending and thus, over time, to bear down on inflation. However, because of the inclusion of mortgage interest payments in the RPI, a one percentage point increase in all United Kingdom interest rates would initially increase the retail prices index by about 0·4 per cent. No disaggregation is available for the imported component of the goods and services in the retail prices index. Whether, and to what extent, an increase in import prices will affect the RPI depends on the stance of monetary policy. The present Government is not prepared to accommodate inflation.

VAT

Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West may expect a reply to the letter which he sent to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 3 April about the imposition of value added tax on caravan pitch rentals and services.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 10 July 1989]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply sent on 5 July.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many purchases of premium bonds in each of the last three years for which figures are available were made in (a) amounts of over £100 and (b) amounts of £100 or less.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 10 July 1989]: The number of premium bonds sold in each of the last three years in amounts of over £100 and amounts of £100 or less are as follows:

Financial year	£100 or more		Under £100
	Number	Value £	Number	Value £
1986-87	380,000	182,621,000	1,718,000	331,821,000
1987-88	443,000	260,601,000	1,730,000	34,533,000
1988-89	457,000	273,171,000	1,742,000	36,122,000

PRIME MINISTER

European Monetary System

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give the list of conditions she has established for United Kingdom adherence to the European monetary system exchange rate mechanism of the European Community, in accordance with her reference to such conditions in the Official Report, 29 June, column 1109.

The Prime Minister [holding reply 11 July 1989]: The decision when to join the exchange rate mechanism will have to be judged against progress in a number of areas. In particular, when the level of United Kingdom inflation is significantly lower, there is capital liberalisation in the Community and real progress has been made towards the completion of the single market, freedom of financial services and strengthened competition policy.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Bristol Research Centre

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science why the Bristol research centre dealing with food safety will be closed; and whether the Agriculture and Food Research Council took account of representations from the retail food trade in making its decision.

Mr. Jackson: The AFRC has decided to consolidate the work of the Institute of Food Research (IFR) on its two sites at Norwich and Reading to further enhance its science base. A consequence of this restructuring is that the laboratory at Langford, Bristol, will cease to be part of the IFR by the end of 1990 when AFRC institute funding will have been withdrawn. In planning the future scientific strategy of the Institute, advice was sought from a wide range of opinion including representatives from the food manufacturing industry, the retail food trade, academia and the Consumers Association.

Communication Handicaps

Mr. Alfred Moris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in the light of the High Court ruling against Lancashire county council on 16 March, he has any plans to assist local education authorities in their duty to provide speech therapy for children with speech and language impairments.

Mr. Butcher: Responsibility for the provision of speech therapy services has rested with health authorities since the reorganisation of the National Health Service in 1974. The recent High Court case involving Lancashire county council, which ruled that speech therapy could be considered as either educational or non-educational provision, does not affect health authorities general responsibilities in this area.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in the light of the implementation of the Education Act 1988, what plans he has to ensure that the ¼ million children suffering from specific communication impairments have access to that curriculum by increasing the numbers of (a) trained teachers and (b) speech therapists.

Mr. Butcher: Children with special educational needs, including those with specific communication impairments, should benefit from the substantial resources that the Government are making available generally to local education authorities to support the introduction of the national curriculum. Within the £100 million available this year to LEAs through specific grants, it will be for authorities to decide how much to spend within this total to ensure maximum access to the national curriculum for children with special educational needs, where appropriate, including those with specific communication impairments.

The training and supply of speech therapists is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the findings of the working party examining the funding of communication aids for those with communication handicaps will be available.

Mr. Butcher: I understand that the working party on the assessment of children with communication handicap will report to my right hon. Friend and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health within the next few months.

University Libraries

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to have the results of the special monitoring exercise on universities' library spending for 1987-88, and 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 3 July at column 9.

Education Reform Act

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the position of four-year high schools with a transfer age of 10 years in relation to the certain categories of schools qualifying for particular weightings under section 107 of DES circular 7/88 published on 6 September 1988 under section 34(2) of the Education Reform Act;

(2) if he will define the phrase "certain categories of schools" in relation to section 107 DES circular 7/88 published on 6 September 1988 under section 34(2) of the Education Reform Act;

(3) in what circumstances local education authorities have discretion over allocation of the aggregated school budget, with reference to section 107 of DES circular 7/88 published on 6 September 1988 under section 34(2) of the Education Reform Act.

Mr. Butcher: Under schemes of local management, at least 75 per cent. of the aggregated schools budget must be allocated with reference to the numbers and ages of pupils in schools. All pupils of the same age will carry with them the same resources, irrespective of which type of school they attend. However, LEAs will have the discretion to allocate up to 25 per cent. of the aggregated schools budget by means of others factors which take account of objective need and are applied by means of a consistent set of rules.

Paragraphs 107 to 128 of DES circular 7/88 give some examples of such additional factors, such as a small school curriculum protection factor. Where such factors are used it may be appropriate within them to use different weightings for categories of schools serving different age ranges. For example, a lump sum in a small school curriculum protection factor might take a different value for primary schools than for secondary schools, and different value for primary schools than for secondary schools, and different again in middle schools. Four-year high schools with a transfer age of 10 could form such a category.

Student Numbers

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the actual, and percentage increase in (a) university first degree full-time students,

(b) polytechnic and other higher education first degree full-time students, (c) part-time university students, (d) part-time polytechnic and other higher education students, and (e) full-time post graduate students since May 1986, with (c) and (d) expressed in actual numbers and full-time equivalents.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to secure a wider distribution of assisted places throughout England.

Mr. Butcher: This Department is contacting certain independent schools in four regions of the country with a view to widening the geographical availability of assisted places. The regions concerned are the North-East, the east midlands, South Yorkshire and the black country. We are approaching certain existing APS member schools in these regions to ascertain whether they would like more assisted places. We are also inviting certain schools which are not at present in the scheme, to apply to join. The target of 35,000 assisted places by the mid-1990s remains.

Headteachers (Resignations)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the number of headteachers in primary schools who resigned in each of the last five years; and what information he has on the reasons for resignation.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 6 July 1989]: The numbers of headteachers leaving full-time service in maintained nursery and primary schools in England in the last five years for which figures are available were as follows:

Year ending March	Number
1983	1,550
1984	1,670
1985	1,520
1986	1,460

EMPLOYMENT

Additional Child Care Allowance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he intends to introduce a £50 a week additional child care allowance for young mothers on YTS, equivalent to that which is paid under employment training.

Mr. Cope: No. My right hon. Friend does not consider such a provision to be in the best interests of the client group served by YTS.

Industrial Relations

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of public opinion regarding the Goverment's step-by-step reform of industrial relations legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: At each stage of the step-by-step reform of industrial relations and trade union legislation which the Government has pursued since 1979 we have submited our proposals for public consultation, and we have been able to frame legislation in the knowledge that the measures will be welcomed by employers, employees and the public generally. Our election manifestos, which contained many of our proposals in this area, have also clearly gained widespread public support.

Statutory Minimum Wage

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to how many countries in the EEC have a statutory minimum wage.

Mr. Nicholls: Five countries—France, Netherlands, Spain, Portugal and Luxembourg—have a statutory national minimum wage. In Ireland, as in the United Kingdom, a statutory minimum wage applies only in certain industries. Two countries—Belgium and Greece—have a general minimum wage laid down in national level collective agreements which are binding in law. Three countries—West Germany, Italy and Denmark—set minimum rates of pay by industry level, collective agreements applying in all sectors and binding in law.

Remploy Factory, Rutherglen (Closure)

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will ask the Remploy board to withdraw its proposal to close the Rutherglen factory.

Mr. Lee: No. I understand that discusions about the implications of the decision to close the Rutherglen factory are continuing between the company and the employees concerned.

Disabled Workers

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines are issued to Department of Employment staff regarding the distribution of quota exemption permits to employers failing to ensure that 3 per cent. of their work force are registered as disabled.

Mr. Lee: Instructions to disablement resettlement officers require them to consider the availability of suitable registered disabled people, and the degree of commitment shown by employers towards meeting their obligations under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

Small Businesses

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much his Department will be contributing to the Economic and Social Research Council's programme of research into small businesses, announced on 30 June, over the next four years.

Mr. Cope: My Department has agreed to pay ESRC a maximum of £120,000 towards the total cost of the programme. Payment will be made over a period of four years, at £30,000 per year, beginning in 1989-90.

Industrial Accidents

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he intends taking to reduce occupational accident rates to the 1981 levels.

Mr. Nicholls: Against a background of a substantial decline in fatal injury rates since 1981 and a more recent reversal in the rising trend of reported major injuries, the Government have reaffirmed their commitment to better health and safety at work by making financial provision allowing for real growth in HSE's activities over the next three years.

Tourism

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has had any representations about possible distortions to the United Kingdom's local economies resulting from the abolition of section 4 grants for tourist investment in England and their retention in Scotland and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have received a number of representations about the future of the section 4 scheme, some of which refer to the possible effects of retaining the scheme in Scotland and Wales. However, after considering the wide variety of views expressed, I am convinced that the continued prosperity and growth of tourism in England is no longer dependent on this form of support.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest figure available for the number of people who have found jobs through using the service of job clubs in Durham City jobcentre.

Mr. Lee: The job club based in Durham jobcentre was the first job club to open in Britain, in November 1984. Since that time, 579 people have attended the job club. Of these 395 (68 per cent.) actually left for jobs with an employer. This result represents a considerable achievement in helping long-term unemployed people.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the last 12 months for which figures are available have been through (a) job clubs and (b) Restart; and how many have (i) secured full-time employment or (ii) further retraining or educational opportunities.

Mr. Lee: During the period 30 May 1988 to 26 May 1989, 2,220,611 Restart interviews were carried out. Of these, 1,949,570 resulted in an offer of positive help being made and 1,611,606 resulted in such an offer being accepted.

We do not know how many people ultimately end up in a job or other opportunity as a result of their Restart interview. However, many will be referred to job clubs.

During the 12 months from 1 June 1988 to 31 May 1989, 131,249 people went through the job club programme; 91,665 (or 70 per cent.) left for a positive outcome; 71,016 went into jobs and a further 20,649 went into training, education or a place on the enterprise allowance scheme.

Taken together, these two programmes represent a considerable achievement in helping long-term unemployed people.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of unemployment in the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Lee: In May 1989 the number of unemployed claimants in Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency was 5,798 compared with 7,581 in May 1988, a fall of 1,783 or 23·5 per cent.

Dock Workers (Pensions)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will arrange for a survey of the pensions advice available to former registered dock workers.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no plans to survey the pensions advice available to former registered dock workers.

Employers are required to inform employees of main terms and conditions of employment, including the terms of any occupational pensions scheme which they offer. Employees may decide to make their own arrangements. Registered dock workers had their own occupational pensions scheme and this remains in existence following the abolition of the dock labour scheme.

SCOTLAND

Rent Arrears

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to introduce into Scotland arrangements similar to those announced recently for England and Wales whereby local authorities will be obliged to charge accumulated arrears of rent to other rent payers, through increasing their rents to cover the deficit in housing revenue accounts.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities in Scotland are required by paragraph 3(e) of schedule 15 to the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 to debit to their housing revenue accounts for each year the arrears of rent which have been written off in that year as irrecoverable. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to change this or other aspects of the financial management of local authority rent arrears.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the accumulated rent arrears owed to Scottish public housing authorities in March; and what was the figure in March of each of the five previous years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the accumulated rent arrears owed to Scottish public housing authorities is collected annually on the basis of arrears outstanding at 30 September. The amounts of arrears outstanding for each year from 1983 to 1988 are shown below:

	£ million
1983	[1]18·0
1984	[1]18·9
1985	[1]19·9
1986	[1] [2]24·3
1987	[1]26·7
1988	[1] [3]32·9

[1] Includes rates arrears of two local authorities.
[2] Includes unprocessed housing benefit awards for one authority.
[3] Excludes arrears of two local authorities.

1988
Adults—Seven
Young offender women prisoners—Nil

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the vocational courses of the industrial training boards, currently available to (a) adult and (b) young offender male prisoners, are also available to the same categories of women prisoners.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At present there is a catering accredited vocational training course available for women prisoners. Skill training is also provided in sewing, garment making, cookery and horticulture. A properly accredited course in hairdressing will be introduced later this year.

Remand Times

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) women and (b) men were put in prison while waiting for trial and subsequently freed during 1987 and 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regret that the information is not available.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest figure for the average time spent on remand for (a) men and (b) women.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The estimated average periods spent in custody on remand in 1988 were as follows:

	Days

Hostels

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many places for (a) men and (b) women are offered by hostels grant-aided under section 9 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980.

Mr. Lang: Hostels grant-aided by my right hon. and learned Friend under section 79 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980 presently offer a total of 95 places. Seventeen of these were specifically designated for women originally but the accommodation is now being allocated more flexibly in the light of demand.

Cornton Vale

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many body and strip searches in Cornton Vale in 1988 where carried out on prisoners who were pregnant.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available, since no distinction is made in the records between inmates who are not pregnant and those who are.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women prisoners who gave birth while imprisoned in Cornton Vale in 1988 (a) kept their babies with them following the births and (b) did not keep their babies following birth; and what was the length of service served by each such mother following the birth.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: One inmate, serving a three-month sentence, gave birth in Cornton Vale and kept her baby with her.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if any baby has remained with his or her mother in Cornton Vale prison beyond the age of 12 months during 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average number of days of in-service training provided to staff at Cornton Vale prison in 1987 and 1988.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions the electronics link between the central office and each room in Cornton Vale women's prison malfunctioned in 1988; and what was the average time taken for repairs to be carried out.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The system malfunctioned on 22 occasions in 1988. Each fault is recorded and rectified the same day or the next working day. When the period of malfunction was prolonged the inmate was moved temporarily to another cell. The average time required to complete repair work was one and a half hours.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of (a) female and (b) male staff at Cornton Vale prison in 1987 were on sick leave for (i) less than one week, (ii) between one week and up to one month, (iii) between one month and up to six months, and (iv) for six months or more.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information sought by the hon. Member is as follows:

Mr. Lang: It is estimated that at 31 March 1988, 86·9 per cent. of girls and 50·6 per cent. of boys in local authority care between the ages of 10 and 16 years were there for reasons not related to the commission of crimes or offences.

Prisoners (Outside Employment)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of (a) male and (b) female prisoners were employed outside their prisons in 1987 and 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is not available in the form requested. Approximately 57 inmates in 1987 and 64 in 1988 went to outside employment (including community placements) from a prison training for freedom hostel as part of their formal pre-release programme. Some establishments made similar arrangements for other inmates selected as suitable. But the number of inmates allowed outwith prison unescorted for whatever reason remains small.

Prison Statistics

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what percentage of (a) men and (b) women convicted of crimes of violence were sent to prison in 1988;

(2) what percentage of convicted (a) men and (b) women were sent to prison in 1988;

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not yet available. Figures for 1987 are given in the table:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on men or women first offenders who received a prison sentence as a percentage of those convicted of a first offence is not collected.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of women prisoners in 1987 and 1988 (a) had previously been in prison and (b) had previous convictions and non-custodial sentences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The only statistical information held centrally on the previous sentences and convictions of inmates is obtained from the inmates on reception into the penal establishment and may not be completely reliable. The figures from this source are as follows:

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest number of positive HIV antibody test results, and the cumulative total of people diagnosed with AIDS in each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of positive HIV antibody test results in Scotland which were reported to the Communicable Diseases (Scotland) Unit until 30 June 1989 is 1,668. A breakdown of this total by health board area is given in the following table. The cumulative total of people diagnosed with AIDS who were reported to the unit area until that date is 102. Of that number, Greater Glasgow and Lothian health boards accounted for 33 and 48 cases, respectively. Argyll and Clyde, Ayrshire and Arran, Fife, Forth Valley, Grampian, Highland, Lanarkshire and Tayside health boards accounted for the remainder. Where the number of cases in each board area for each category was under 10, the total in accordance with established practice is not published so as not to jeopardise medical confidentiality.

[1] Under 10.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cumulative total of people diagnosed with AIDS until 31 March; and how many of these had been diagnosed within the previous 12 months in each health board area in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cumulative total of people diagnosed with AIDS who were reported to the Communicable Diseases (Scotland) Unit until 31 March 1989 is 85. The number of these who were reported to the unit within the previous 12 months is 33. Of that number, Greater Glasgow and Lothian health boards accounted for 10 and 15 cases, respectively. Argyll and Clyde, Grampian and Tayside health boards accounted for the remainder. The number of cases in each board area was under 10, but in accordance with established practice the totals are not published so as not to jeopardise medical confidentiality. Figures relating to the previous 12 months may require to be adjusted when all relevant information is available to take account of cases reported within, but diagnosed before, the 12-month period in question.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cumulative total of people diagnosed with AIDS until 31 March 1988; and how many of these had been diagnosed in the 12 months prior to that date, in each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cumulative total of people diagnosed with AIDS who were reported to the Communicable Diseases (Scotland) Unit until 31 March 1988 is 52. The number of these who had been diagnosed within the previous 12 months is 34. Of that number, Greater Glasgow and Lothian health boards accounted for 15 and 14 cases, respectively. Fife, Grampian, Lanarkshire and Tayside health boards accounted for the remainder. The number of cases in each board area was under 10, but in accordance with established practice the total are not published so as not to jeopardise medical confidentiality.

Waterways (Discharges)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for consent to discharge unsatisfactory effluent into rivers have been granted by river purification boards so far in the present year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am aware of none. River purification boards, in granting consent to discharge sewage and trade effluents, attach conditions which ensure that, in the circumstances appropriate to each case, the quality of the receiving waters is not adversely affected.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sites in Scotland are authorised to discharge radioactive liquid waste to waterways.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are 112 sites in Scotland authorised to dispose of liquid radioactive waste, either to coastal waters or, in the majority of cases, to the sewerage system.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the estimated tonnage of sewage disposed of on an annual basis into the rivers (a) in Strathclyde and (b) in Scotland as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available in the form sought. Treated effluent from around 1 million people is discharged to non-tidal rivers in Strathclyde from the council's sewage treatment works; in Scotland as a whole the corresponding figure is some 1,600,000.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what percentage of claimants in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow and (b) Strathclyde were classified as long-term unemployed in April; and what plans he has to reduce that number.

Mr. Ian Lang: The number of claimants unemployed for over one year in the Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency and Strathclyde region in April 1989, and the percentage of total claimants that represented, is shown in the table below.

April 1989

	Claimants unemployed for over one year	As a percentage of total claimants
Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency	2,865	47·1
Strathclyde region	59,239	43·5

The number of claimants unemployed for over a year has fallen by around 30 per cent. in both the constituency and the region over the past two years. We aim to reduce unemployment even further by continuing with our successful economic policies.

"Care in the Community"

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conclusions he has reached about the recommendations in the Griffiths report on "Care in the Community"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The report by Sir Roy Griffiths on "Care in the Community" made far-reaching recommendations about the funding and delivery of community care services for the elderly, people with mental and physical disabilities and people with mental health problems. The report did not formally apply to Scotland, but I have been fully involved in the Government's detailed consideration of the report.

Our objectives for the development of community care in Scotland are the same as those set out in the statement made today by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health. We wish to enable people to live as full and independent a life as is possible for them in the community for as long as they wish to do so.

I have given detailed consideration to the policy implications for Scotland and have had regard to the many comments and representations that I received about Sir Roy Griffith's report. My proposals are as follows.

I have decided that local authorities in Scotland should be responsible for meeting the contribution from public funds towards the cost of the care of people in private and voluntary residential care and in nursing homes. They will, in collaboration with health boards, assess the care needs of individuals applying for such support and will reach a view on whether residential care is required or whether, in view of the primary objective of sustaining people in their own homes, a better outcome is possible by devising suitable individual packages of care. In future, therefore, the special income support system for those in homes will be ended, and local authorities will be responsible for providing any help required towards the costs of residential care in the cases where they decide that a residential home would be appropriate.

Local authorities will continue to meet the full cost of accommodating people in local authorities' own homes subject to their existing powers to make charges according to residents' ability to pay. These new arrangements will apply from April 1991 to all new claimants for income support. Existing residents of registered residential care or nursing homes at this date will remain eligible for income support under the present rules.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security is today announcing further details of these new arrangements.

Local authorities must have adequate resources for their new responsibilities. This will mean transferring to them an appropriate share of what the Government would otherwise have provided to support social security payments to people in residential and nursing home care. I shall be discussing the detailed financial implications with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and the necessary decisions will be taken in the public expenditure survey next year.

The new role of local authorities cannot be fully discharged without renewed emphasis on the importance of joint planning between local authorities and health boards, with the full involvement of the private and voluntary sectors. The health and social needs of individuals with mental and physical disabilities are inseparable and the assessment procedures which local authorities will establish must reflect this fact. Joint planning is already an established feature of health and social work policy in Scotland and we look to local authorities, working with health boards and other agencies, to ensure that it is effective. The community health services will continue to play an essential part in meeting the medical and nursing needs of people outside hospital.

Local authorities have traditionally been the biggest single provider of residential and community services in Scotland. More recently there has been growth in both the private and voluntary sectors and local authorities will want to make full use of these facilities in the interests of widening consumer choice. Local authorities should increasingly see themselves not just as providers but as enablers making full use of the range of provision available in the private and voluntary sector.

Because of the importance of the new responsibility placed on local authorities I will be giving careful consideration to suitable planning and monitoring arrangements to allow the implementation of the new policy in Scotland to be evaluated. It will be important that local authorities should have clear plans for the development of community care services, worked out in collaboration with health boards and the independent sector. I will expect authorities to have such plans and propose to take powers to call for reports on community care services. The arrangements already in operation through the joint consultative group comprising representatives of the social work services group and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities will continue to have an important part to play.

I have decided to make no change to the existing statutory functions of local authority and health boards for the registration and inspection of residential care and nursing homes.

I am considering carefully the question of improving liaison between general practitioners and social work departments to ensure that the latter are aware of patients' needs for social care. This could be achieved by informal day-to-day contact as well as more formal procedures. I will be discussing with local authorities, the representative medical bodies and health boards how this could be best achieved.

Finally, I propose to maintain the current arrangements which have generally worked well for sharing responsibility for services to the mentally ill between health and social work authorities, while improving further the arrangements for co-operation and co-ordination.

A White Paper will be published in the near future about the Government's overall proposals in response to the Griffiths report, including implications for community care in Scotland. It will contain more detail about legislative requirements, planning and monitoring systems and the basis of the new funding arrangements.

Warrant Sales

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that warrant sales will not be initiated against persons who have been duped by unscrupulous finance companies in Scotland.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have no plans to restrict the use of warrant sales to enforce court orders in respect of consumer credit. The existing law, in particular the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and regulations under it, provides appropriate protection for the consumer. The Act lays down requirements for the proper execution of regulated consumer credit agreements. Improperly executed agreements are enforceable only at the discretion of the court.

Dolphin Bathrooms (Finance Agreements)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the company, Dolphin Bathrooms, Drumage road, Worcester, England, and the signing of uncompleted finance agreement by pensioners in Clydesdale; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

Neither my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry not my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has received such representations.

Under the Consumer Credit Act a regulated agreement is not properly executed unless the document presented for signature embodies all the terms of the agreement, other than the implied terms. Improperly executed agreements are enforceable only at the discretion of the court.

Action on individual cases of alleged abuse in relation to consumer credit is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading and for the local authorities who both have relevant functions under the Consumer Credit Act 1974. If the hon. Gentleman has evidence of such abuse, I hope that he will give it to the Director General or to the trading standards department of the local authority concerned.

Cairngorm Ski-Lift Company

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what regular monitoring is carried out on the environmental management of the ski area managed by the Cairngorm Ski-Lift Company.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 12 June 1989]: Regular environmental monitoring of the area is carried out by the Highlands and Islands Development Board in line with the Cairngorm Estate management plan, a copy of which is lodged in the House of Commons Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Colonies (Pensions)

3. Mr. Michael Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how may ex-colonies now block the payment of pensions to United Kingdom citizens who worked in those colonies prior to independence; and if he will place in the Library a list of the countries concerned and the estimated pension arrears in each case.

Mrs. Chalker: There are no centralised comprehensive records of all those British nationals who are facing difficulty in obtaining their pensions from former colonies, or of the total sums involved. But we are aware of difficulties, of various sorts, in 10 former colonies. I shall place a list in the Library of the House.

Cambodia

9. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met a representative of the Cambodian Government based in Phnom Penh.

Mr. Eggar: We have no dealings with the so-called People's Republic of Kampuchea.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent to which the influence of Pol Pot and his associates can be eradicated from the Khmer Rouge in Cambodia.

Mr. Eggar: It is generally accepted that Pol Pot and his associates are totally unacceptable to the international community. Whether there are responsible Khmer Rouge elements who could be included in a quadripartite interim administration in Cambodia is primarily a matter for the Cambodian factions to decide.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he proposes in the United Kingdom's policy on the representation of Cambodia at the United Nations in the light of the anticipated Vietnamese withdrawal.

Mr. Eggar: Cambodia's representation at the United Nations is one of many issues to be reviewed in the context of a comprehensive political settlement. At this stage, we see no reason to change our present policy.

78. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's involvement in peace talks in Cambodia.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 27 June.

34. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on relations with Cambodia.

Mr. Eggar: We have relations neither with the current regime in Phnom Penh nor with the coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. We look forward to an early comprehensive settlement leading to a representative Government in Cambodia and will continue to work actively to this end.

Madrid Summit

13. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his best estimate of the time within which each of the conclusions reached at the Madrid summit will be implemented.

Mrs. Chalker: The conclusions of the Madrid European Council were placed in the Library of the House on 29 June. I have arranged for a list of those items where a timetable is indicated to be published in the Official Report.

Mrs. Chalker: The Prime Minister's statement on 29 June was widely welcomed, in the House and in the country.

West Africa

17. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he will do to assist in the economic development of Nigeria, Ghana, The Gambia and Sierra Leone in the next three years.

Mrs. Chalker: We expect to maintain substantial programmes of technical co-operation for Nigeria, Ghana, The Gambia and Sierra Leone in the next three years. We also aim to continue with project aid in Ghana and The Gambia. In addition, we expect to provide balance of payments support for all four countries, on condition that economic adjustment programmes, supported by the IMF and IBRD are in place.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present status of relations with Ghana.

Mrs. Chalker: Our relations with Ghana are close and friendly. The British Government play a significant role in support of Ghana's programme of economic re-structuring through our bilateral aid programme and the multilateral institutions. I visited Ghana from 28 to 30 June, accompanied by a group of British business men. During my visit I had discussions on a wide range of bilateral and multilateral issues with the Head of State, Flt. Lt. J. J. Rawlings, and other members of the Ghanaian Government.

67. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current British-Nigerian relations.

Mrs. Chalker: We enjoy close and warm relations with Nigeria. Following the state visit to the United Kingdom by President Babangida in May, I led a large party of United Kingdom business men to Nigeria on 25 and 26 June. I held talks with President Babangida and other members of the Nigerian Government, and opened a hydrocarbons seminar sponsored jointly by the DTI and the Energy Industries Council. Both my visit and the seminar seem to have been highly successful.

Semtex

18. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what statements have been issued by the Czechoslovakian Government regarding Semtex and the addition of a smelling agent.

Mr. Waldegrave: The most recent public statement by the Czechoslovak Government on this subject was the joint United Kingdom-Czech letter addressed to the United Nations Secretary-General on 15 June which urged support for work on a Convention to mark all plastic and sheet explosives for detection. This followed our successful sponsorship of a Security Council resolution (No. 635) on 14 June. I am arranging for a copy of this letter and of SCR 635 to be placed in the Library of the House.

29. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what international negotiations he has had about the marking of Semtex and other high explosives; and if he will make a statement.

41. Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what international negotiations he has had in respect of the marking of Semtex and other high explosives; and if he will make a statement.

55. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what international discussions he has had about the marking of Semtex and other high explosives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We held preliminary talks with Czechoslovakia earlier this year on the marking of plastic explosives for the purposes of detection. Further negotiations in the United Nations Security Council in New York (initiated during the British presidency of the council in May) led to the unanimous adoption on 14 June of Security Council resolution No. 635, calling for the drafting of an international convention on the marking of plastic and sheet explosives. Work on this is already under way in the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

Australia

19. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the outcome of the visit of the Australian Prime Minister to Britain in June.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Mr Hawke's visit last month was a great success. It was an indication of the desire of both Governments to give a new impetus to our bilateral relations. The visit set the seal on the dynamic relationship with Australia which has developed in the past year or two.

56. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures are being undertaken to strengthen United Kingdom-Australian relations.

Mr. Eggar: Following the recent successful visit to Britain by the Prime Minister of Australia, we will be seeking to ensure that a regular momentum of ministerial and official exchanges is maintained. Visits to Australia in the past twelve months by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Defence, for Trade and Industry, and for Education and Science have meant a thorough review of our relationship with Australia in these and other fields. We want to see the already strong co-operation in these areas maintained and, wherever possible, expanded.

Lebanon

20. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had discussions with his European Economic Community counterparts or members of the United Nations Security Council on seeking the early withdrawal of Syria from Lebanon.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. We and our European partners have consistently sought the withdrawal from Lebanon of all non-Lebanese troops other than UNIFIL. We fully support the efforts of the Arab League to bring this about.

82. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the Arab League's initiative towards the Lebanon.

Mr. Waldegrave: We and our European partners fully support the Arab League's efforts to find a solution to the crisis in Lebanon.

Single Market

21. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had on the removal of barriers by 1992 with other European Economic Community Foreign Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has reported to the House on the European Council at Madrid on 26-27 June, which reviewed progress on reducing technical and physical barriers within the Community.

58. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure that the 1992 programme does not soak up staff resources in the European Commission in areas of shortage of expertise, including the development directorate.

Mrs. Chalker: We shall continue to press for the most effective and efficient use of Commission staff, including flexible deployment and improved career planning, to ensure that staffing levels correspond to the needs arising from the Commission's tasks.

46. Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of the increase in the number of Green party representatives in the European Parliament on progress towards completion of the internal market.

Mrs. Chalker: The Green party is opposed to the single market programme. Its policies, if adopted, would sabotage the increasing prosperity which the single market will bring.

Hong Kong

22. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the resettlement of the citizens of Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: We have received many representations on this subject. During his visit to Hong Kong from 2 to 4 July my right hon. and learned Friend was able to discuss this with the Governor and his advisers, with members of the Executive and Legislative Councils, and with representatives of a wide range of opinion within the Hong Kong community.

53. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have taken place with other Commonwealth countries concerning the future of Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed the future of Hong Kong with the Australian Prime Minister during his recent visit. We have also been in touch with our Australian and Canadian counterparts who will attend this week's economic summit in Paris. We shall raise the matter there and at the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in the autumn.

44. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further action the Government intend to take to solve the problem of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: We are playing an active role in meetings of the Steering Committee set up by the international conference on Indo-Chinese refugees in Geneva on 13-14 June to maintain progress on the comprehensive plan of action adopted by the conference. We will seek to ensure, through bilateral and multilateral diplomacy, that agreements reached at the Conference are implemented as swiftly as possible and in a balanced way. As part of our contribution, we have agreed to resettle 2,000 Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong over the next three years.

32. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit Hong Kong.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Governor of Hong Kong; and what subjects were discussed.

64. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last visited Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs visited Hong Kong from 2 to 4 July and made a statement to the House on 5 July.

International Debt

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to meet other Foreign Ministers to discuss the problems of international debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has met Foreign Ministers of other countries recently at the OECD Ministerial meeting in June, at a meeting between representatives of EC and eight Latin American countries on 15 April in Grenada, at the European Council meetings in Madrid on 26-27 June and at a number of bilateral meetings. Debt was just one important issue discussed at these meetings. The next occasion may be at the economic summit in Paris on 14 to 16 July.

Human Rights

24. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the conference on security and co-operation in European human rights conference in Paris.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Paris meeting of the CSCE conference on the human dimension saw the thorough examination of implementation by CSCE participating states of their human rights commitments and the tabling of some 36 new proposals. These will be considered at the next meeting of the conference on the human dimension in Copenhagen in June 1990.

El Salvador

25. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he supports the United States Congress proposal to link aid to El Salvador to respect for human rights.

Mr. Eggar: Respect for human rights is one of several factors we take into account when determining the level and nature of our own bilateral aid to individual countries.

Poland

26. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet the Polish Foreign Minister to discuss Anglo-Polish relations.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs certainly hopes to meet the Polish Foreign Minister again, and expects to do so in the margins of the United Nations General Assembly meeting in September.

47. Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Polish relations.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my right hon. Friend to the replies that I gave on 6 April and 14 June.

Middle East

27. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on recent developments in the middle east peace process.

Mr. Waldegrave: In a major statement in Madrid last month the European Council appealed to the parties to seize the present opportunity to achieve peace. The Twelve made it clear that the election proposals put forward by Mr. Shamir could contribute to the peace process but that the PLO must participate in negotiations. We fear that the Likud decisions last week, if translated into Israeli Government policy, will make progress much more difficult.

50. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process.

60. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further action will be taken within the foreseeable future either by the United Kingdom or the Community in pursuance of a settlement of the Palestinian question.

Mr. Waldegrave: The European Council last month appealed to the parties to seize the present opportunity to make progress towards peace and set out the views of the Twelve on how this might be achieved.

Argentina

28. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he has made towards restoring diplomatic relations with Argentina.

Mr. Eggar: It is premature to think of restoring diplomatic relations with Argentina; progress must first be made on removing practical barriers and increasing confidence.

But we have noted remarks made by President Menem and Foreign Minister Cavallo during and after the inauguration. We have consistently stressed our readiness to work for more normal relations with Argentina by making progress on practical matters while excluding sovereignty. If the Argentines are now moving towards that position, then a prospect for progress may be opening up.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have made to the offer of President Carlos Menem of Argentina in relation to talks on the resumption of bilateral relations.

Mr. Eggar: We have as yet received no formal proposal from President Menem but we have noted reports that he would be willing to move towards a resumption of diplomatic relations.

We have consistently expressed our readiness to work for more normal relations with Argentina by making progress on practical issues, while excluding sovereignty. If the Argentines are now moving towards that position, then a prospect for progress may be opening up.

It is premature to be talking of a resumption of diplomatic relations; progress must first be made on removing practical barriers to trade and communications and on rebuilding confidence.

China

30. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is considering trade sanctions against the Government of China.

81. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is considering trade sanctions against the Government of China.

Mr. Eggar: No, for the reasons given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 22 June.

84. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with EEC ministers on events now taking place in China; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The events in China were discussed by Foreign Ministers of the Twelve on 12 June, when it was agreed that the Presidency should carry out a demarche stressing the Twelve's grave concern at the continuing repression in China. The subject was discussed again at the European Council in Madrid, resulting in the declaration on China of 27 June.

85. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the ambassador of the People's Republic of China; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Christchurch (Mr. Adley) on 16 June.

62. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he has made to the Chinese authorities appealing for commutation of recent death sentences on humanitarian grounds.

Mr. Eggar: On 17 June the EC Twelve made a demarche to the Chinese authorities appealing for clemency for the first persons sentenced to death in connection with the demonstrations. On 21 June the Foreign and Commonwealth Office issued a statement deeply deploring the first executions and renewing our appeal to the Chinese authorities not to persecute those who had campaigned for their democratic rights. On 27 June the European Council also expressed its dismay and urged that the executions be stopped.

54. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions are currently taking place aimed at achieving a united international stance towards recent developments in the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Eggar: We have kept in close contact with our friends and partners over reactions to events in China. The European Council issued a declaration on China on 27 June. China will also be discussed at the forthcoming economic summit in Paris.

39. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has been making to the Government of China on the subject of human rights.

Mr. Eggar: We and our EC partners have firmly condemned the brutal actions of the Chinese Government. I made this plain to the Chinese chargé d'affaires on 5 June. On 27 June the European Council adopted a declaration on China which reiterated our condemnation and called on the Chinese authorities to respect human rights. In accordance with this declaration, ambassadors representing the Twelve have been instructed to seek the admission of independent observers to attend trials and visit prisons.

South Africa

31. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current policy of Her Majesty's Government on meeting the African National Congress, the United Democratic Front and the South African Government.

Mrs. Chalker: Our policy is to maintain contact with all shades of opinion in South Africa.

90. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what continued pressure the Government is exercising to secure the release of Mr. Nelson Mandela and the lifting of restrictions on the African National Congress.

Mrs. Chalker: We continue to urge the South African Government to release, immediately and unconditionally, Mr. Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners and to unban the African National Congress and other political parties.

36. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his meeting with F. W. de Klerk of South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I held talks with Mr. F. W. de Klerk which were friendly and businesslike. They covered a range of issues, notably progress towards Namibian independence and the process of constitutional reform in South Africa. We naturally took the opportunity to express concern for the unconditional release of Mr. Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners, the lifting of the state of emergency and many other issues.

33. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have recently been made to the South African Government with a view to ending apartheid in that country.

Mrs. Chalker: We take every opportunity to encourage change in South Africa leading to the peaceful replacement of apartheid by a non-racial, representative system of government acceptable to all South Africans.

Israel

35. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Israel.

86. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Israeli relations.

Mr. Waldegrave: Relations with Israel are good and we are in close touch with the Israeli Government on Arab-Israel and other issues.

75. Mr. Richard Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit the Israeli occupied territories and the Gaza Strip.

Mr. Waldegrave: None at present.

65. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek an undertaking from the Israeli Government to renounce unlawful violence against the population of areas under Israeli military occupation.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Israeli authorities are well aware of our concern at their use of excessive force in the occupied territories.

Eastern Europe

37. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British relations with eastern Europe.

63. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British relations with the countries of eastern Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: British relations with eastern Europe vary from country to country. We have closest relations with countries such as Hungary and Poland which are making substantial steps forward towards freedom and democracy.

Pakistan

38. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had talks with Prime Minister Bhutto on 6 July in London and with the Pakistan Foreign Minister on 7 July. They discussed a wide range of issues including United Kingdom-Pakistan relations, Afghanistan and other regional developments. My right hon. and learned Friend also made it clear we are looking forward to seeing Pakistan rejoin the Commonwealth.

Angola

40. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to assist in the peace process in Angola; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We warmly welcome the progress made towards internal reconciliation in Angola, notably the meeting between President dos Santos and Dr. Savimbi on 22 June and the agreement to implement a ceasefire from 24 June. We are urging both sides to respect the ceasefire and to continue to show flexibility in the difficult negotiations that lie ahead.

89. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest assessment of the prospects for internal reconciliation in Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: We warmly welcome the progress made towards internal reconciliation in Angola, notably the meeting between President dos Santos and Dr. Savimbi on 22 June and the agreement to implement a ceasefire from 24 June. We are urging both sides to respect the ceasefire and to continue to show flexibility in the difficult negotiations that lie ahead.

Hungary

42. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of the Hungarian Government; and what matters were discussed.

83. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Hungarian relations.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend met Hungarian State Minister, Imre Pozsgay, on 25 April. I have just returned from a three-day visit to Hungary where I met Prime Minister Nemeth, Mr. Pozsgay and a wide range of Government party and Opposition leaders. I also laid a wreath at the grave of Imre Nagy and placed flowers at the memorial to Raoul Wallenberg. I expressed the strong support of the Government—and, I believe, of the House—for the process of reform taking place in Hungary.

Drugs

43. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures are being taken to assist the governments of drug producing countries in the destruction of drugs.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom has contributed some £10·7 million since 1982 to the United Nations fund for drug abuse control, which is the main multilateral channel for providing assistance to developing countries in combating drug production. The United Kingdom also spent around £3 million in 1988-89 on bilateral projects. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary recently announced a series of further measures to combat drug production, trafficking and consumption, including an international conference to be held in the United Kingdom in 1990.

Central America

45. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on progress towards the establishment of the central American Parliament.

Mr. Eggar: There has been no progress since my reply to the hon. Member's question of 27 October 1988. The Costa Rican Parliament has yet to ratify the treaty establishing the central American Parliament.

Nicaragua

48. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government have any plans to send an official group of observers to the Nicaraguan elections.

Mr. Eggar: We have told the Nicaraguan Government that we would be ready to appoint an official observer if an invitation is received. We await their response.

68. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with the progress towards democracy being made by Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: No. When my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister saw President Ortega on 8 May, she made clear her concern that recent legislative reforms fall far short of the democratisation promised and were potentially restrictive. Recent events have tended to confirm our fears. We are also concerned at Nicaraguan attempts to impose unacceptable restrictions on diplomats' ability to report on the election campaign. We hope that steps will be taken by the Nicaraguan Government to rectify this situation.

51. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will visit Nicaragua in the near future to discuss democracy in that country.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans at present to visit Nicaragua.

Refuseniks

49. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the USSR about the difficulties of refuseniks.

Mr. Waldegrave: We press the Soviet authorities regularly on individual refusenik cases and of the wider need for institutionalised reform. Over the last year at least 68 long-term refuseniks about whom we have made representations have been allowed to leave the Soviet Union.

Lebanon

52. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received since 1 January on the plight of British hostages believed to be held in the Lebanon.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received a number of representations from hon. Members, members of the public and interested organisations on the plight of the British hostages detained in Lebanon.

Terrorism

57. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to stress the importance of closer co-operation in the defeat of international terrorism at the next appropriate international gathering.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is a central strand of our policy to promote international co-operation to combat terrorism. We have taken, and will continue to take, a leading role to this effect in international organisations. The economic summit Seven group, which meets this weekend, will provide another opportunity to press for closer co-operation.

Antarctica

59. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress was made in discussions with the Prime Minister of Australia concerning the convention on Antarctica.

Mr. Eggar: In discussion with the Australian Prime Minister and his colleagues, we said that we still believed the convention offered the best means of protecting the Antarctic environment. We made it clear that we intended to ratify the convention and that we were prepared to consider further measures for the protection of the Antarctic environment, but not at the expense of the convention. For their part, the Australian Ministers explained their view of the Antarctic minerals convention and their decision not to sign it.

Slavery

66. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in achieving international co-ordination to tackle the problem of child slavery.

Mr. Eggar: Over 85 countries are parties to the Slavery Convention of 1926 (as amended by the Protocol of 1953), and 102 countries to the supplementary convention on the abolition of slavery, the slave trade and institutions and practices similar to slavery.

Since 1974, a United Nations working group on slavery has met annually to review the problems of slavery, including child slavery, and has recommended remedial action.

We hope that the draft United Nations convention on the rights of the child will shortly be adopted and will further strengthen international efforts to combat child slavery in all its forms.

Soviet Union (Train Disaster)

69. Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what medical assistance was made available by Her Majesty's Government to the Soviet Union after the recent train disaster there.

Mr. Waldegrave: We supplied air beds, artificial ventilators and other urgently needed equipment and pharmaceuticals to a value of £68,000. We also helped with arrangements for two teams of specialists from Bristol, Leeds, London, Manchester and South Grampian to travel to Chelyabinsk to help treat the victims. (One of the teams was organised by the World Association for Emergency and Disaster Medicine). We also offered to arrange treatment in the United Kingdom.

Brazil

70. Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Brazilian Government on environmental matters.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Lord President to the hon. Member for Barnsley West and Penistone (Mr. McKay) on 27 June. During his visit my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development signed a memorandum of understanding on environmental co-operation with the Brazilian Government. In addition, we have had a number of detailed discussions at ministerial and official level with the Brazilian authorities on these matters in recent months.

European Parliament

71. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the consequences for European Community policies of the new political composition of the European Parliament.

Mrs. Chalker: We hope that the European Parliament will continue to make its full contribution to the Community legislative process and to effective inter-institutional co-operation in the Community.

Iraq (Kurdish Minority)

72. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effect the Iraqi treatment of its Kurdish minority has had on British relations with Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have repeatedly expressed to the Iraqi Government our concern for the treatment of the Kurdish community in Iraq and the need to respect their human rights. We firmly believe that the only way of influenceing Iraq's attitude to these problems is by maintaining an effective working relationship.

World Economic Summit

73. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will raise the issue of international debt at the world economic summit.

Mrs. Chalker: We expect international debt to be one of the important subjects covered at the economic summit.

Guatemala

74. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent information he has about disappearances of political activists in Guatemala.

Mr. Eggar: Our information is that disappearances in Guatemala are occurring at a rate of about 25 a month. A number of these are attributable to criminal activity but there is little doubt that many are politically motivated. Although the numbers are greatly reduced compared with the early 80s, the situation is a cause of continuing concern. Like the UN special adviser on human rights in Guatemala, we do not, however, believe that the present civilian Government either condone or carry out abductions.

Namibia

76. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the current state of implementation of the Namibian peace accords.

Mrs. Chalker: We welcome recent progress on the implementation of the UN plan for Namibian independence.

Immigration

77. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current delays in preparing explanatory statements for refusal of entry clearance in (a) Bombay and (b) Islamabad.

Mr. Eggar: On average, explanatory statements are prepared and forwarded to the appellate authorities within three months of receipt of an appeal in Bombay and within four to six weeks in Islamabad.

Individual cases may take longer, depending on what further inquiries the entry clearance officer needs to make in the light of the grounds for appeal.

Vietnam

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects were discussed when he last met the Foreign Minister of Vietnam.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs last met the Foreign Minister of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam on 28 June. They discussed how to follow up the agreements reached in Geneva for resolving the problem of Vietnamese boat people and the prospects for a comprehensive political settlement in Cambodia.

Cuba

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of United Kingdom-Cuban relations.

Mr. Eggar: We maintain normal diplomatic relations with Cuba. The Cuban First Vice Foreign Minister, Dr. Jose Viera Linarea, is visiting the United Kingdom from 9 to 15 July.

EC Social Charter

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, when he next meets West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the European Community social charter will be discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will next see Herr Genscher and other EC colleagues at the economic summit in Paris on 14 to 16 July. The social charter will not be on the agenda.

Rain Forests

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice Her Majesty's embassy and consulates in Brazil have given United Kingdom companies seeking to carry on economic enterprises within areas of rain forest.

Mr. Eggar: Our officials are in regular contact with companies involved in the rain forest. As my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development pointed out during his recent visit to Brazil, it is for the Brazilian authorities to decide what action they should take to enforce their laws. However, all companies should be concerned not only to comply with the laws of the country in which they operate but also to ensure that their operations are environmentally friendly.

Bulgaria

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Bulgaria about its expulsion of large numbers of the Turkish ethnic minority in that country; and what consultations he has had with other European Economic Community Governments regarding assistance to Turkey to meet the costs of resettlement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Dame Jill Knight) on 10 July.

We have discussed the political aspects of this issue with our EC partners, who, like us, are particularly concerned about developments in the region. As yet, no decision has been taken about EC aid for the resettlement of refugees from Bulgaria.

UNESCO

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans for renewing the United Kingdom's membership of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We are following developments at UNESCO closely and hope that the director general and member states will be able to bring about the changes that are needed. Before we can consider reviewing our position on membership, we will need to be convinced that fundamental reforms are being implemented both in UNESCO's administration and in its programmes. This will certainly not be possible until after UNESCO's general conference in November, which will adopt, and approve funding for, the organisation's new medium-term plan for 1990-95 and its programme and budget for 1990-91.

Second World War (Records)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now authorise the release through the Public Records Office of the special operations executive records from the second world war; and why none of these records has been made public to date.

Mr. Eggar: No. Established criteria provide for certain records to be retained or closed for periods longer than 30 years under appropriate sections of the Public Records Act 1958 as amended.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Large Loaves

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will investigate the effects of the linkage between Stewarts and Crazy Prices in Northern Ireland and Associated British Foods-Allied Bakeries on the price of large loaves in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

Under United Kingdom competition legislation, it falls to the Director-General of Fair Trading to keep commercial activities in the United Kingdom under review. The director general's office has considered the competitive situation in the retail sale of bread in Northern Ireland including the operating relationship between Associated British Foods-Allied Bakers and Stewarts and Crazy Prices, and has taken into account the report of the General Consumer Council for Northern Ireland, published on 29 June, on the price of a large loaf in Northern Ireland. The director general does not consider that formal action under the competition legislation is warranted. If the hon. Member has any evidence of monopoly abuse, anti-competitive or restrictive trade practices he should draw it to the attention of the Director General of Fair Trading.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to ensure genuine competition in the retail sale of large loaves in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

Under United Kingdom competition legislation it falls to the Director General of Fair Trading to keep commercial activities in the United Kingdom under review. The director general's office has considered the competitive situation in the retail sale of bread in Northern Ireland, and has taken into account the report of the General Consumer Council for Northern Ireland, published on 29 June, on the price of a large loaf in Northern Ireland but does not consider that formal action under the competition legislation is warranted. If the hon. Member has any evidence of monopoly abuse, anti-competitive or restrictive trade practices he should draw it to the attention of the Director General of Fair Trading.

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of planning inquiries held by his Department in the last year, the average for each of the past five years, the numbers of those appeals that were allowed and the numbers of those allowed appeals when the relevant local council's planning officer had recommended that the application be allowed.

Mr. Peter Walker: In 1988, 178 planning inquiries were heard and 67 appeals were allowed following inquiries. Over the years 1983-87 inclusive an annual average of 179 inquiries was heard, and an average of 78 appeals was allowed following inquiries. Information about the numbers of appeals allowed when the relevant local council's planning officer had recommended that the application be allowed is not recorded centrally.

Housing Land

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department uses the same method of calculating the adequacy of housing land at planning inquiries as the methodology specified for local councils to use by Welsh Office circular 47/84, "Land for Housing in Wales."

Mr. Peter Walker: The methodology suggested for calculating the adequacy of housing land supply in Wales remains as set down in Welsh Office circular 47/84. The advice on methodology in circular 47/84 applies equally to decisions made by myself and my inspectors.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the adequacy of housing land in (a) Cardiff and (b) Wales under the latest calculations using the methodology laid down in Welsh Office circular 47/84, "Land for Housing in Wales."

Mr. Peter Walker: Up-to-date figures on housing land supply in Cardiff are not available centrally but a joint land availability study for the county of South Glamorgan is expected to be published soon.

Studies for most other counties have been published in recent years but it is not possible to calculate a single figure for Wales as a whole.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales why the Land Authority for Wales uses a method of calculating the adequacy of housing land different from that laid down in Welsh Office circular 47/84, "Land for Housing in Wales"; and how he ensures that no confusion or distortion is achieved by the use of the different methods of calculation.

Mr. Peter Walker: Joint land availability studies published by the Land Authority for Wales in co-operation with house builders' representatives and local authorities normally use the method suggested in Welsh Office circular 47/84. However, in certain circumstances, especially where the structure plan is out of date, the group may agree to present an alternative methodology if they believe this is appropriate. The reasoning is fully explained in the published report and any differences of view among group members recorded.

Water Undertakings

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on the disclosure of information by (a) Welsh Water and (b) other water public limited companies operating wholly or partly in Wales in the event of the privatisation of the existing water authorities; and what changes are proposed to the information water authorities currently have to make available to the public.

Mr. Peter Walker: The underlying policy on the disclosure of information by privatised water and sewerage undertakers will be that applicable to registered limited companies rather than that appropriate to public corporations. In addition the Water Act 1989, earlier water legislation, and the conditions of appointment of water and sewerage undertakers under the 1989 Act, contain a wide range of requirements for making information available to the public, either direct or through myself, the National Rivers Authority, or the director general. For example, water undertakers will be required for the first time to publish information about the quality of water supplied for domestic purposes, both regularly and in response to individual requests for information. The National Rivers Authority will be required to maintain a public register including matters such as details of analyses of samples of effluent discharged by sewerage undertakers into controlled waters. The director general's register, which will also be a public document, will contain all key matters concerning appointments, and including information such as undertakings given under section 20(5)(b) relating to compliance programmes. Under section 34, I may arrange for the publication of information connected with the carrying out of water and sewerage functions as may appear to be in the public interest. And the director general's annual report, which must be laid before Parliament, will contain a general survey of developments within the scope of his functions.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what obligations he imposes on statutory water companies operating partly or wholly in Wales to disclose information about their structure, finances and activities; and what are the comparable obligations of private limited companies.

Mr. Peter Walker: The requirements for disclosure of information about the structure, finances and activities of the statutory water companies and private limited companies are set out in company legislation.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy that full information should be accessible to the public in respect of statutory water companies operating partly or wholly in Wales to at least the same extent as any ordinary public limited company.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government regard the statutory water company model as an outdated method of running a business. I hope that statutory water companies will take early advantage of the opportunity offered by the Water Act 1989 to become registered companies under a simplified conversion procedure, which will bring them within the scope of the full range of modern company legislation.

NHS Beds

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many National Health Service beds (a) in Wales and (b) by health authority are provided in accommodation built (i) before 1914, (ii) before 1939, (iii) between 1939 and 1979 and (iv) since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information is not available centrally.

Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools currently in use in Wales, and by local education authority, were built (a) before 1914, (b) before 1939, (c) between 1939 and 1979, and (d) since 1979 showing for each category the numbers of primary, secondary or special schools, and the total number of pupils.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Details of the ages of school buildings are not held centrally.

Sewage Treatment Works (Rhymney Valley)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report the applications he has received for the lowering of discharge consents of sewage works in the Rhymney valley.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received two applications for time-limited variations of consent conditions as follows:

Draethen STW
Rudry STW

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those sewage treatment works in the Rhymney valley which have failed to meet their discharge consents during the last 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Walker: All sewage treatment works in the Rhymney valley met their consent conditions during 1988 (the latest period for which figures are available).

Community Care

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about future arrangements for promoting effective community care.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government have laid the foundations in Wales over recent years for the effective development of community care for those who are not cared for appropriately in hospitals or residential care.

In the past, services for people with mental illness and mental handicaps have been imbalanced and poorly distributed across Wales. People have had to travel too far to receive care and the choice has too often been between care in isolated institutions, or of little or no support in people's own homes and communities.

The all-Wales mental handicap strategy has, over the past six years, made possible an unprecedented expansion of community services. For example, the number of people receiving support in their own homes has risen from just 41 in 1982-83 to 1,898 in 1987-88; the number of places in ordinary housing for adults from 66 to 614; the number of places in short-term care in domestic settings from 34 to 404; and the number of people receiving new community-based day-care services from 37 to 809. This has made possible a substantial reduction in the number inappropriately cared for in institutions, with a drop between 1983 and 1987 of almost 20 per cent. in the number of mental handicap hospital in-patients, and a fall of nearly 60 per cent. in the number of children in such hospitals. To build on this success, I have allocated £18,658 million towards the development of the new pattern of services in 1989-90, an increase of nearly £5 million over expenditure in 1988-89.

In June this year I published, following a highly successful public consultation, the all-Wales strategy for the development of mental illness services. This builds on the significant expansion of new patterns of services which has come about in recent years and which has been assisted by the recurrent additional investment of £13 million which the Welsh Office has made available. The strategy lays special emphasis on fully effective care and support for the most vulnerable, including those who require support in their own homes and communities after periods of care as hospital in-patients. I look forward to the joint plans from health and social services authorities and other agencies which the strategy calls for, and which will be the basis for development and investment by all concerned, including additional support from the Welsh Office, to secure the development throughout Wales of quality local services.

The greatest challenge in health and social care facing us in Wales, as elsewhere in the western world, is providing adequately for increasing numbers of very elderly people. Our massive investment in health care, including community health services, with an increase in expenditure in real terms of almost 45 per cent. since 1978-79, has led to record levels of patient care from which the elderly in particular have benefited. There have also been significant developments in personal social services based on an increase in net expenditure in real terms since 1978-79 of 40 per cent. This has made possible, for example, a 65 per cent. increase in the provision of aids to people of 65 and over, and a 40 per cent. increase in the number of home helps. In addition, there has been an unprecedented expansion of sheltered housing; since 1984-85 more than 4,000 additional units have been provided by housing associations and local authorities.

To help health and social service authorities and other agencies to develop services further, in 1987 my Department launched an initiative on the care of the elderly. This aims to stimulate new developments by grant-aiding demonstration and innovative projects delivering services in a more flexible, co-ordinated and cost-effective way. Some 30 projects are now being funded for up to five years at a total cost of £6,261,000. We are appraising continuously the progress of the initiative and, in considering projects submitted next year, we will be placing more emphasis on encouraging the development of domiciliary care. My Department is undertaking surveys of services for disabled people provided by district health authorities, local authorities and voluntary organisations in Wales. Their needs will also be examined in the next round of health authorities' strategic planning. The results of those exercises will be available next year, but preliminary guidance for planning purposes will be issued shortly.

Last year I introduced a new grant scheme to support training for local authority staff and others who deal with child abuse. I have expanded the programme this year to provide grants totalling £483,000. I have also approved a new initiative to improve services to families with children under five. Under this, grant totalling up to £400,000 will be available to the voluntary sector over three years. I am considering carefully what might be done more generally to promote better child care and support for families.

These distinctive strategies and initiatives for Wales have been developed by taking advantage of my responsibility for a wide range of health and social services, housing and related programmes and the direct relationship between my Department and the key agencies. Nonetheless, those who need help with social care, over and above that which their families and friends provide, have had to look primarily to two separate sources: to the social services authorities for home care, day care and some residential care services, but to social security offices for payments towards the cost of places in private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes. In Wales, as elsewhere in the United Kingdom, this has led to a significant and unplanned expansion of residential and nursing home care which has not been subject to any assessment of individuals' need for such provision. This has not enabled the public agencies to secure the best packages of care for all individuals, although many have undoubtedly benefited from residential and nursing home care, and has worked against the generally accepted objective of securing, wherever appropriate, that people are supported in their own homes and communities.

The Government have been reviewing these arrangements following Sir Roy Griffiths's report "Community Care: Agenda for Action" which was published in March 1988. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security have today announced the Government's conclusions. The main conclusions apply equally to Wales. In particular, I propose that in future there shall be a single budget for those seeking help from public funds for the cost of social care, whether in their own homes or in a residential or nursing home, which will enable decisions to be taken about the right package of care to meet an individual's particular needs at any point in time. The proposals will remove any perverse incentive for people to go into residential or nursing home care regardless of their needs.

The delivery of effective community care depends on close co-operation at all levels between personal social services and health authorities, family practitioner services, housing authorities and associations, and the voluntary and private sectors, and on all concerned having close regard to the views of those who benefit from services, including any informal carers. The experience of the existing strategies and initiatives in Wales shows that the right place for leadership in respect of the public funding of social care rests with the social services authorities. I propose, therefore, that they should have the responsibility and the budget for such care and other costs not met by the social security system. Community health and family practitioner services will continue to have responsibility and the budgets to ensure the provision of essential health care for those who need it.

In addition to the joint plans already required under the all-Wales mental illness and mental handicap strategies, I propose that social care plans for all groups should be produced by the social services authorities, in collaboration with other relevant agencies and interests. Detailed guidance on the arrangements for these plans will be issued in due course.

Local authorities are increasingly seeing the value of securing effective social care from whatever source can best provide it, rather than automatically providing it directly themselves. There are good examples in Wales of the use of voluntary and private sector providers in this way. I shall expect local authorities to build on this experience. In this spirit, it is proposed that the local authorities should continue to meet the costs of people in their own residential homes, subject to their existing power to make charges according to residents' ability to pay. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security is not proposing any change to the benefit rules for the residents of such homes.

As in the rest of Great Britain, those already in registered residential and nursing home care before the new arrangements come into effect will remain eligible for financial help under the existing benefit arrangements.

With resources transferred from the social security programme, I shall make available additional resources to the local authorities commensurate with their new responsibilities. There will be detailed discussions with representatives of the local authorities and other key interests about the financial and wider implications of these proposals to ensure the successful introduction of the new arrangements, which I propose should take effect from April 1991.

The action which has already been taken in Wales to promote more effective community care has been widely commended. It has shown that it is possible for the Welsh Office, working in close co-operation with health and social services authorities and other agencies, to provide a favourable context for the provision of quality services which meet individual's needs in a sensitive way and which help and support, rather than undermine, informal networks of care provided by families and friends, which for most people will always constitute by far the greater part of the social care. The arrangements I have described in this statement will build on these achievements and enable all concerned to ensure that the people of Wales have every opportunity to preserve their independence for as long as possible as valued members of their communities.

HEALTH

Immunisation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report the uptake figures for measles, mumps and rubella immunisation in each health authority in England for each of the last 10 years and at the latest available date.

Mr. Freeman: The available information is not precisely in the form requested. Information on mumps has been collected only from 1 October 1988 with the introduction of the measles, mumps and rubella vaccine. This data will be available later in the year. Two-year uptake rates for measles are available only from 1984, by district health authority, as these authorities were formed only in 1982 as a result of the NHS restructuring. Rubella uptake rates are available only nationally. The available information is given in the table.

Mental Handicap

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of long-stay patients discharged from each mental handicap hospital in England and Wales since 1981.

Mr. Freeman: Provision of the information for each hospital would involve disproportionate cost. The table shows, for each district health authority, the number of discharges, excluding transfers and deaths, of mentally handicapped patients after a stay of one year or more in an NHS mental handicap hospital or unit in England. The figures in the table may not exactly equate to numbers of people, because some may have been discharged several times during the period. The information for 1981 could not be provided without disproportionate cost due to boundary changes to the district health authorities' areas. The information for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Freeman: The figures for England and Wales and the readily available data for usual residents of Kettering district health authority are shown in the tables.

Warrington Drug Dependency Clinic

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of people treated within Warrington drug dependency clinic in the latest available year.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for local services rests with the local statutory authorities. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Warrington health authority since the information he has requested is not held centrally.

Medical Services (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement concerning the future of the chiropody service within the district of Durham.

Mr. Freeman: The provision of chiropody services in Durham is the responsibility of Durham district health authority. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of Durham DHA for the information he requires.

"Drug Tariff"

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the monthly issue by the Department of Health of the publication "Drug Tariff" costs; and what consideration he has given to circulating this information more cheaply.

Mr. Freeman: Information on the cost of production of the "Drug Tariff" is commercially confidential, but I can assure my hon. Friend that the work has been put out to competitive tender by HMSO and awarded to the cheapest tenderer.

Whitley Councils

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will lay before the House the Government's responses to the third report of the Social Services Committee of 1988-89 on Whitley councils.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has done so today.

Census Test

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the analysis of the proportion of householders in each census test area who returned a completed form is now available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Full evaluation of the test will take some time, but the analysis referred to is now available. Of those households recorded as present on census test night, 60 per cent. returned a completed form. The response rates for each area in the test were as follows.

Test area in:	Response (per cent.)
Wandsworth and Merton	54
Birmingham	42
Scarborough	73
Berwickshire	94
East Lothian	89
Edinburgh	75

In general, response rates were in line with expectations based on the results of previous voluntary census tests. The test areas were chosen to cover a variety of circumstances and the variation in response rates reflects differences in such factors as the difficulty of contacting householders and of recruiting enumerators.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Selective Investment Brokers Ltd.

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what negotiations or discussions his Department had with third parties about the affairs of Selective Investment Brokers Ltd., between January 1985 and June 1986.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 5 July 1989]: None. The company was mentioned in the context of investigations into Wessex Trust conducted by the Wiltshire police at the request of the Director of Public Prosecutions in the course of which assistance was provided by my Department.

Industrial Location

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what action he has taken to persuade European companies to locate in the United Kingdom in the light of the opening of the Channel tunnel and the advent of the single market in 1992;

(2) what advice he has given to European companies on the advantages of the Channel tunnel in attracting investment in the United Kingdom from Europe.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 11 July 1989]: The DTI's Invest in Britain Bureau organises a number of commercially sponsored seminars in Europe each year aimed at attracting investment into the United Kingdom generally and highlighting the benefits of the assisted areas.

In promoting the United Kingdom as the "Preferred Location" it draws on a wide range of selling points which include its competitive wage rates, low social on-costs, low corporate taxation, skilled work force, membership of the Community, the impending completion of the single European market, the already good connections to the mainland, particularly from the east coast ports and the enhanced physical communications that will be brought about by the completion of the Channel tunnel.

Opium Derivatives

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the supply of opium derivatives is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [pursuant to his reply, 20 April 1989, c. 254-260]: As recommended by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, we shall work towards the creation of a single EC market in opium derivatives. We envisage the development of reciprocal arrangements among EC countries for both promoting and supervising trade between them in these and other narcotic drugs, taking account of production within the Community and imports from elsewhere.

Shipyards

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement outlining the powers of the European Economic Commission in relation to investment proposals for shipyards, with particular reference to proposals to re-open shipyards.

Mr. Newton: If shipbuilding were to resume at North East Shipbuilders Ltd. without their agreement, the Commission would be in a position to take infraction proceedings against the United Kingdom under article 85 of the treaty of Rome. The Commission could also open a procedure under article 93(2) of the treaty of Rome into all matters notified last December. As a result of such a procedure the Commission could require state aid that they decided was outwith the terms of the sixth directive on aid to shipbuilding to be repaid.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government concerning companies seeking to re-open shipyards owned by British Shipbuilders without intervention assistance, being required to submit proposals.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my statement today.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has consulted the European Economic Community Commission on proposals ro reopen shipyards when the purchasers were not seeking any intervention assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: In December 1988 the Government notified their intention to close North East Shipbuilders Limited as part of a package covering all aspects of support for the corporation under the sixth directive on aid to shipbuilding with the exception of the terms for the disposal of Govan which had already been cleared. The Commission took the closure into account in deciding not to raise objection to the extensive assistance that British Shipbuilders had required and to the manner in which the Government proposed to deal with this. Any proposal for a return to shipbuilding at North East Shipbuilders Limited would give the Commission grounds for re-opening all the matters cleared last December. In these circumstances we could only proceed sensibly on the basis of consulting the Commission about possible proposals.

CIVIL SERVICE

Plain English

Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether there has been any progress made in efforts in the Civil Service to produce documents in plain English and to reduce redundancy of forms and their contents.

Mr. Luce: Since the Government's forms initiative began in 1982, Departments have made good progress in producing forms and leaflets which are easier to understand and simpler to complete. A review of the forms that the Government send to business has recently been carried out by my office. This makes recommendations to reduce the numbers of forms sent out, and to make those that remain clearer and easier to complete. Copies of the review report have been placed in the Libraries of the House of Commons and the House of Lords.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what progress has been made on achieving equality of opportunity within the Civil Service for women and those from the ethnic minorities.

Mr. Luce: We are making good progress in this area. My Department will, next week, publish a report on progress achieved in implementing the programme of action to increase equality of opportunity for women in the Civil Service. This shows that opportunities for combining a family and a career are improving, and that we are seeing more women in middle and top management jobs. As I told the House on 22 May, a similar programme of action to increase equality of opportunity for ethnic minority staff and applicants is currently being drawn up in consultation with departments.

Agency Status

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many branches of the Civil Service now have agency status; and in which Departments.

Mr. Richard Luce [holding answer 11 July 1989]: A total of eight Government activities have been set up as executive agencies. These are:

Agency	Department
Vehicle inspectorate	Department of Transport
Companies House	Department of Trade and Industry
HMSO
National weights and measures laboratory	Department of Trade and Industry
Warren Spring laboratory	Department of Trade and Industry
Resettlement agency	Department of Social Security
Civil Service College	Office of the Minister for the Civil Service
QEII conference centre	Property Services Agency

I shall be making a full progress report to the House shortly.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Bank of England (Privatisation)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to privatise the Bank of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The Government have no plans to privatise the Bank of England.

Civil Service Pensions

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether changes are planned in the occupational pension arrangements for part-time staff working in the Civil Service.

Mr. Brooke: New, more flexible pension arrangements for part-time staff, most of whom are women, are to be introduced from 1 January 1990. They will provide greater opportunity for part-time staff to earn pension benefits. The new arrangements complement the alternative working patterns initiative, and will help the Civil Service to tap into sources of skilled and experienced staff who may hitherto have been deterred by the traditional working pattern. The changes will also enable useful simplification of administrative procedures to be made.

Civil Servants (Transfers)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement about the arrangements for making advances of salary available to civil servants who have to move their homes as a result of being transferred in the public interest to a new place of work.

Mr. Brooke: A civil servant who has to move home on transfer in the public interest to a new place of work may be eligible for an advance of salary. Under the current arrangements an advance may be made if the net proceeds of the sale of the existing property, if any, and the maximum mortgage available from commercial sources are not sufficient to cover the cost of a suitable property at the new station. The current maximum advance payable within upper and lower limits is six months' pay. The limits were last revised in 1981. The upper limit is £9,500 with a further £1,000 for transfers into London.

The arrangements have recently been reviewed in the light of changes in the property market and in salaries since 1981. The intention is to allow departments more flexibility in making advances on transfer. It will no longer be an essential requirement, for example, that the individual should first obtain the maximum commercial mortgage. It is also proposed that the maximum advance should be six months' pay, as previously, but that the limits expressed in cash terms should be abolished.

Rationalisation Schemes

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recommendations have been made by the inter-departmental committee set up to consider whether Dep^ tments should enjoy a share of benefits accruing from rationalisation schemes and disposals of property declared surplus.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

At present, receipts from the disposal of Government civil property are in general accounted for by the PSA and accrue to the Exchequer. From 1 April 1990, responsibility for the existing civil estate will be divided between individual Departments and the PSA, as announced in the statement of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 25 May 1988, Official Report, column 339. From that date, individual Departments will account for receipts in respect of disposals from their departmental estates and will seek permission from the Treasury to reapply all or part of proceeds to other parts of their programme offering good value for money. The same arrangements apply to the PSA which will have responsibility for the common user element of the civil estate and could involve assistance to Departments that have had to move in order to create worthwhile rationalisation opportunities. This issue is among the matters kept under review by the official level interdepartmental committee which deals with accommodation matters generally on the Government's civil estate.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Squad

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General what reasons have been given to the serious fraud squad by the Egyptian authorities for their refusal to provide papers relating to Mr. Fayed; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Investigations into allegations that criminal offences have been committed by Mr. Fayed are continuing. It would not be appropriate for me to provide more specific information.

Malicious Communications Act 1988

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General, how many prosecutions there have been under the Malicious Communications Act 1988; and what was their outcome.

The Attorney-General: I regret that such information is not held centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been created in the last five years in the United Kingdom and in the European Community as a whole.

Mr. Cope: Employment estimates are not yet available for many EC countries after 1987. The table shows the data requested for the five-year period from 1982 to 1987.

Civilian Employment
(figures in thousands)

	1982	1987	Change	Percentage Change
United Kingdom[1]	23,584	25,060	+1,476	+6·3
Rest of EC	97,569	98,920	+1,351	+1·4

[1]Over the five-year period 1983 to 1988 the rise was 11·1 per cent. for the United Kingdom.
Source: United Kingdom(DE) Rest of EC(Eurostat)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage reduction in employment in the manufacturing industry sector in the north-west from 1979 to 1988.

Mr. Lee: Between June 1979 and June 1988 the number of employees in employment in the manufacturing industry sector in the North West region fell by 36 per cent.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been unemployed for 12 months or more in the constituencies of (a) Burnley, (b) Pendle, (c) Hyndburn, (d) Rossendale and (e) Darwen.

Mr. Lee: The information is available from the Library. The following table shows for each parliamentary constituency requested, the number of unemployed claimants who had been unemployed for 12 months or more in April 1989, the latest available date.

Long-Term Unemployed Claimants—April 1989

Parliamentary constituency	Unemployed over 12 months
Burnley	1,188
Pendle	714
Hyndburn	650
Rossendale and Darwen	532

Industrial Action (Public Services)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given to amending industrial relations law to deal with unofficial industrial action taken by those providing vital public services.

Mr. Nicholls: Recent industrial action in certain public sector services has been irresponsible and unnecessary. The Government are considering what needs to be done to protect the public interest, and we shall not hesitate to come forward with appropriate proposals for legislation if that proves necessary.

Social Charter

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice he has received from the EEC Commission about the numbers and scope of directives which it intends to propose under the social charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The European Commission have put forward a preliminary draft proposal for a Community charter of fundamental social rights, which they suggest should be adopted by a solemn declaration of all 12 heads of state and Government. The Commission's preliminary draft of the proposal includes an invitation to the Commission to draw up a programme of work by June 1990. No details of such a programme have been received from the Commission.

Trade Union Safety Representatives

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current estimated number of trade union safety representatives as defined by the 1977 Safety Representatives and Safety Committee Regulations under the Health and Safety at Work, etc Act; and what was the number in 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: The health and Safety Executive does not keep records of the number of trade union safety representatives, but the Trades Union Congress currently estimates the numbers to be between 90,000 and 100,000.

My right hon. Friend has no reason to believe that this number has changed significantly since 1978.

Industrial Accidents

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps is he taking to deal with the increase in accidents in construction, agriculture and forestry.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission's plan of work for 1989-90 and beyond approved in April by my right hon. Friend contains a number of extra measures designed to stimulate improvements in the health and safety performance of the construction, agricultural and associated industries. For construction these include reaching a target of 100 inspectors engaged on inspection in 1990, targeting inspections on the more hazardous activities and on the quality of site management, preparing new regulations to improve the management of health and safety on construction sites. Similarly for agriculture these include allocating additional resources to the agricultural inspectorate to be targeted primarily on high risk premises, certification of agricultural pesticide users under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986, and new guidance on obligations under these and related regulations.

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any further plans to tackle the problems of under-reporting of accidents to the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: One and a half million copies of HSE's leaflet "Report that accident" have been distributed since 1987. The recent construction blitz campaign reminded small contractors of their reporting obligations. Also, in May and June 1988 an advertising campaign was directed specifically at under-reporting in the footwear and clothing industries and the timber and wooded furniture industries.

Tourism

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment following his announcement about the future of tourism, which bodies will deal with strategic marketing and marketing policy.

Mr. Lee: The British Tourist Authority, the national and English regional tourist boards will carry out these functions.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his announcement of his tourism review will affect the distribution of marketing functions between the British Tourist Authority and the national tourist boards.

Mr. Lee: There will be no change in the distribution of marketing functions.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now place in the Library a full copy of the tourism review carried out by his officials and PA Consulting Group.

Mr. Lee: No. The report was an internal document which provided a basis for the decisions which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced last week.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which of the operations of the British Tourist Authority he envisages as being suitable for movement into the private sector.

Mr. Lee: A range of activities will be considered.

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the top 20 tourist attractions in the South-West in numbers visiting or attending; and if he will indicate the numbers, in each instance, for the previous comparable year.

Mr. Lee: The English tourist board's annual survey of visits to attractions gives the following figures for the West Country regional tourist board area in 1987 and 1988.

European Social Fund

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what allocation the United Kingdom has been awarded by the European social fund for 1989; and how much had been allocated to each region.

Mr. Cope: The Commission of the European Communities has confirmed that for 1989 the United Kingdom has been allocated £418 million towards employment and training schemes from the European social fund. This represents 18·14 per cent. of the fund's budget and means that the United Kingdom is once again receiving more than any other Community member state.

The regional breakdown is as follows:

The North	22,125,684
Yorkshire and Humberside	20,755,226
East midlands	6,599,478

Co-operative Development Agency

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what decisions have been reached on the future of the Co-operative Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The ceiling of financial provision available to support the CDA under current legislation will be reached in 1990-91, and we have been considering whether there is a case for any further support.

The CDA itself considered the issue and proposed that it should become a body mainly devoted to the promotion of employee share ownership, particularly employee share ownership plans. It proposed that its existing role in providing a central forum for co-operative development should be drawn from and financed by those using it, and that much of its work to promote co-operative development could now be carried out by other organisations.

The Government are firmly in favour of measures to extend the financial participation of employees in their employing organisations but we see no need for public support for another body to promote ESOPs, when there are a number of private organisations interested and active in this field. The Government did, however, agree with the CDA's view that its original remit could now be carried out by other organisations. We therefore consulted relevant organisations in the co-operative movement seeking their comments on a proposal to wind up the CDA by the time its current grant ceiling is reached.

Fourteen organisations commented. A number were opposed to closure, largely on the grounds that the CDA should continue to provide a central focus for co-operative development; others pointed to the overlap between the CDA's work and their own. Careful consideration of all the comments made has confirmed our view that the work of the CDA has now reached the stage where it can be carried on by the well-established network of local agencies and other business support bodies, including the new training and enterprise councils which will include co-operatives as well as other forms of business in their plans for enterprise support. We do not consider that co-operative organisations need a Government-sponsored body to co-ordinate or represent them or to take on new functions.

Our decision is therefore that the agency's life should not be extended when current funding runs out. We propose to wind up the agency by order, under the affirmative resolution procedure, during the next parliamentary session. The Government will continue to take a keen interest in co-operatives, which we see as one expression of the fast developing enterprise culture in Britain.

I would like to express my appreciation to the chairman, director, board and staff of the CDA for the enthusiasm and commitment that they have shown. They have achieved a good deal over the past 11 years and deserve credit for a job well done.

Unofficial Strikes

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to introduce legislation to curb unofficial strikes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Recent industrial action in certain public sector services has been irresponsible and unnecessary. The Government is considering what needs to be done to protect the public interest, and will not hesitate to come forward with appropriate proposals for legislation if that proves necessary.

WALES

Welsh Health Authority

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what inflation assumptions were built into Welsh health authority budget allocations for the fiscal year 1989-90 and plans for fiscal year 1990-91 and 1991-92;

(2) what was (a) the hospital and community health services' pay and price deflator for Wales, for each fiscal year since 1979, (b) the inflation assumption used in National Health Service budget plans in each year from 1978-79 to 191-92 and (c) the gross domestic product deflator for Wales for each year from 1978-79.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested cannot be provided exactly in the form asked for. The table shows in column 1 the percentage increase in hospital and community health services pay and prices; the figures are based on English data as no information is collected in Wales. The second column shows the provision for inflation made in district health authorities' initial revenue allocations each year. Because the figures relate to allocations made at the beginning of each year, they do not take account of any supplementary funding made available in year to meet the excess costs of pay awards (mainly for review bodies staff) over and above the initial inflation allowance. They are not therefore comparable with the figures in column 1. Each health authority makes its own plans for inflation in setting its budget for the year ahead; however, these details are not held centrally.

[1] Projected figures are not available.
[2] Inflation assumptions as contained in the initial recurrent revenue allocations to DHAs.
[3] The information provided relates to calendar years. The figure for 1987-88 is provisional and projections for subsequent years are not available.
[4] Prior to the introduction of cash planning in 1982-83 the inflation allowances made available to health authorities in each financial year reflected the full year effect on spending of forecast increases in pay and prices in the previous November to March and the full and part year effect of further increases forecast to occur during the course of the financial year.
[5] Based on Her Majesty's Treasury forecast of the increase in the gross domestic product deflator.

Tourist Board

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consequences are envisaged for the Wales Tourist Board as the result of the announcements contained in the reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Yardley, (Mr. Bevan) by the right hon. Member for Sutton Coldfield, (Mr. Fowler) on 6 July, Official Report, column 278; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No direct consequences are envisaged for the Wales tourist board. The more effective arrangements for promoting Britain overseas will provide the board, working with the industry, with the opportunity to increase visitor numbers to Wales in collaboration with the British Tourist Authority.

Mountain Lane School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will allocate extra funds to Clwyd local education authority to enable the authority to supply an extra mobile classroom at Mountain Lane school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. Clwyd local education authority must decide their priorities for the use of the capital resources available to them. Capital provision for education in Wales was increased by 11 per cent. in 1989-90.

House Repair Grant

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales why there was a delay of a month in notification to Welsh local authorities of changes in the amount of mandatory repairs grant from 75 per cent. to 20 per cent. for landlords under sections 130 and 131 of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Peter Walker: My officials wrote to Welsh Local authorities notifying them of the statutory instrument and that an explanatory circular was in preparation as soon as was practicable after the House approved the draft order. The letter issued on 10 January and the order came into effect on 19 January.

Beach Pollution

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will pay an official visit to the beaches along the Welsh side of the Bristol channel to observe the degree of pollution apparent both on the beach and in the sea.

Mr. Peter Walker: Monitoring of bathing waters is the responsibility of the appropriate water authority.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Cambodia

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what preparations he is making to restore Government-to-Government aid in Cambodia in the light of the anticipated Vietnamese withdrawal.

Mr. Chris Patten: We keep our policy on aid to Cambodia under regular review. Decisions cannot be taken before Vietnam ends it illegal occupation and an acceptable political settlement is in place.

Overseas Aid and Development

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will next meet his ministerial colleagues of the European Community to discuss overseas development policy and the level of overseas assistance.

Mr. Chris Patten: At the next Development Council of Ministers in November, when I expect to discuss a wide range of Community development policy questions.

Yemen

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the extra aid given to the People's Democratic Republic of the Yemen as a result of the floods earlier in 1989.

Mr. Chris Patten: We gave relief assistance totalling £179,000 in response to this emergency. This aid took the form of tents, blankets, foodstuffs, water purification tablets and vehicles.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Departmental Costs

Mr. Boswell: To ask the secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the running cost limit for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Department.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The running cost limit for 1989-90 for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is being set at £543·03 million. Further details of provision for individual Departments are set out in the appropriate Estimates volumes.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Statutory Instruments

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the numbers of statutory instruments issued by each Government Department in each of the last five years indicating how many were subject to affirmative procedure and how many to negative procedure.

Mr. Wakeham: The information is not held centrally in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cambodia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings his Department's representatives has had with (a) the Government of Kampuchea, (b) the Government of Vietnam, (c) the Khmer Rouge and (d) Prince Sihanouk.

Mr. Eggar: We have no dealings with the so-called Government of Kampuchea or with the Khmer Rouge. We have regular contact with the Government of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam through our respective embassies. My noble Friend the Minister of State, Lord Glenarthur, paid the first ever visit by a British Minister to the SRV. from 9 to 14 April 1989. Most recently, the Vietnamese Foreign Minister called on my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and my noble Friend the Minister of State on 28 June 1989. We have regular meetings with Prince Sihanouk and his representatives. The Prince saw my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend he Secretary of State during his visit to London in October 1988.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will be the United Kingdom's representatives at the Paris conference on the future of Cambodia.

Mr. Eggar: The composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the international conference on Cambodia in Paris, to which formal invitations have yet to be issued, has not yet been decided. But we expect to be invited and to play an active part.

Nuclear Weapons (Testing)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government's plan to respond to the proposal made by the Soviet Union on 24 June that a global moratorium be implemented on the testing of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. The Soviet proposal is not a new one. A moratorium would not be compatible with our policy on the testing of nuclear weapons which was set out by the then Minister of State, my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor), in answer to a question on 27 June 1988.

Cyprus

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the number of times Ministers have had discussions about the Cyprus problem with President Vassiliou and the leader of the Turkish Cypriot community, Mr. Raul Denktash, respectively, since the last presidential elections in Cyprus.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has discussed the Cyprus problem with President Vassiliou on five occasions since his election in February 1988. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs was present at two of those meetings and has also met Mr. Vassiliou separately on three other occasions. I attended one of those meetings and have also met the President twice separately. For reasons that are well known to the House, Mr. Denktash has not been received by Ministers during that period.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans exist to ensure the safe disposal of both chlorofluorocarbon refrigerant material and chlorofluorocarbon II in the foam in refrigeration and air-cooling equipment under the control of his Department.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today by the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley).

Vietnamese Boat People

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what finance has been made available to the Hong Kong authorities for the care and settlement of Vietnamese boat people over each of the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: The following funds have been made available to the Hong Kong Government for the care of the Vietnamese boat people from the United Nations High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR)'s general programme:

	US$ million
1985	4·3
1986	4·8
1987	4·5
1988	9·2
1989 (to date)	7·0

In addition to our regular contributions to the UNHCR's general programme, we have also contributed the following funds to UNHCR for specific Hong Kong purposes:

	£ million
1988	1·1
1989	7·1

We have also pledged this year £4·5 million directly to the Hong Kong Government for emergency accommodation, and £5 million towards the cost of a planned refugee processing centre in the Philippines which would accommodate Vietnamese refugees now in Hong Kong.

Falkland Islands

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present permanent population of the Falkland Islands; and what were the figures for the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: At the last census held on 16 November 1986, the population of the Falkland Islands was 1,916. At the 1980 census, the population was 1,813. No other figures are available.

Hong Kong

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people formerly resident in Hong Kong and all associated territories and holding British passports have been accepted for permanent settlement into the United Kingdom in each year since 1979.

Mr. Renton: I have been asked to reply:

The numbers of British dependent territory citizens from Hong Kong accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom in the years 1979-88 are published in table 22 of the 1987 and 1988 editions of the annual Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom" (Cm. 415 and Cm. 726), copies of which are in the Library.

DEFENCE

Toxic Waste

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last had a meeting with the chief inspector of Her Majesty's pollution inspectorate to discuss the future programme for the existing radioactive and toxic wastes arising from the defence programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend has had no recent meeting with the director of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution or his chief inspectors, but officials are in frequent contact with staff of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, in addition to their attendance at periodic inter departmental official meetings chaired by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any Ministry of Defence site has ever violated environmental regulations agreed with Her Majesty's pollution inspectorate, the Department of Health and Transport, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Welsh and Scottish Offices, or the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, in regard to the storage, transport or disposal of radioactive and toxic wastes.

Mr. Sainsbury: Although the Ministry of Defence as a Crown Department has immunity from certain regulations, it seeks to observe standards which are no less stringent than those required of civil operators. Unfortunately, accidents occur from time to time and may for example lead to minor dispersals of toxic or radioactive materials in contravention of the "agreements" reached with regulatory Departments. All such incidents are reported to the regulatory authorities, fully investigated and measures taken to avoid their recurrence.

Venture Glider

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has reached a decision on the type of motor glider selected to replace the Venture at volunteer gliding schools.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. A decision is expected very shortly.

Explosive Devices (Coastal Waters)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, by geographical area, the number of second world war explosive devices which have been discovered in British coastal waters in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Precise records of the number of such finds in each of the past ten years are not maintained. Each year, however, some 30 or 40 mines and 100 torpedoes, bombs or large calibre shells of world war I or world war II origin are found in British coastal waters.

Tornado Crash (RAF Akrotiri)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the crash of a Tornado aircraft at RAF Akrotiri on 4 July.

Mr. Neubert: On 4 July a Tornado F3 aircraft (tail number ZE 834) of No. 23 squadron, RAF Leeming, on detachment to RAF Akrotiri, suffered a collapsed nosewheel on landing after a routine training mission. Both crew members ejected successfully sustaining only minor injuries. The aircraft came to rest just off the runway. The extent of the damage sustained in this accident has not yet been established.

Environmental Pollution

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to conduct a full environmental pollution audit of the military nuclear fuel cycle, including data from countries where the uranium used in the United Kingdom programme was mined and milled; and if he will publish the results at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. The environmental impact of the processing of nuclear materials in the defence nuclear programme for which this department is responsible has been evaluated and conforms fully with United Kingdom legislative requirements. As regards standards in overseas countries, I have nothing to add to the reply I gave on 9 February at column 766 to the hon. Member for Meirionydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas).

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if radioactive wastes arising from the deployment of United Kingdom's nuclear forces abroad on land or at sea is (a) disposed of in foreign countries or (b) returned to the United Kingdom for disposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 25 January 1989 at column 653. Contingency arrangements exist for the handling of radioactive wastes arising, either on a routine or emergency basis, from United Kingdom military operations overseas. The decision between disposal abroad under locally approved arrangements and return to the United Kingdom depends on circumstances; it would not be in the national interest to elaborate.

Low Flying

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to deploy regularly a Skyguard fire control radar system to monitor the heights of low flying aircraft in areas of urban concentration such as Swansea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Near-Miss (West Germany)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the recent incident involving an RAF Phantom based at Wildenrath in West Germany having to take evasive action to avoid collision with a Canberra aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: On 6 July, during a routine training sortie, a RAF Phantom based at RAF Wildenrath in West Germany took evasive action to avoid a RAF Canberra aircraft operating in the same area. The Phantom navigator, believing the aircraft to be in danger, ejected successfully, suffering minor injuries. Neither aircraft was damaged. The Phantom returned to land safely at RAF Wildenrath. A unit inquiry into the incident has been convened.

RAF Upper Heyford

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 13 June, Official Report, column 689 he will give details of the assessment made following design work carried out at Royal Air Force Upper Heyford.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 18 April 1989 at column 111. No decisions have been taken to proceed with these projects but preliminary design work commissioned from the PSA in August 1988 indicates that the estimated costs of modifying the facilities at RAF Upper Heyford would be as follows:

	£ million
Additions to the flight simulator facility	1·0
Additions to the engine shop	1·2
Additions to the avionics maintenance shop	1·7

Birkbeck College

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why inaccurate information about Birkbeck college was given to the Sunday Times and the Mail on Sunday on Saturday 1 July by officials of his Department; what action is being taken against those responsible; what arrangements are being made to help repair the potential damage done to Birkbeck's reputation; and what changes are being made in the personnel and organisation of his Department's press office.

Mr. Sainsbury: On the evening of Friday 30 June officials were asked to check the facts concerning any Ministry of Defence contracts with Birkbeck college. In an effort to be helpful, and in the limited time available, they did their best to do so. Nothing that was said confirmed the assertions made in the subsequent press reports. Changes in the MOD press office are neither called for nor planned.

My noble Friend Lord Trefgarne wrote to the noble Baroness, Lady Blackstone, Master of Birkbeck College, on 6 July explaining that the MOD was entirely satisfied with the work that the college was doing and that no papers had been recalled on security grounds.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist to ensure the safe disposal of both chlorofluorocarbon refrigerant materials and chlorofluorocarbon II in the foam in refrigeration and air-cooling equipment under the control of his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment.

Headquarter Contracts

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the total amounts paid by his Department in respect of headquarter contracts to United Kingdom-based contractors in each of the six years up to 31 March.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 6 July 1989]: Total payments made in respect of headquarters contracts to United Kingdom-based contractors in each of the six years to 31 March 1989 were as follows:

	£ million
1983-84	6,212
1984-85	6,879
1985-86	7,260

	£ million
1986-87	7,501
1987-88	8,316
1988-89	8,041

Q32. Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding the national heritage.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

Legal Reform

Q53. Mr. Malins: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding the new proposals for reform of the legal profession.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has received a number of representations on the Government's consultation papers, which were published with a view to seeing that the public has the best possible access to legal services of sound quality.

NHS Reform

Q58. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has had on the National Health Service White Paper.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health has received some 8,500 representations on the White Paper; many correspondents give strong support for its objectives and endorse its proposals.

Part-time Work

Q75. Mr. Marland: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding part-time work.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister receives representations about part-time working from time to time.

I know that the Select Committee on Employment is currently undertaking an inquiry into part-time working and I look forward to its report when it becomes available.

Human Rights (USSR)

Q108. Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding human rights in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

We receive many representations which reflect the deep concern in this country about human rights in the Soviet Union. We are continuing to press the Soviet authorities over a range of individual cases, and over the wider need for institutionalised reform. These efforts do bear fruit. In the past year, 68 refusenik cases which we have raised have been resolved satisfactorily.

Human Rights (China)

Q115. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding human rights in China.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister received a delegation of Chinese students on 28 June. My right hon. Friend has also received a number of representations expressing shock and outrage at recent events in China. These are, of course, sentiments that the British Government share.

Rural Housing

Q127. Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding rural housing policy.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister receives representations on rural housing policy from time to time.

Water Privatisation

Q134. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has had on water privatisation.

Q145. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has had on water privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister receives many representations about water privatisation, which provides the best framework and conditions for achieving even higher standards of water quality.

Channel Tunnel

Q141. Mr. Cyril Townsend: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister frequently receives representations about various aspects of the Channel tunnel.

Disabled People

Q152. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Prime Minister when Her Majesty's Government expect to publish a plain person's guide to the Disabled Persons (Services, Representation and Consultation) Act 1986.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

We have no plans to do so. Local authorities have a statutory duty to publish information about the welfare services they provide and, as a matter of good practice, we would expect them to produce this in a form which is readily understandable.

World Trade

Q170. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received in connection with world trade.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has received a number of representations about world trade. The Government will continue to combat protectionism and to work for open world markets which are of benefit to our exporters and the world economy as a whole.

Privatisation

Q191. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has had on privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister receives a number of representations from time to time regarding the privatisation programme.

Railway Strikes

Q192. Mr. John Browne: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received representations regarding the recent train strikes.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has received a number of representations on this matter. The rail strikes are pointless and damaging and have shown no regard to the interests of passengers.

Common Agricultural Policy

Q202. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received recent representations regarding reform of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

The Government frequently receive representations about reform of the common agricultural policy (CAP). The measures agreed at the February 1988 European Council, particularly those providing for budgetary discipline and for the stabilisation of agricultural production and expenditure, represent the most significant reforms to date. The benefits of reform are already apparent and farmers can look to the future with increasing confidence. The Government's policy is to build on those major reforms in EC negotiations and to work with our GATT partners to fulfil the commitment to achieve progressive and substantial reductions in agricultural support and protection.

Madrid Summit

Q205. Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received any recent representations regarding the Madrid summit.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

The statement my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made in this House on 29 June has been widely welcomed.

TRANSPORT

New Road Schemes

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the COBA criteria for construction of new roads being studied in his London transport assessment studies will apply with, or without modification, to any selected road schemes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Any road scheme arising from the London assessment studies will be appraised using the Department's normal scheme appraisal methodology. This includes a full economic and environmental assessment.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what significance is attached to saving in journey time in current COBA assessments of new road schemes; and what weighting is given therein to design speeds of new roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: User benefits on COBA are derived from savings in journey times on links and at junctions, accidents and vehicle operating costs. In a representative scheme 90 per cent. of the benefits could be attributable to time savings. Design speeds are consistent with the anticipated vehicle speeds on the road and are contained in Department of Transport departmental standard TD9/81, "Road Layout and Geometry: Highway Link Design."

A43

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he hopes to announce the preferred route for the A43 Silverstone bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are giving careful consideration to route options to the east or west of the village. The choice is difficult. We hope to announce the preferred route soon.

Crash Barriers

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road accidents in the last five years have involved a vehicle crashing through a crash barrier on the central reservation of a motorway or a dual carriageway road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table shows the number of accidents on motorways or dual carriageway roads in which at least one vehicle left the carriageway offside on to the central reservation. The number of accidents is broken down by whether the vehicle entering the central reservation hit the central crash barrier, and whether it crossed the central reserve.

The number of accidents in which a vehicle crossed the central reserve after hitting the central crash barrier increased from 94 in 1983 to 118 in 1987, and increase of 26 per cent. This is partly due to the installation of more crash barriers, as reflected in an increase of 54 per cent. in the number of accidents where a vehicle hit the central barrier, but only 12 per cent. where no central barrier was involved.

Accidents involving a vehicle leaving the carriageway onto central reservation: Great Britain, 1983-1987

Number of accidents where at least one vehicle left the carriageway offside onto the central reservation	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	Percentage change 1987-83
Vehicle hit central barrier
Stayed on reservation or rebounded	579	767	752	844	918	59
Crossed central reservation	94	87	90	115	118	26
Total	669	852	834	953	1,031	54
Vehicle did not hit central barrier
Stayed on reservation or rebounded	1,414	1,509	1,572	1,585	1,545	9
Crossed central reservation	600	755	710	754	720	20
Total	1,990	2,231	2,254	2,299	2,236	12
All accidents
Stayed on reservation or rebounded	1,993	2,276	2,324	2,429	2,463	24
Crossed central reservation	694	842	800	869	838	21
Total	2,659	3,083	3,088	3,252	3,267	23

Note.—Because some accidents will have involved more than one vehicle, the totals are less than the sum of their constituent parts.

The following table shows the number of accidents involving vehicles on motorways or dual carriageway roads, from 1983 to 1987, where the vehicle either crossed the central reservation or the vehicle hit the central crash barrier and crossed the central reservation.

Number of accidents

	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Accidents where a vehicle crossed the central reservation	694	842	800	869	838
Accidents where a vehicle hit the central crash barrier and crossed the central reservation	94	87	90	115	118

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will review the specification for crash barriers on motorways and dual carriageways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The specification for safety fences is kept under continual review and changes are introduced whenever justified. A recent example is the introduction, subject to approval under European law, of a design of wire rope safety fence that I announced on 22 December 1988, Official Report, cols. 415-16.

A range of higher containment fences and barriers has been developed. By definition, they are considerably less forgiving than existing safety fences. The Department is therefore undertaking a careful assessment of the costs and benefits of their possible deployment. Some further impact testing is required before this assessment can be fully completed. Research currently being carried out in some other European countries will be relevant. It will be some time before a decision can be made.

Drink-Driving (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide details of the number of road transport drink-related accidents in Durham, giving the most recent figures and annual figures for the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table below shows the total number of accidents in Durham in each of the years 1983 to 1987, and the number of accidents in which at least one driver or rider failed a breath test. This is the most common measure of drink-related accidents. These figures will be affected by the proportion of drivers who are tested after an injury crash. It is not possible to produce precise statistics of drink-related accidents because some drivers will have been too severely injured to be breath-tested. The blood alcohol level of drivers who die within 12 hours of an accident are provided from coroner's reports. These are not always complete and exclude those drivers who die after this period but within the 30-day rule for a road accident fatality.

Road accidents in Durham in which the driver failed the breath test: 1983-87

	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Accidents involving breath test failures	103	136	143	113	127
All road accidents	1,709	1,771	1,789	1,835	1,789

Road Works (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why road works are currently taking place on the A1, the M1 and the M62 in South Yorkshire; and how long he expects this situation to continue.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The road works currently being carried out on these roads are essential major maintenance operations. They form part of our phased programme of works, much of which has to be undertaken in the summer months.

The works consist of a series of schemes covering both carriageway strengthening and bridge maintenance works. We expect completion of these on the A1(M) and M62 by November and on the M1 by next February.

Motorway Signs

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department carries out any inspection on the maintenance of motorway signs.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Detailed inspection and maintenance of motorway signs is carried out by the Department's agents in accordance with the frequencies set out in the Department's code of practice for routine maintenance, a copy of which is in the Library. In addition, agents' staff who travel the motorways in the couse of their duties look out for damage or other defects which require prompt attention.

Plutonium (Jumbo Jets)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has made an assessment of the implication of a cargo jumbo jet carrying plutonium packages (a) crashing on take-off or landing, or (b) blowing-up in mid-air, in terms of environmental contamination.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The transport of plutonium by air has been studied by the Advisory Committee on the Safe Transport of Radioactive Materials (ACTRAM). Its conclusions are published in a report entitled "The Transport of Civil Plutonium by Air". A copy has been placed in the Library.

The report concluded that the risks of a breach of the packaging during a severe accident were negligible.

A copy of the report has been passed to the International Atomic Energy Agency, which is currently studying the transport of radioactive materials by air.

Hazardous Wastes

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the increased import of hazardous, toxic and radioactive wastes that will be transported by road and rail in the United Kingdom following the border deregulation in 1992.

Mr. Portillo: We have no reason to suppose that there will be an increase in the volume of such materials with the abolition of border controls.

Private Cars

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to discourage the increased use of private cars in the period up to the year 2000.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) (column 406) on 10 July.

I also refer the hon. Lady to "Transport in London" issued in January.

Road Improvements

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the present programme for proposed road improvements to the A27 and A259 roads subject to the necessary funds being available and statutory procedures being approved.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: "Policy for Roads in England: 1987" (Cm. 125) lists the following national trunk road programme schemes for the A27/A259/A261 route:

(a) Planned start of construction April 1989 to March 1991
- A27 Westhampnett bypass
- A27 Polegate bypass
- A259 Winchelsea bypass

(b) Planned start of construction from April 1991 onwards
- A27 Arundel bypass
- A27 Patching junction improvement
- A259 Bexhill and Hastings Western bypass
- A259 Hastings Eastern bypass
- A259 Rye improvement
- A259 New Romney bypass
- A259 St. Mary's Bay and Dymchurch bypass
- A261 M20-A259 Hythe improvement

In addition work is under way on the A27 Pevensey bypass and will start shortly on the first contract for the A27 Brighton bypass. Two further contracts for the Brighton bypass are expected to be let next year; timing of the fourth contract is subject to outstanding statutory procedures.

The recent White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" (Cm. 693) proposes the following further national trunk road programme schemes, for which timing has still to be determined:

- A27 Worthing to Lancing improvement
- A27 Lewes to Polegate improvement
- A259 Pevensey to Bexhill improvement
- A259 Corridor improvements—
  - Guestling Thorn diversion
  - Icklesham diversion
  - Walland Marsh improvement
  - Brookland diversion

There is also a number of small schemes, particularly junction improvements and accident prevention measures, at various stages of preparation within the Department's south-east regional programme.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what comments he has received from the Royal Fine Arts Commission about the redesign of the east London river crossing bridge.

Mr. Channon: The views of the RFAC will be included in the report on the review of the bridge design. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House when a decision on the bridge is announced.

HEALTH

Waiting Lists

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the change in the proportion of in patient waiting list cases waiting for more than one year for treatment in the Warrington district health authority between March 1986 and the latest available date.

Mr. Mellor: The percentage of cases on Warrington district health authority's inpatient waiting list waiting a year or more dropped from 42 per cent. to 20 per cent., between 31 March 1986 and 30 September 1988.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to reduce hospital waiting lists in Durham district health authority area.

Mr. Mellor: As part of our drive to reduce long waiting lists and times, £166,431 has been allocated from the waiting list fund to Durham district health authority. By March 1990 this will have enabled an additional 371 in-patients and day cases and an extra 1,135 outpatients to be treated.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of the progress of the waiting list initiative in Warrington health authority and in Halton health authority.

Mr. Mellor: As part of our drive to reduce long waiting lists and times, £468,000 has been allocated from the waiting list fund to Warrington district health authority and £491,000 to Halton district health authority. By March 1990 this will have enabled an additional 3,157 inpatients and day cases and an extra 375 outpatients to be treated in Warrington and 4,682 additional inpatients and day cases in Halton. At September 1988 no one waited longer than one year in Halton. In Warrington the number waiting over a year stood at one third of the 1979 figure.

Elderly People

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health programmes for elderly people which currently have the support of his Department.

Mr. Freeman: The Department, in partnership with leading voluntary groups, organises and funds the "Keep Warm Keep Well" campaign, offering advice on how to keep warm in winter. Among the voluntary groups awarded grant aid under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968, those offering health promotion activities or advice include EXTEND (on exercise and fitness), the National Osteoporosis Society, Age Exchange Theatre Company (programmes of mental stimulation) and the Newcastle Council for the Disabled and the Disabled Living Services in Manchester (both for projects on incontinence). We have also welcomed the work of the "Age Well" campaign, organised jointly by Age Concern England and the Health Education Authority, and that of the Centre for Health and Retirement Education, organised through the Health Education Authority and the university of London. The "Age Well" campaign has been allocated a grant this year as part of the disbursement of the moneys arising from the effect of the retail prices index calculation error on social security benefits.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to the Health Education Authority regarding the future development of the health in old age programme.

Mr. Freeman: The Health Education Authority is currently preparing its strategic plan for the next five years. The planning guidelines issued to the Health Education Authority ask it to take account of the elderly in its forward planning process. The strategic plan is due to be submitted to the Department of Health by October.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many donations of blood were collected by the Blood Transfusion Service in each of the past 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: The information available relates to the number of donors bled by the National Blood Transfusion Service and is given in the table.

Calendar Year	England and Wales
1978	2,123,607
1979	2,144,484
1980	2,220,036
1981	2,255,731
1982	2,058,994
1983	2,135,840
1984	2,158,626
1985	2,119,060
1986	2,128,450
1987	2,094,316
1988	[1]2,140,810

[1] Provisional.

Note: For the years 1978 to 1981 the figures include a small number of people who reported to the NBTS but from whom it was inappropriate to take blood on that occasion.

Pertussis Vaccine

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ban the use of the pertussis vaccine on children suffering from a serious neurological illness or convulsions.

Mr. Freeman: The memorandum "Immunisation Against Infectious Disease" (Published by HMSO) which was prepared by the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation for the Health Department, and was issued last year to all doctors and health visitors, contains clear advice on contra-indications to the pertussis vaccine. They include children with a documented history of cerebral damage in the neonatal period, and children with a personal history of convulsions.

Traumatic Brain Injury

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of patients recovering from traumatic brain injury who require inpatient rehabilitation; and how many places for such treatment are currently provided within the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: No national estimate is available of the number of patients recovering from traumatic brain injury who require inpatient rehabilitation. Information about the incidence of traumatic brain injury is contained in the reports of the Royal College of Physicians on "Physical Disability in 1986 and Beyond" and the Medical Disability Society on "The Management of Traumatic Brain Injury", and we have drawn these reports to the attention of health authorities. It is for individual regional and district health authorities to assess how many of the traumatically brain-injured patients in their area require inpatient rehabilitation.

Information on the number of NHS places for the inpatient rehabilitation of traumatically brain-injured patients is not available centrally.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to encourage regional health authorities to provide inpatient rehabilitation facilities for patients recovering from the effects of traumatic brain injury.

Mr. Mellor: In November last year, we issued guidance to health authorities on the development of services for people with physical or sensory disabilities (Health Notice (88)26, a copy of which is in the Library). This included advice to give particular attention to the rehabilitation of patients with brain injury when planning services for physically and sensorily disabled people.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the names of hospitals referred to him by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution whose facilities fell short of acceptable standards under the Medicines (Administration of Radioactive Substances) Regulations and under sections 6 and 7 (Disposal and Accumulation of Waste) of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) on 11 July, concerning inspections carried out under the Medicines (Administrations of Radioactive Substances) Regulations.

Reports of inspections carried out by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) under sections 6 and 7 of the Radioactive Substances Act are not referred to this Department for action, as it is for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to enforce those regulations.

Exhaust Fumes

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the overall cost to the Health Service and economy of lung and other diseases attributed to motor vehicle exhaust fumes.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available.

Medical Defence Subscriptions

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has given to managers of regional health authorities regarding the contractual obligation of hospital medical and dental staff to subscribe to a defence organisation, following the consultation paper "Medical Defence Subscriptions", published on 20 March.

Mr. Mellor: Officials wrote on 29 June confirming that the contractual obligation of hospital medical and dental staff to subscribe to a medical defence organisation remains in force, unless and until alternative arrangements are introduced, following the Health Department's consultation paper.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans exist to ensure the safe disposal of both chlorofluorocarbon refrigerant material and chlorofluorocarbon II in the foam in refrigeration and air-cooling equipment under the control of his Department.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment gave today.

Healthy Diets

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will commission research into the amount of food required to provide a healthy diet for adults and provide an assessment of the cost of such food.

Mr. Freeman: No. The wide variety of foods available in Britain today means that there is an almost infinite number of ways of constructing healthy, and also less healthy, diets. The cost of the diet will depend more on the particular selection of foods than the healthiness of the diet.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many positive HIV antibody test results there were until (a) 31 March 1988 and (b) 31 March 1989 in each regional health authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 July 1989]: The table shows the positive HIV antibody test resuls reported to CDSC for the time period requested, for England and Wales.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest number of positive HIV antibody test results, and the cumulative total of people diagnosed with AIDS, in each regional health authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 July 1989]: The latest numbers of positive antibody test results, and the cumulative total of people diagnosed with AIDS, reported to and accepted by CDSC, are given in the table. Some very recently diagnosed cases of AIDS may not yet have been accepted by CDSC so they may not yet appear in the table.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Library Spending

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much (a) universities and (b) polytechnics have spent on (i) books and (ii) journals and periodicals in each year since 1978-79 in cash terms and real terms, indexed so that 1978-79 = 100.

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on library spending in the United Kingdom; and what plans he has to improve the provision of books and periodicals for students.

Mr. Jackson: Responsibility for libraries in universities, pollytechnics and colleges lies with individual institutions. It falls to them to decide their funding priorities within the total resources at their disposal.

City Technology Colleges

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish details of any standard funding agreement drawn up by his Department for the establishment of city technology colleges under section 105 of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Butcher: The funding agreements will cover both capital and recurrent expenditure for CTCs, arrangements for the payment of grant and conditions attaching to it. they are designed to place CTCs on an equal footing with LEA maintained schools in similar areas.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on the provision of any form of indemnity to sponsors of city technology colleges against the possibility of future repayment of grant monies paid under section 105 of the Education Reform Act 1988; and if any such indeminity is currently being considered.

Mr. Butcher: Section 105(6) of the Education Reform Act provides for the Secretary of State to indemnify a person who has entered into an agreement with him to establish a city technology college, in the event of that agreement being terminated by the Secretary of State. My right hon. Friend is not currently considering any such indemnity.

Education (No. 2) Act 1986

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the wording of section 43 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: None.

Special Needs

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about his policy toward adult literacy and special needs courses.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has consistently made clear the high priority which the Government attach to meeting the literacy and numeracy needs of adults. The Department's grant to the adult literacy and basic skills unit (ALBSU) for the current year is £2,724,000. This represents an increase of almost 10 per cent. over the level of grant in the previous year. The BBC will be launching a series of programmes on adult literacy and numeracy in the autumn. The Department and the Training Agency are co-operation with ALBSU to support this initiative.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funds he has made available in each of the last five years for the education of mentally handicapped children.

Mr. Butcher: The majority of Government revenue support for education provided by local authorities is channelled through block grant, which is not hypothecated to services or to particular activities within services. Specific grants are, however, paid in aid of particular educational expenditure under the education support grant programme, and the local education authority training grants scheme (which replaced the in-service teacher training grants). Since 1 April 1985 an estimated total of £45 million of expenditure related to education for children and students with special educational needs, including those with mental handicaps, has been assisted through various activities under these specific grant programmes.

Health and Safety

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to review his policy toward health and safety requirements in schools.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend will continue his policy of attaching great priority toward health and safety requirements in schools and the Department will continue to provide advice and guidance on good practice.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticide Residues

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks are made for pesticide residues in products intended for sale to consumers; and what research is being carried out to ascertain the effect of such residues on people.

Mr. Ryder: Monitoring is carried out by the Government's working party on pesticide residues and the results are published. This monitoring involves the analysis of some 2,000 to 3,000 samples of home produced and imported food and agricultural produce per year, with individual samples being examined for a wide range of pesticide residues at a cost of over £1 million.

Before a pesticide is approved for use its likely effect on consumers is assessed if its use is shown to leave residues in food. Approval would not be given if this assessment suggested any risk to the health of consumers.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he expects the following measures will affect the emissions of greenhouse gases: (a) the environmentally sensitive area scheme, and (b) the set-aside scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Both the environmentally sensitive areas and the set-aside schemes should reduce fertiliser usage and thereby help limit nitrous oxide emissions. The planting of woodlands on set-aside land would fix carbon dioxide for longer periods than conventional agriculture.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will give the area in hectares in each environmentally sensitive area of agricultural land excluding farm woodland;

(2) if he will list the estimated length of hedgerow in the environmentally sensitive area of (a) Shropshire borders, and (b) Suffolk river valleys.

Mr. Ryder: The information requested is not yet available.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of cows in each environmentally sensitive area (a) prior to designation, and (b) the latest figures available since designation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish the work he has contracted on the economic and social effects of environmentally sensitive areas when it is completed.

Mr. Ryder: I will publish information on the economic and social effects of environmentally sensitive areas together with information on their environmental impact when all the contracted work has been completed.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the areas for possible designation as environmentally sensitive on the initial list submitted to him by the Nature Conservancy Council and Countryside Commission.

Mr. Ryder: The areas initially identified in Great Britain by the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission are as follows:

1. Shetland
2. Orkney
3. Central Deeside
4. Caithness and North West Sutherland Coast

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of occasions that the farmers liaison group for each environmentally sensitive area has met since 1 July.

Mr. Ryder: There are no farmers liaison groups in any environmentally sensitive area.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the statutory and voluntary organisations represented on the formal liaison groups for each of the environmentally sensitive areas in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ryder: There are no formal liaison arrangements in any environmentally sensitive area, although informal arrangements exist which vary to meet local needs and circumstances. In all cases regular contact is maintained with a wide range of statutory and voluntary organisations who have an interest in the scheme.

Less Favoured Areas

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in each of the last five years hill livestock compensatory allowances have been refused to farmers in the less favoured areas on the grounds that the ewe density on the farms concerned exceeded the European Community stocking limits.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The EC structures regulation (79/785), which provides the basic framework for paying HLCAs, does not currently impose European Community stocking limits as such, although allowances may not exceed 101 ECUs per livestock unit and per hectare. Because the rates set in the United Kingdom have been below the 101 ECUs limit, it has not in itself affected ewe stocking densities.

However, under national legislation, limits are imposed on the number of ewes per hectare on which HLCAs are paid (six in the severely disadvantaged areas and nine in the disadvantaged areas).

Quangos (Appointments)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer on 10 July, how much it would cost to provide the information on appointments to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Assuming around 90 entries, my best estimate is about £500.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans exist to ensure the safe disposal of both chlorofluorocarbon refrigerent material and chlorofluorocarbon 11 in the foam in refrigeration and air-cooling equipment under the control of his Department.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment today.

Food Stockpiles

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what is the total amount of wheat, beef and olive oil which is stockpiled: (i) in the United Kingdom and (ii) in the European Economic Community as a whole, in: (a) 1989, (b) 1984 and (c) 1979; and what was the total cost of storage and maintaining these for 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 6 July 1989, c. 242-44.]: An error has occurred in my previous reply. The correct figures of the cost of storing and maintaining these stocks during 1988 was:

£ million[3]

	European Community	United Kingdom
Cereals[4]	153	14
Beef	119	8
Olive oil	26	0
TOTAL	298	22

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff are currently employed at the Institute of Horticultural Research at Littlehampton; how many staff will be made redundant when the institute closes in three years' time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The complement of full-time staff employed at IHR Littlehampton is 177. There are 33 part-time staff. The number likely to be make redundant when the Littlehampton site closes cannot be forecast but will be kept to a minimum by redeployment of staff between sites in the institutes and elsewhere in the AFRC and by natural wastage in the period until the closure. The timetable for restructuring is still uncertain. A start will depend on extra funding for a building programme and transfer costs and three years will be needed to complete the process.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the projects currently undertaken at the Institute of Horticultural Research at Littlehampton; if he will indicate which projects are due to be relocated when the site is closed in three years' time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The programmes currently undertaken at the AFRC Institute of Horticultural Research, Littlehampton are:

- Energy saving in glasshouses.
- Production systems for protected crops.
- Control of pests and diseases of protected crops.
- Evaluation of biological and other novel methods for pest control.
- Mushrooms.
- Production of ornamental bulbs and corms.
- Control of diseases and pests of ornamental bulbs and corms.
- Development of integrated control techniques for pests of outdoor crops.
- Molecular and cell biology of strategic plant processes.

Other programmes undertaken jointly at Littlehampton and at the East Malling and Wellesbourne sites of IHR, are:

Breeding and selection of hardy ornamental nursery stock.
Propagation and production of hardy ornamentals.
Crop protection of hardy ornamentals.
Optimum harvesting, storage and marketing conditions for top fruit and soft fruit.
Horticultural crop improvement by non-conventional methods.
Physiology and biochemistry of crop development.
Root development and function.
Investigation of host/pathogen relationships.
Development of novel methods of pest and disease control.

There are also several industrially-supported projects which supplement AFRC funded programmes.

Under the AFRC's restructuring plan, implementation of which will depend on the extra funding for a building programme and transfer costs, most Littlehampton programmes will be transferred to the principal IHR research station at Wellesbourne.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the projects that are currently undertaken at the North Wyke research station; if he will indicate which projects have been identified as near market and which of these have definite funding from outside bodies and industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson I have been asked to reply.

Community Charge

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will produce a table for each district council showing the total estimated yield from the community charge and standard community charge, excluding water charges, for 1989-90, showing the breakdown of the amount attributed to district and region.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 14 June, Official Report, Vol. 154, columns 495-98.

Tourist Board

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consequences are envisaged for the Scottish tourist board as the result of the announcements contained in the reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Yardley (Mr. Bevan) by the right hon. Member for Sutton Coldfield (Mr. Fowler) on 6 July, Official Report, column 278; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No changes are envisaged. I am satisfied that the means by which Government support is delivered to the Scottish tourist industry remain relevant and effective.

Food Safety

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide additional resources to ensure that district councils are able to provide an adequate number of environmental health officers to tackle the health hazards arising from food; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 July 1989]: Local authorities have recieved a generous revenue support grant settlement for 1989-90. They should therefore have adequate scope within available resources to fulfill their responsibilities for environmental health.

Any future requirement for additional resources can be taken into account in subsequent revenue support grant settlements.

Food Safety

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide additional resources to ensure that regional councils are able to provide an adequate number of environmental health officers to tackle the health hazards arising from food; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 July 1989]: The provision of environmental health officers is the responsibility of district and islands councils.

Environmental Health and Trading Standards Officers

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish (a) the number and (b) the cost of local authorities' environmental health and trading standards officers for each financial year since 1979.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals are in receipt of both the basic state pension and housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at 31 May 1989, the number of claimants in receipt of housing benefit, with either the claimant or the claimant's partner, or both being in receipt of basic state pension, was 2·8 million.
Source: Annual Statistical Enquiry 1988.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals are in receipt of both the basic state pension and income support.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Latest estimates indicate that the number of claimants in receipt of income support, with either the claimant or the claimant's partner, or both, being in receipt of basic state pension, is 1·61 million.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals are in receipt of both the basic state pension and family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at 31 May 1989 approximately 2,000 women aged 60 and over were in receipt of family credit. Information relating to individuals in receipt of both family credit and the basic state pension is not available.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give for each of the last three years (a) the number of people receiving attendance allowance, (b)

the number awarded the allowance in that year and (c) the number who lost the allowance because of death or recovery.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 13 June at columns 387-88.

Single Parent Families

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in the Official Report the various measures taken since 1986 to assist single parent families.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The needs of lone parents were recognised in the social security reforms introduced last year. As well as the family premium, income support and housing benefit have a lone parent premium. In family credit the adult rate for married couples also applies to lone parents. From April families with children who receive income-related benefit had increases over and above those needed to restore their real value of 50p a child.

Unmarried mothers seeking maintenance will also benefit from changes made by the Family Law Reform Act.

Disability

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he plans to act on the evidence of the recently published surveys of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to improve the lot of disabled people by uprating, extending and improving access to disability benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 3 July at column 2.

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to lay the regulations on community charge rebates before the House.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We intend to lay the Community Charge Benefits (General) Regulations 1989 once the Social Security Bill has received Royal Assent.

Income Support

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will commission research into the amount of money spent by recipients of income support on food.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the amounts spent on food by different groups—including recipients of income support—is already collected as part of the family expenditure survey.

Family Credit

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been (a) the total number of claims for family credit and (b) the number of claims assessed as eligible for payment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Up to and including 7 July 1989, 1,028,536 claims for family credit had been received and 610,487 awards had been made. The total number of claims received includes 48,853 which were either subsequently withdrawn, or were invalid because they were made more than four weeks before the expiry of an existing award. At 7 July 1989, 86,440 claims were still being processed.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the expenditure to date on the publicity campaign to re-launch family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Up to 30 June expenditure on paid advertising was £3·7 million and £1·1 million on other promotion and marketing costs, mostly printing and postage.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of claims for family credit have been assessed as ineligible for payment in each month since April 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The percentage of valid claims dealt with in each month which were unsuccessful is as follows:

	Percentage
1988
April }	32·0
May }
June	27·0
July	27·8
August	27·0
September	26·4
October	24·9

Valid claims exclude those withdrawn and those made more than four weeks before the expiry of an existing award.

Mental Illness (Services)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in the light of his statement of 12 July on community care, what plans he has to improve health services for the mentally ill.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

I welcome the opportunity to outline Government policy towards the care in the community of the mentally ill and to indicate the initiatives that we propose to take to improve these services in England. These will, of course, be included in the White Paper on community care to be published this autumn which will set out the finer detail where necessary.

Until the 1960s there was little alternative for those suffering from serious mental illnesses such as schizophrenia to prolonged in-patient care in one of the large and often remote mental hospitals. Scientific advances in the 1950s, particularly the discovery that the symptoms of schizophrenia could often be relieved by drugs, together with the development of community psychiatric services, opened up the possibility that many sufferers could be treated on a largely out-patient basis. The vision of a new pattern of services on this basis, reflecting an already occurring fall in the number of hospital beds, and anticipating a further fall, was outlined by the then Minister of Health, Mr. Enoch Powell, in 1961. It was turned into detailed policy under Sir Keith Joseph in the early 1970s, though the White Paper "Better Services for the Mentally Ill"—was actually published in 1975.

The policy as stated in that White Paper, the development of locally-based hospital and community services, including facilities providing long term asylum for those who need it, and as a consequence the closure of very large mental hospitals, has remained essentially unchanged since, supported by successive Governments. It is founded on scientific and therapeutic advances, and the knowledge that, with the right supporting services, many sufferers can live fuller lives in the community than in institutions.

In our view, this long-standing policy is a civilised and humanitarian one which has benefited many patients who, otherwise, would have been destined to spend their lives in large isolated hospitals. It has also inspired many caring people to work in the psychiatric services. We know it can work. We have examples of services such as those in Buckingham and Hackney, which show what can be done through prevention, early intervention and well co-ordinated care at home working closely with family doctors. I am glad today to be able to reaffirm the Government's commitment to the policy, and our determination to ensure that it is properly implemented. There is no going back to the days when health service care for the mentally ill invariably meant long term institutional care.

Although there are some who question the policy itself, most concerns are about implementation: the pervasive sense that all too often community care means no care: that insufficient resources have been put in place to provide effective alternatives to the old hospitals, where bed numbers have fallen substantially. I would make two points about this.

While we accept that there are deficiencies, it would be wrong to minimise the substantial shift of resources from hospital in-patient provision to community-based services provided by health and local authorities. Over the last ten years for which information is available (1977 to 1987), the number of places for people with a mental illness in local authority, voluntary and private residential homes almost doubled (to 9,000) and there was a 50 per cent. increase in day centre places (to 6,000). On the health service side there has been a 44 per cent. growth in day hospital places (to 19,000) over the same period; the number of community psychiatric nurses has more than doubled since 1981, and it is estimated that the number of districts with a community mental health centre has doubled every two years throughout the 1980s.

We made quite explicit in last year's guidance to the National Health Service what has always been the intention: that hospitals should close only when proper alternative locally based services were available. When the Secretary of State discussed this issue yesterday with the chairmen of the regional health authorities he made it clear that he will not approve the closure of any mental hospital unless he is satisfied that proper alternative services are in place. This coupled with the requirement to introduce care programmes in 1991, means that no patient will be discharged from hospital without proper consideration of his or her need for continuing care and where needs are identified, plans to meet them.

Over the last few months we have been working, and will continue to work, collaboratively with individual regional health authorities to identify the progress that has been made and the problems that have been encountered. Our purpose is not to recriminate over any inadequacies in the past, but to identify what we at the centre need to do to help health authorities implement policy effectively. It is through this work, and discussions with the social services inspectorate and voluntary organisations, that we are building up a region-by-region picture of progress and problems, and I expect to have this around the turn of the year.

To enhance our capacity to undertake this work we have secured the services at the Department of one of the few general managers in the country with experience of developing locally based services and closing a major hospital. Mr. John Jenkins, who played a leading role in the development of services in Exeter and Torbay and the closure of Exminster hospital will be working with us in an advisory capacity from next Monday, and will play a key role in our collaborative work with regional health authorities and the development of any further initiatives or guidance that seem necessary.

I would now like to outline a number of specific policy steps. The first is guidance to health authorities on care programmes. Much concern has been expressed about the adequacy of continuing health service care for psychiatric patients discharged from hospital. Last year, through a health circular, a requirement was placed on district health authorities to initiate, by 31 March 1991, explicit individually tailored programmes for continuing health service care for all such patients. Later this month we will be formally consulting on guidance to authorities on developing these care programmes, which will emphasise the need for locally developed approaches including local registers of vulnerable discharged patients and regular reviews of their needs. We expect to publish the definitive guidance in the autumn. In addition, and we greatly welcome this, the Royal College of Psychiatrists has agreed to draw up minimum acceptable professional standards for assessing patients prior to discharge, and for follow up after discharge. A preliminary statement of good practice is expected from the college in late summer, to be followed by a more substantive one developed in concert with the other professions concerned. These two initiatives will, together, provide much clearer guidance on good practice than currently exists.

As part of our 1990-91 research programme, we plan to commission research which will assist us to evaluate the effectiveness of the care programme initiative.

The second is guidance on compulsory admission to hospital. Another area of current concern is in relation to arrangements for compulsory admission to hospital, and the related issue of compulsory treatment in the community.

On hospital admissions, there seems to be wide agreement that the law is adequate, but concern that its interpretation by practitioners is sometimes not. We believe that these problems will be much reduced once the code of practice for admitting and treating patients compulsorily required under the 1983 Mental Health Act is available. In April we set up an expert group under the chairmanship of Mr. James Collier, with Mr. William Bingley, on secondment from MIND to whom we are indebted, as the full-time executive secretary. Work is well advanced, and the code will be laid before the House this autumn.

We understand that in due course the Royal College of Psychiatrists will be giving us its views on the possible role of new legal powers to ensure compulsory treatment in the community. We will then explore this issue with all the interested parties involved. Without prejudicing the discussion, we would need to be very clear both of the benefits, and that they could not be achieved through voluntary means, before seriously considering asking Parliament to create provision for compulsory treatment in the community.

The third is health service resources. Although the issues that I have already referred to are important, we fully understand that underlying much of the current concern is the question of resources. Finance from mental hospital sites provides valuable capital for replacement facilities, but these facilities are needed before hospitals can be vacated. They in turn have to compete for resources with other priorities within capital programmes, and this may hold up the whole process. Existing arrangements offer one way of addressing this problem—with regions lending each other capital to match the timing of planned new developments. Another possible solution is for authorities to enter into agreements with developers to upgrade, purchase and build community facilities for the mentally ill, in return for which they would receive all or part of the vacated site. We plan to invite health authorities to identify sites where this approach would be suitable: the aim will be to bring about the degree of private sector involvement that maximises value for money.

We do understand the revenue burden of keeping open old hospitals which will close and new replacement facilities already open. Clearly the quicker older facilities can be closed the lesser the burden of double running and running inefficient emptying facilities.

The fourth is local authority resources. Proper social care for the mentally ill in the community is vital. Yesterday the Government confirmed that local authorities would continue to be responsible for the social care of the mentally ill and announced that from 1991 we would be instituting a new, specific grant to local authorities to encourage them to make the necessary contribution to the services required. To encourage joint planning of services, and proper collaboration in relation to care programmes, we are making this grant payable through health authorities as the Secretary of State's agent, on the basis of agreed plans. Further details will be set out in the White Paper on community care, to be published this autumn.

The fifth is quality of services. We are very concerned that the new hospital and community facilities that are developing should provide a good quality service. In the wake of scandals about the conditions in some mental hospitals in the 1960s and early 1970s, the health advisory service was established, to keep a watch on standards and encourage better services. I think that it is generally agreed that, over the years the HAS has been successful. We are now examining its work to identify how it might be done even more effectively, and in a way even more relevant to the NHS as it will develop following "Working for Patients".

The sixth is the contribution of the voluntary sector. We believe that a lot can be done, through Departmental grants to voluntary organisations, to increase the information, services and mutual help available to the parents and friends of patients. Current grants to voluntary organisations in the mental health field, including mental handicap, are being reviewed with a view to ensuring that we use the nearly £2½ million a year that we allocate in a way which best supports patients and their relatives and encourages new initiatives which are of clear and direct benefit.

There are some areas we need to explore more fully as a matter of urgency. I would like to refer to some of the issues that we are aware are causing concerns that we are beginning to address, and on which work will be undertaken in the course of the next year or so.

First, the need to improve the ability of general practitioners and others to prevent, detect and treat mental illness. The first of a series of departmentally sponsored conferences on these themes was held in May; others are planned for the autumn and next spring. In the light of these discussions we will be considering what practical initiatives need to be taken;

Secondly, the need to provide appropriate services for those among the homeless population who suffer from mental illness. The incidence of mental illness among homeless and destitute men and women in London and other cities has been linked by some to the fall in the number of hospital beds. Research funded by the Department shows that, most commonly, homeless mentally ill people have had care organised outside hospital but have lost touch with the service. We expect to reduce the future numbers losing touch through the measures to which I have already referred. But we need to address the existing problem, and will be doing so in the light of a recent study by the Policy Studies Institute, again funded by the Department, on schemes for delivering primary health care to single homeless people;

Third, the need for adequate arrangements in each health district for emergency care of people suffering from mental illness. In some places this is handled through the normal accident and emergency service; in others by specialist mental health emergency arrangements. We will be discovering the extent of arrangements and seeking to evaluate alternatives.

Finally, let me summarise what we are announcing at this stage.

We reaffirm our commitment to the longstanding policy of locally based hospital and community services, including asylum; working collaboratively with the regional health authorities, we will ensure that hospitals are not closed before proper alternative provision is made; from 1991, we will require district health authorities to have care programmes for those discharged from hospital, upon which we will be issuing guidance, and we propose a new specific grant to local authorities, payable through health authorities, to help meet the social care needs of such patients;

we are offering health authorities the possibility of, in effect, bringing forward the sale of hospital sites, to fund new facilities such as hospital hostels;

we propose this autumn to lay before the House a code of practice for the compulsory assessment and treatment of patients suffering from mental disorder in hospital, and will consider, though from a very questioning standpoint, the possibility of new legislation for compulsory treatment in the community;

we are reviewing the work of the health advisory service, to ensure effective oversight of the quality of locally-based services;

we are reviewing our funding of voluntary bodies, to ensure that public funds are used in the most effective way to encourage the development and provision of services for patients and their relatives;

we are looking at ways of increasing general practitioners' awareness of mental illness and how it can be treated; the extent and adequacy of emergency services for people with a mental illness, and what can be done to meet the needs of those members of the homeless population in London and elsewhere suffering from mental illness.

ENVIRONMENT

Council House Sales

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many admitted full ownership claims were in the pipeline at the end of the last quarter for which information is available.

Mr. Trippier: About two thirds of the local authorities in England have submitted returns for the period ending 31 March 1989; the total of pipeline figures for these authorities was some 112,000.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discharges of toxic waste currently take place into the North sea.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Toxic wastes are discharged into the North sea via two main routes: direct discharge by pipe from land-based sources and riverine inputs from direct discharges to rivers. Wastes also enter the North sea from dumping and incineration at sea and general atmospheric deposition. The 1987 quality status report on the North sea confirms that most of the pollution in the North sea comes from rivers.

The combined effect of all United Kingdom rivers flowing into the North sea contributes about 20 per cent. of riverborne pollutants, although the United Kingdom has almost half the North sea coastline. The Rhine and Meuse alone contribute between 40 and 50 per cent. of pollutants carried by rivers.

Community Charge

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to introduce poll tax rebates for those who care for the elderly within the family home.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have no plans to introduce a poll tax.

People caring for the elderly within the family home may, depending upon their incomes, be eligible for rebates of up to 80 per cent. of the community charge, and if they are in receipt of income support, will have an amount reflected in their income support to help with the remaining 20 per cent.

Waste Incinerators

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the event of planning appeals arising out of the refusal of local authorities to grant planning consent for municipal, chemical or hospital waste incinerators, he will make it his policy to take into account local public concern over such proposals and the findings of the interdepartmental working group report "Dioxins in the Environment", and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Section 29 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 requires those who decide planning applications to have regard to the provisions of the development plan, so far as material to the application, and to any other material considerations. My right hon. Friend and his planning inspectors are subject to the same requirement in relation to appeals. Accordingly, in deciding planning appeals inspectors can take account of a wide range of evidence, including expressions of local opinion, providing it relates to material land-use planning considerations.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the recent report from the interdepartmental working group on polychlorinated dibenzo-par-dioxins and polychlorinated dibenzo-furans entitled "Dioxins in the Environment", he will now consider introducing stricter planning and operational controls on municipal, chemical and hospital waste incinerators; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On planning controls I refer the hon. Member to the reply to his earlier question today.

As for operational controls, new regulations came into effect on 31 March this year bringing all incinerators capable of burning waste at a rate of 1 tonne per hour or more under the control of the national air pollution inspectorates. These inspectorates already controlled all chemical waste incinerators. We have recently agreed within the European Community two directives on prevention of air pollution from new and existing municipal waste incinerators. These directives specify combustion conditions which take particular account of the need to minimise emissions of dioxins and furans. The Department has also recently drawn up, in consultation with the Department of Health, draft guidance on incineration of clinical waste which includes combustion conditions designed to minimise dioxin and furan emissions.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will tabulate what a typical married couple with two children and one wage earner living in the London borough of Waltham Forest would pay (a) in community charge and (b) in a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in proportions of 80:20, respectively, if the wage earner earned (a) £60,000, (b) £90,000 and (c) £120,000 and lived in (i) property owned by that wage earner worth £90,000 and (ii) property owned by that wage earner worth £120,000 and (iii) property owned by that wage earner worth £150,000, making the same assumptions as in his reply to the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) on 22 March, Official Report, column 626.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is provided in the table.

Illustrative annual liability in Waltham Forest under a system of capital value rates combined with local income tax, 1988-89

Earnings	Property value £90,000	Property value £120,000	Property value £150,000
(a) £60,000	£1,635	£1,915	£2,200
(b) £90,000	£2,060	£2,345	£2,625
(c) £120,000	£2,490	£2,770	£3,050

The figures are based on illustrative tax rates placed in the Library on 23 June 1988 and are for 1988-89. Taxable income is taken as earnings less £4,095, the married man's allowance, in each case. The illustrative 1988-89 community charge in Waltham Forest is £269.

Gasoline

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has made of the need to set seasonal Reid vapour pressure limits for gasoline.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Evaporative emissions from gasoline are of interest because of the role they play in the generation of secondary air pollutants, including ozone. A study carried out for the Department by the Harwell laboratory concludes that further controls on Reid vapour pressure would have an insignificant impact on the formation of secondary pollutants.

Planning Applications

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many planning applications were decided (a) in under eight weeks; (b) between eight and 13 weeks; and (c) in over 13 weeks by each planning authority in Staffordshire in the most recent period for which figures are available;

(2) what percentage of planning applications were decided (a) in under eight weeks; (b) between eight and 13 weeks; and (c) in over 13 weeks by each planning authority in Staffordshire in the most recent period for which figures are available; and what is the comparable figure for England as a whole.

Mr. Chope: The information requested on planning decisions made by each planning authority in Staffordshire together with the comparable figure for England is listed in the table:

Planning applications decided, by each planning authority in Staffordshire, and England—July to September 1988

Planning authority	Total decided	Under 8 weeks	Per cent.	Between 8–13 weeks	Per cent.	Over 13 weeks	Per cent.

Litter

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in respect of litter at Victoria station.

Mrs. Virgina Bottomley: None. However, we have received a large number of representations on litter in public areas generally, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will shortly announce proposals for legislation designd to tackle this problem.

Water Authorities (Debt Write-Offs)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the proposed debt write-offs for each regional water authority; and what is the expected remaining debt in each case.

Mr. Howard: It is too early to say. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Meriden (Mr. Mills) on 18 May, Official Report, Vol. 153, column 268.

Dogs

59. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about dog licensing; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on Wednesday 28 June 1989 to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner), Official Report, Vol. 155, column 479.

60. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek powers to compel district councils to arrange to round up stray dogs, to advertise for their owners and, after a limited time, either offer those dogs to good homes or arrange for the unclaimed dogs to be put down.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 14 June proposals for giving local authorities new duties and powers for dealing with stray dogs. We will be issuing a consultation paper on these proposals shortly.

Beaches

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which beaches along the south Wales coastline between Cardiff and the Gover peninsular conform to the water quality standards of Economic Community bathing water directive 76/160/EEC; and what consideration he has given to the merits of existing and proposed screened sewage outfalls along this coastline.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have been asked to reply.

Information about bathing waters listed under the directive is as follows:

Trecco bay, Porthcawl
Rest bay, Porthcawl
Aberavon

My Department does not hold information on non-listed waters; I refer my hon. Friend to the chairman of Welsh Water.

My officials are in touch with Welsh Water about its capital programme of improvements for bringing outfalls along this coastline to such standards as will permit listed bathing waters to comply with the terms of directive 76/160/EEC.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which beaches on the south Wales coastline within 10 miles of Swansea attain the standards required under European Economic Community bathing water directive 76/160/EEC.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have been asked to reply.

All bathing waters within 10 miles of Swansea which are listed under the terms of the directive, with the exception of Swansea bay itself, complied with its standards during 1988.

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) by how much the safety net grant of gaining authorities is reduced from when there is no limit where the maximum contribution to the community charge safety net is (a) £75 per adult, (b) £70 per adult, (c) £50 per adult, (d) £25 per adult, and (e) £10 per adult, on the assumption of a self-financing safety net;

(2) how much additional Exchequer grant would be required if the maximum contribution were to be (a) £70 per adult, (b) £50 per adult, (c) £25 per adult and (d) £10 per adult on the assumption of no reduction in the community charge safety net grant to local authorities gaining from the safety net.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is provided in the table on the basis of 1988-89 figures. If the cost of limiting contributions to the safety net were funded by Exchequer grants it would be as shown in column 1. Alternatively, safety net grant receipts could be reduced by an equal amount per adult in receiving areas up to the point at which they no longer receive transitional protection. The maximum reduction in safety net grant per adult is shown in column 2.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, for which of the following charges in local authority functions or duties the community charge safety net will make distributional adjustments (a) ring fencing of the housing revenue account, (b) abolition of the Inner London education authority, (c) capital financing charges consequent on the new capital control system, (d) pension contributions consequent on the charges being proposed, (e) costs of community charge collection, (f) costs of community charge rebate and rebate administration and (g) continuing costs of maintaining the community charge register.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend has not taken final decisions on the safety net.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has identified all the possible options for needs assessments under the new grant system; and if he will make a statement on which he proposes to adopt.

Mr. Gummer: We are examining a number of possibilities for each service block, including those proposed by the local authority associations. Proposals will not be finalised until the autumn.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the level of community charge for spending at needs assessment for each local authority which would apply in 1989-90 if the proposed local government finance system were in operation; and what assumptions are made to arrive at that answer.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 12 July 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of Monday 26 June, Official Report, Vol. 155, col. 347.

The detailed assumptions underlying that answer were:

	£ million
Total GRE	27,662
Revenue support grant	9,394
Non domestic rate pool	9,516
Total adult population	36·4

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what mechanisms he intends to use for safety-netting the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend has not made final decisions on the form of the safety net.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had so far with local authorities and industry for the safe recovery and recycling of chlorofluorocarbons contained in discarded refrigerants in relation to Her Majesty's Government's objectives for the protection of the ozone layer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has regular meetings with local authorities and industry at which these matters are discussed. United Kingdom CFC manufacturers, a number of local authorities and at least one retailer of domestic refrigerators and freezers offer recycling services for used refrigerators free of charge.

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans exist to ensure the safe disposal of both chlorofluorocarbon refrigerant material and chlorofluorocarbon II in the foam in refrigeration and air-cooling equipment under the control of his Department.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Guidelines issued by the Property Services Agency contain advice on the use of CFCs on the Government estate. They insist that at the end of its useful operational life, the refrigerant in commercial or industrial equipment is to be recovered by the PSA or contractors and returned to the refrigerant supplier for reclamation or safe disposal. We do not yet know of a proven technique for the extraction of the CFCs in the insulation.

Regional Water Authorities

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the remuneration for each of the board members of the regional water authorities after vesting, along with any other benefits to be given.

Mr. Ridley: Under the Water Act 1989 all current appointments to water authority boards will end at vesting. Executive and non-executive directors of the successor companies will be appointed at vesting and through to flotation on essentially their existing terms and conditions as water authority board members or officers. Remuneration following flotation will be a matter for the companies themselves.

Water Filter Industry

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what correspondence, discussions, or meetings he has had with the advertising standards authority regarding advertising by the water filter industry.

Mr. Ridley: None.

OFWAT

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there is to be any increase in the number of staff of OFWAT above that which was originally projected.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. The complement for the office of water services will be about 100. The director general's duties have been added to since the number of about 80 was given in the explanatory and financial memorandum to the Water Bill last November.

Water Companies

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what obligations there are on statutory water companies to disclose information about their structure, finances and activities; and what are the comparable obligations of private limited companies.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 12 July 1989]: The requirements for disclosure of information about the structure, finances and activities of the statutory water companies are set out in their local statutes and company legislation; and the requirements for private companies are set out in company legislation.

National Exhibition Centre

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes replying to the letters of 7 April and 26 May from the chief executive of Birmingham city council, concerning the impact on the national exhibition centre of the capital control proposals contained in the Local Government and Housing Bill.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 12 July 1989]: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government wrote to the leader of Birmingham city council and Councillor Reg Hales about the national exhibition centre on 10 April, and I replied to their latest letters, of 26 May and 7 July, on 11 July.

Radioactive Liquid Waste

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites in England are authorised to discharge radioactive liquid waste to the public sewer.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 11 July 1989]: There are 808 premises in England which are currently authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 to discharge liquid radioactive waste. the authorisations prescribe discharges into drainage systems, which include public sewers. All authorisations contain strict conditions, including the quantities of radioactive liquid that may be discharged.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drugs

9. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made towards further bilateral treaties to provide for the confiscation of the assets of drug traffickers.

Mr. Hurd: I have this week agreed on the need for early progress towards a confiscation agreement with the Interior Minister of Pakistan. We have already signed bilateral agreements with the United States of America, Canada, the Bahamas, Australia, Switzerland and, in the last few weeks, Spain, and have concluded similar arrangements with Bermuda. Discussions are also in progress with West Germany, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Jamaica, Malaysia, Sweden andGuyana, and we expect further agreements soon.

54. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking against the threat to this country from cocaine and crack.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) on 15 June 1989 at column 1113.

55. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many seizures of cocaine have been made in the Merseyside area this year; and in how many cases crack was found to be present.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Merseyside police have made eight seizures of cocaine in the period January-May 1989. One of these seizures has been confirmed as being in the form of crack.

51. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the work of the ministerial group on the misuse of drugs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) on 21 April at column 517. The ministerial group is next due to meet on 26 July, under the chairmanship of my right hon. Friend, when particular attention will be given to the threat to this country from cocaine and crack.

33. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about drug abuse among young people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We receive a steady stream of representations from hon. Members and members of the public about drug abuse among young people. We take a very serious view of the problem of drug misuse and have developed a comprehensive strategy set out in "Tackling Drug Misuse" a copy of which is in the Library. A number of measures under the strategy—for example, drug education in schools—are aimed specifically at young people.

21. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he is taking to enhance international co-operation in respect of the trafficking in drugs in the light of the forthcoming European single market.

Mr. Hurd: In my contacts with our European partners I stress the need for early ratification by all countries of the 1988 United Nations convention against the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. We shall maintain the frontier checks necessary to control drug trafficking and promote closer international co-operation between law enforcement agencies.

Crime Prevention

14. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has discussed joint crime prevention initiatives with the local authority associations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is regular consultation between Home Office officials and local authority representatives on a wide range of issues including crime prevention. This will continue.

North America (Ministerial Visit)

16. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the visit to North America by his hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State.

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend's recent valuable visit to the United States and the Bahamas provided graphic evidence of the destructive effects on individuals and the community of widespread misuse of and trafficking in cocaine and crack. He studied both means of enforcement and of reducing demand. We already have in place a comprehensive strategy for tackling misuse. The ministerial group on the misuse of drugs is considering urgently how this strategy can be strengthened and extended.

Hong Kong

17. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about entry into the United Kingdom of citizens from Hong Kong in the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Within the last two months some 40 letters have been received in the Home Office from right hon. and hon. Members and from members of the public.

Inquests

18. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases of a death of a patient on National Health Service premises in the past three years an inquest has been refused when it has been recommended by a coroner.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Secretary has power to order an inquest only if a coroner applies in the absence of a body. There was one application in this period for a death on National Health Service premises. It was concerned with the abortion in Carlisle City general hospital in July 1987.

Gaelic Broadcasting

19. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to Comunn Na Gaidhlig's submission on Gaelic broadcasting.

25. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to Comunn Na Gaidhlig's submission on Gaelic broadcasting.

Mr. Renton: We are considering the proposals submitted by Comunn Na Gaidhlig on this subject.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any progress to report on provision for Gaelic broadcasting.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave earlier today to questions from the hon. Members for the Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) and for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie).

58. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusions he has reached on the future of broadcasting in Gaelic.

Mr. Renton: No conclusions have been reached at this stage as we have yet to complete our consideration of the proposals submitted to us on this subject.

Burglary

20. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest figures for burglary in England and Wales.

Mr. Hurd: There were 801,500 burglaries in the 12 months to March 1989 compared to 886,400 for the previous 12 months, a decrease of almost 85,000 or 10 per cent. This information is published in table 4 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 20/89, a copy of which is in the Library.

53. Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking to reduce burglary in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: In their bid to reduce crime, of which burglary is a major element, the Government have increased police manpower by 14,138 and civilian manpower by 8,137 since 1979. The Government are also convinced of the importance of community involvement in tackling crime. That is why we have encouraged neighbourhood watch schemes which can do much to prevent crime. There are now over 66,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales covering approximately 3¼ million households. In addition there are 390 crime prevention panels and 165 junior panels which are active in spreading the crime prevention message. In the 12 months to March 1989 burglaries have fallen by 10 per cent. compared with the 12 months to March 1988.

We are constantly looking at new initiatives in our effort to combat crime. One such initiative is the safer cities programme which is the Home Office contribution to the Government's action for cities strategy. We have also launched Crime Concern, an independent organisation, whose efforts are directed at the reduction of crime.

Nazi War Criminals

22. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he received in the month of June regarding Nazi war criminals in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: During June I received 20 representations and one parliamentary petition on the subject of war criminals in the United Kingdom.

Television Franchises

23. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers the Independent Television Commission will have to ensure that individuals found to be unfit to hold a television broadcasting licence in other countries, are prevented from involvement in television companies and channels in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced further proposals to limit broadcasting ownership on 19 May at column 317. We are considering further the detail of the enforcement powers which the ITC and radio authority will need. We envisage that, in exercising them, they will reach their own decisions rather than necessarily following those reached by regulatory bodies in other jurisdictions.

36. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received any representations supporting his policy that television franchises be auctioned.

Mr. Renton: We have received a number of submissions supporting the principle of competitive tender for the award of licences for commercial television and radio.

Fresh Start

24. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the staffing levels in top security prisons following the implementation of fresh start.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As at 1 June 1989 the number of officers (including principal and senior officers) in dispersal prisons was 9 per cent. higher than two years previously when none of the establishments had moved to fresh start working.

Murderers (Release)

26. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have died over the past 25 years at the hands of previously convicted killers; and what was the average length of sentence served by murderers released from prison over the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on the number of suspects convicted of homicide who had previous homicide convictions is published annually in Criminal statistics, England and Wales (tables 4.9 and 4.10 of the latest issue, for 1987, Cm. 498), copies of which are in the Library.

During the 25 year period 1963-87, 51 persons in England and Wales were killed by persons previously convicted of homicide.

Average times served by sentenced murderers released on licence from prison service establishments are given in the table. The average figures do not take account of the longest periods being served by some of those given life sentences following the abolition of capital punishment in 1965 who have not yet been released. They also exclude persons who have died in custody or been discharged for other reasons.

My right hon. Friend has made it clear that those convicted of the most heinous murders can normally expect to service at least 20 years in prison and in some cases even longer; and no life sentence prisoner is released, no matter how long he or she has served, unless my right hon. Friend is personally as satisfied as it is reasonably possible to be that there is no risk to the community.

Average time[1] spent under sentence in prison service establishments in England and Wales by prisoners first released in 1984-88 on licence from a life sentence for murder

Year of release	Average years[2] under life sentence
1984	10·50
1985	10·25
1986	11·00
1987	11·50
1988	10·00

[1] Excluding any time spent on remand in custody.
[2] Estimates rounded to the nearest quarter.

Blasphemy

28. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Law Commission recommendation regarding the law of blasphemy.

Mr. Hurd: In its 1985 report on offences against religion and public worship, the Law Commission recommended —by a majority—that common law offences of blasphemy and blasphemous libel should be abolished and not replaced. A minority proposed in a note of dissent the creation of a new statutory offence of blasphemy applying to all religions. The Government have no plans to legislate on blasphemy.

Border Controls

29. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to dismantle completely border controls between Britain and other European Community countries.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 14 December 1988 at cols 576-7. That essentially remains the position, and it was last extensively discussed in this House on 4 May at columns 395-417.

Arwen Ace Gun (Police)

30. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to acquire the baton round gun Arwen Ace for police forces in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 13 April at columns 707-81.

Bill of Rights

31. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans for introducing a Bill of Rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Press Law Review

32. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the terms of reference of the independent press law review group which he announced on 21 April.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) on 5 July 1989 at column 193.

Car Crime

34. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking to reduce car crime in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) on 15 June at column 510.

It is encouraging that in the 12 months ending March 1989 recorded offences of theft from vehicles fell by 9 per cent. compared to the corresponding period last year, and offences of theft or unauthorised taking of a vehicle fell by 6 per cent.

Rural Violence

35. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to implement the recommendations contained in his Department's recent report on rural violence.

Mr. Hurd: We have strengthened the law on sales of alcohol to underage drinkers and increased the penalties available to the courts. We have issued advice to the police and courts about powers available to deal with outbreaks of disorder. We have encouraged the drinks industry to increase the production and promotion of low and no alcohol drinks. My right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, as chairman of the ministerial group on alcohol misuse, together with my hon. Friends the Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Home Department will shortly meet representatives of the drinks, fast food and leisure industries and the licensed trade to discuss other matters raised by the report. These moves by the Government need to be backed up by local action, with local organisations working together to identify any particular problems in their areas and the steps which might be taken. The need for such co-operation was spelt out in inter-Departmental guidance issued in February, which gave advice about local action to tackle all forms of alcohol misuse.

Police Forces (Merger)

37. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if consideration is being given to merging any shire police forces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has no plans to create new combined police forces. I would also refer the hon. Member to the reply which was given to questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Rydale (Mr. Greenway) and the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) on 11 May at column 529.

Safer Cities Initiative

38. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the safer cities initiative.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to his question on 11 July at column 421.

Crime

39. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the measures which his Department is taking to reduce crime in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 11 May at columns 543 and 544.

44. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the most recent available figures for recorded crime in West Sussex.

Mr. Hurd: The available information relates to the police force area of Sussex. Information for 1988 was published in tables 7 and 8 of "Home Office Statistical Bulletin 7/89", a copy of which is in the Library. I have also sent some further details of the figures for 1988 for their local force area to all right hon. and hon. Members for constituencies in England and Wales and placed copies of those further details in the Library. In the first quarter of 1989 Sussex police recorded 4 per cent. more offences than in the first quarter of 1988.

Welsh Television Channels

40. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of people living in north Wales who cannot receive Welsh television channels.

Mr. Renton: I understand that about 15,650 people living in North Wales are unable to receive Welsh language television programmes because of mountainous terrain and shortage of frequencies. There are, however, plans to extend coverage to a further 1,000 people in the Gronant area.

Mugging

41. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking to reduce the number of muggings in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hereford (Mr. Shepherd) on 15 June at column 507.

Punishment (Community)

42. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement about his policy with regard to punishment in the community.

Mr. Hurd: The Green Paper "Punishment, Custody and the Community" (Cm. 424) described the policies we are pursuing and our proposals for future changes. We are at present considering how best to take these forward.

Prisons

43. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional prison places have become available since 1979; how many additional places are expected to be provided this year; and how many additional places are expected to become available in the foreseeable future.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since 1979 more than 6,000 new places have been added to the prison estate, over half of which have been provided at the eight new prisons which have opened since 1985. The first phase of a new prison for 350 prisoners has recently opened in converted buildings at Banstead in Surrey, and by the end of the financial year it is planned that a total of nearly 2,000 new places will have been added to the estate.

Through a combination of more new prisons, additions to existing prisons and redevelopment and place producing schemes, about 17,000 new places will also be delivered between the end of this financial year and the mid-1990s. By that time a total of about 25,000 places will have been added to the system.

Police Co-operation

45. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his Department is making in fostering greater co-operation between British police forces and their counterparts elsewhere in Europe.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We attach great importance to closer co-operation between police forces in tackling crime, and have actively sought to strengthen bilateral links. My right hon. Friend recently signed an arrangement with France providing for further practical co-operation on action against terrorism, drug trafficking and organised crime. A similar arrangement was signed with Italy earlier in the year. Further action is in hand to improve bilateral and multilateral co-operation in a number of areas including mutual legal assistance and extradition arrangements, the exchange of drugs intelligence, exchange of liaison officers, and the confiscation of drug traffickers' assets; a bilateral drugs confiscation agreement with Spain was signed recently.

Theft

46. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking to reduce theft in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Our crime prevention handbook "Practical Ways to Crack Crime" contains advice on how the risk of theft of all kinds can be reduced. Measures that can be taken to prevent theft from shops were put forward by a working group of the Home Office standing committee on crime prevention in its 1986 report; the working group on car crime, which reported last year, made a number of recommendations about the prevention of theft of and from cars, which are now being examined. The number of theft offences recorded in England and Wales during 1988 was 1,931,000, nearly 6 per cent. fewer than in 1987.

Alcohol-related Crime

47. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of crimes committed are alcohol-related.

Mr. Hurd: We do not collect information centrally. But a number of surveys and studies, including Home Office Research Study No. 108 "Drinking and Disorder: A study of non-Metropolitan Disorder", have pointed to a strong association between alcohol misuse and public disorder in particular. Advice on crime prevention is accordingly included in recent Home Office and interdepartmental guidance on alcohol misuse.

Young Offenders

48. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those initiatives that his Department is supporting to encourage replacement of custody for young offenders.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from him on 11 May at column 531. Grants have already been made to the following voluntary organisations: the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders; the National Children's Home; the Rainer Foundation; Community Service Volunteers. Other applications are under consideration.

Passports

49. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on delays in processing passport applications and renewals.

56. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the processing of passport applications at the Liverpool passport office.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 4 July at columns 99-100.

Hospital Radio

50. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking an exclusive radio frequency for hospital radio.

Mr. Renton: I received a letter today from the hon. Member on behalf of the National Association of Hospital Broadcasting Organisations. It has been invited to discuss the matter with the radio authority in due course, and meanwhile to meet Home Office officials.

European Convention on Human Rights

52. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received supporting the inclusion of the European convention on human rights in British law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has received one such representation in this Session.

Conservative Family Campaign

57. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Conservative Family Campaign; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten) will be meeting representatives of the Conservative Family Campaign later this month to discuss young people's involvement in crime.

Motoring Offences

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in the last year for which figures are available were (a) cautioned, (b) prosecuted, and (c) convicted for (i) driving or parking in or otherwise obstructing bus lanes, (ii) parking on pavements, (iii) cycling on pavements, and (iv) careless driving by failing to give way to pedestrians when turning at junctions.

Mr. John Patten: The details requested on motoring offences are not separately recorded in the information collected centrally. The available information on court proceedings and cautions for parking, obstruction and careless driving offences is published annually in a Home Office statistical bulletin "Offences relating to motor vehicles, England and Wales" and in a volume of supplementary tables, both of which are in the Library. The information available centrally, which may be incomplete, indicates that in 1987, 540 persons were prosecuted for the offence of riding on a footway of whom 500 were guilty; about 1,000 persons were cautioned in 1986 (separate information was not collected in 1987).

Police Vans (Deaths)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have (a) died and (b) been injured in cellular police vans in each year since they were introduced.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As the hon. Member is aware, there was one death in these circumstances on 19 June 1989.

Information about deaths of persons in police custody including the place and cause of death and the circumstances surrounding the death have been set out, since 1980, in the annual reports of the chief inspector of constabulary and the Metropolitan police commissioner. There do not appear to have been any previous deaths in cellular police vans. Information about injuries is not recorded centrally.

Cellular police vans were introduced by individual police forces at different times over a period of many years. They were first used by the Lancashire police in 1984.

Criminal Justice Act 1988

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which sections of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 have not yet been implemented; and if he will make a statement explaining the reasons why these sections have not yet been implemented.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 10 July 1989]: Section 43 of the Act which widens the powers of the Court of Appeal to order a retrial, section 146 and schedule 13, which reform rules of evidence in service courts, and section 159, which creates a right of appeal against orders restricting reporting of and access to Crown Court proceedings will come into force on 31 July. Section 119, which increases the upper age limit for jurors, will come into force on 15 February 1990.

Sections 1-22 and schedule 1, which relate to extradition, are consolidated by the Extradition Bill which has been introduced in the House of Lords. The Bill is expected to receive Royal Assent before the summer recess, and its provisions will take effect two months later.

The implementation of section 29, which concerns the issue of letters of request to foreign courts seeking their assistance in obtaining evidence, has been delayed while we have considered the role of such a provision in the context of more comprehensive legislation on mutual legal assistance, for which we will bring forward proposals at the earliest possible opportunity.

Further consideration is being given to the implementation of section 32 in so far as it is not already in force. This relates to the giving of evidence through a live television link by witnesses who are outside the United Kingdom.

Section 65, which concerns the powers of civilian fine enforcement officers, will be brought into force once the preparation of related court rules is complete.

Sections 108-117 and schedules 6 and 7 establish the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board on a statutory basis. Under schedules 6 and 7, detailed procedural rules are required for the statutory scheme, and we are discussing the content of these with the board.

Sections 150 and 151 extend to Customs and Excise officers police powers to grant bail and re-arrest if a suspect seems likely to abscond. Because of operational difficulties which would arise in practice from their interaction with provisions in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 these provisions have not yet been brought into force.

All 132 other sections of, and 12 schedules to, the Act are already in force.

Belle Vale Police Station

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Merseyside as to the number of formal complaints lodged at the Belle Vale police station, Liverpool.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable that since 1 January 1989 there has been one formal complaint lodged at Belle Vale police station.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Merseyside as to the number of arrests of minors by police stationed at Belle Vale during the last six months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable that since 1 January 1989, 116 arrests of persons under the age of 17 have been made by officers from the Belle Vale sub-division.

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what prosecutions have successfully taken place in each of the past five years involving the wrongful use of orange badges for the disabled.

Mr. John Patten: The latest available information, which may be incomplete, relates to the period 1983 to 1986; in each year fewer than 20 persons were found guilty of offences under the orange badge scheme. After 1986 these offences were not separately indentifiable in the records of court proceedings collected centrally.

Racehorses (Drugs)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many criminal cases have been brought before the courts in the past three years involving drug administering for gain of thoroughbred racehorses;

(2) if he has plans to seek to restrict the administration of drugs on thoroughbred racehorses for the purpose of enhancing their potential;

(3) if he will act immediately to ban the administering of anabolic steroids on racehorses in training in the United Kingdom.

(4) if he will make it his policy to investigate fully the use of drugs on thoroughbred racehorses in the United Kingdom;

(5) if the Government have any plans to investigate the drug testing systems currently undertaken in the British thoroughbred and breeding industry;

(6) if the Government have recently monitored the drug testing systems involved in the British horseracing and breeding industry.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 9 June 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 22 December at column 428. It is an offence under the Medicines (Hormone Growth Promoters) (Prohibition of Use) Regulations 1988 to administer hormone growth promoters to any horse except for specified therapeutic or zootechnical purposes.

Information on the number of criminal cases brought before the courts in the past three years involving the administration for gain of drugs to thoroughbred racehorses is not readily available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Malicious Communications Act 1988

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints there have been under the Malicious Communications Act 1988; and what was their outcome.

Mr. John Patten: No information is yet available on the number of offences committed under the Malicious Communications Act 1988 which did not come into force until September 1988.

Litter (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been prosecuted for litter offences in each of the last four years nationally and in Durham City constituency.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is in the table. Such information for England and Wales only is published annually in volume 1 of the "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables", copies of which can be found in the Library. Information for 1988 is not yet available.

	England and Wales		Durham[1]
	Total proceeded against	Total found guilty	Total proceeded against	Total found guilty
1984	1,552	1,427	3	3
1985	1,510	1,389	3	3
1986	1,600	1,425	9	9
1987	1,888	1,694	5	4

[1] Data are not collected centrally for the City of Durham alone but for the whole of the Durham petty sessional division.

Racial Hatred

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times and in what instances he used his powers to prevent marches likely to stir up racial hatred in (a) 1986, (b) 1987, (c) 1988 and (d) 1989.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the Public Order Act 1986 public processions may be prohibited with the Secretary of State's consent only if the chief officer of police of the areas concerned reasonably believes that the imposition of conditions under section 12 of the Act will not be sufficient to prevent the holding of public processions from resulting in serious public disorder. Consent on these grounds was given to banning orders on one occasion in 1986, four times in 1987, three times in 1988 and has been given three times in 1989.

Dogs

27. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce compulsory muzzling in public for particular breeds of dog.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As I explained in the debate on the Adjournment on 15 June, I am not persuaded that this is the right course to take.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration his Department has given to introducing schemes to encourage dog owners to have dogs neutered as a move to reducing the dog population.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am not persuaded that this is properly a matter for the Government. The care and wellbeing of pets is the responsibility of owners.

On the general matters of local authority powers in relation to stray dogs, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment made a statement in the debate on the Local Government and Housing Bill on 14 June at column 1053.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration his Department has given to widening the authority of parking wardens to apprehend and report (a) people allowing their dogs to foul footpaths and (b) people committing litter offences.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to extend the functions of traffic wardens beyond their primary purpose, which is to assist the police in the enforcement of road traffic law.

Drink-Driving

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions for drinking and driving offences there were in 1987-88 and for 1989 to date nationally and in Durham City constituency.

Mr. John Patten: The available information relates to findings of guilt for driving and so on, after consuming alcohol or taking drugs and is published annually in a Home Office statistical bulletin "Offences relating to motor vehicles, England and Wales". Table 9 of issue 32/88 gives the figures for 1987. In 1987, there were 115,000 findings of guilt for such offences of which 139 were recorded for Durham magistrates' court. Figures for 1988 will be published in the autumn.

Horse Racing

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what active support he is giving to the preservation of small racecourses in Great Britain.

Mr. John Patten: The Horserace Betting Levy Board has a responsibility for supporting and promoting, as cost-effectively as possible, the provision of horseracing as an attractive, country-wide entertainment. To that end, the board devotes a substantial and increasing proportion of its resources to improving and sustaining racecourses of all sizes. Details are given in the board's annual report, a copy of which is in the Library.

Data Protection

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many local authorities in England and Wales have so far registered for the basis of the poll tax registration with those responsible for the Data Protection Act 1984; which councils have been refused registration and for what reasons; what further guidance in addition to the community charge practice notes the Data Protection Registrar has issued to local authorities; if he will place a copy of such guidance in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 6 July 1989]: Community charge registration officers have to register under the Data Protection Act for compiling and maintaining community charge registers if those registers are to be kept on computer.

The data protection registrar, who reports directly to Parliament, informs me that by the end of June, he had identified 293 applications from CCROs for new register entries for the purpose of compiling and maintainng a community charge register. In addition, a number of local authorities had applied in their own name to register for this purpose.

I understand that so far, one application by Trafford borough council has been refused on the grounds that some of the information asked for was not necessary for the CCRO's statutory functions and that the form did not explain that there was no duty to provide information about relationships of people in households. In the light of undertakings given by the CCRO about the data to be processed for registration a revised application is being considered.

The registrar has written to all CCROs in England and arrangements have been made for a copy to be placed in the Library.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ghana

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further support he is providing for Ghana's economic recovery.

Mr. Chris Patten: The United Kingdom continues to be a major supporter of Ghana's economic recovery programme. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, signed a grant agreement for a further £20 million balance of payments finance when she visited Ghana at the end of June. This brings to £92·5 million the total of our balance of payments support to Ghana since its economic recovery programme began in 1983.

Brazil (Minister's Visit)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the visit of the right hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Patten) to Brazil to discuss rain forest problems.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of the objectives achieved by the Minister for Overseas Development on his recent visit to Brazil.

Mr. Chris Patten: The main purpose of my visit was to sign, on 5 July, a memorandum of understanding on technical co-operation on environmental matters. On that day I also met President Sarney and other leading Brazilian figures. The agreement is the first of its kind which Brazil has made with an industrialised country and will provide the framework for a significant contribution to Brazil's environmental problems, especially in forestry where we have unique expertise.

I also visited Sao Paulo and the Amazon region where I had discussions with the major research institutions. I saw our very successful Royal Geographical Society project at Maraca, visited an area reserved for the Yanomani Indians and saw a hospital provided for them.

Our additional technical co-operation programme, the details of which we will now discuss with the Brazilian authorities, is likely to cover five areas: first, urban environment, in particular sewage and water treatment; secondly, the sustainable management of the Amazon rain forest, where we hope to be involved in establishing a new biological reserve in the Xingu river area; thirdly, collaborative research on the relationship between the forests and climate, involving the Institute of Hydrology; fourthly, research into the great potential of the genetic resources of the Amazon; and we hope to begin soon with a research project into aromatic plants undertaken by the Goeldi museum in Belem; and, fifthly, training in the United Kingdom and in Brazil in matters related to these areas.

The visit shows that important progress is possible in these fields if the countries concerned adopt a co-operative spirit. Throughout my visit, I made it clear that we recognise Brazil's sensitiveness and sovereignty and the Brazilian Government responded in a helpful and positive way. I am sure that both countries will gain from the partnership.

Overseas Aid (Anniversary Review)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost of publishing the anniversary review of British overseas aid.

Mr. Chris Patten: It cost just under £105,000 to produce 20,000 copies of the anniversary review, a unit cost of £5·23. Despite more pages, photographs and graphics this was less than the unit cost of previous annual reviews.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mail Prices

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the Post Office to announce the new prices for first and second class mail from October.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 13 July 1989]: Postal tariffs are a matter for the Post Office board. The Post Office announced on 3 July that it had proposed to the Post Office Users National Council that the standard charges should go to by 1p, to 20p for first class and to 15p for second class letters, from 2 October.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, when he will make a statement on local government finance for 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Walker: In due course.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he first became aware of the October 1988 meeting between the chairman and chief executive of the Welsh Development Agency and the regional director and the senior investment executive of the west Wales office of the Welsh Development Agency at which management buy-out proposals were discussed.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 5 July to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones), Official Report, col. 182.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give full details of factory building completed in west Wales by the Welsh Development Agency for each year from 1983-84 to the present, giving the location and description of each site and the area of building involved.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

(a) Advance Factory Build

(i) 1983-84

Cillefwr Ind Est, Carmathen 8 units totalling 9k sq ft.
Whitland Ind Est, Whitland 12 units totalling 24k sq ft.

Salterns Ind Est, Tenby 17 units totalling 32k sq ft.

(iii) 1986-87

Kingswood Ind Est, Pembroke Dock 4 units totalling 5k sq ft

Bespoke extension of 1k sq ft for Neyland Training Initiative at Great Honyborough, Milford Haven.

(iii) 1988-89

Bespoke extension of 4k sq ft for Record Wire Wheels at Llandovery.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if there are proposals under consideration in any of the regional offices of the Welsh Development Agency for contracting out (a) services currently provided by the Welsh Development Agency in the investment and business advisory field or (b) work as local agents for land reclamation, urban renewal and inward investment;

(2) what consideration has been given to contracting out services currently provided by the west Wales region of the Welsh Development Agency in the fields of (a) investment and business advice, (b) land reclamation, (c) urban renewal and (d) inward investment; and if he will provide details.

Mr. Peter Walker: I would expect the Welsh Development Agency to keep under continuing review opportunities for private sector involvement. I would naturally consider any proposal put to me by the agency for contracting out services where this would guarantee an equivalent or better level of service and a lesser cost to the taxpayer. There are, however, no such proposals before me at present.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply of 5 July, Official Report, column 181, how much of the 62,000 sq ft of factory building in west Wales referred to has been completed to date.

Mr. Peter Walker: As I informed the hon. Gentleman in the reply to which he refers, the agency intends to start work on this factory space in the current financial year.

NHS Hospitals

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many National Health Service hospitals in use today in Wales were built (a) before 1914 and (b) before 1939; and how many National Health Service hospitals have been started since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information on the number of hospitals built before 1939 is not available centrally. Since 1979, seven new hospitals have been built and one is due for completion at the end of this year. Major developments have been started at three existing hospitals. Many other smaller developments have been built since 1979 or are in the process of construction throughout Wales. Since 1979, £700 million (at 1989-90 prices) will have been invested in the capital estates of hospital and community health services in Wales.

Planning Applications

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what directions are given to Cadw to resolve planning applications by negotiation rather than by public inquiry; and if he will investigate the relative cost to his Department of resolving queries on applications by (a) negotiation and (b) by public inquiry under section 33 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971.

Mr. Peter Walker: In additon to its functions in relation to listed buildings, Cadw's role as a branch of my Department is to advise both myself and local authorities, as planning authorities, on the effect of development proposals on ancient monuments. While Cadw is willing to discuss proposals and alternative schemes with developers before a planning application is made, it will also in appropriate cases maintain objections to development for which an application has been made and ask me to consider calling it in for my own determination. Where I agree, the public inquiry that follows ensures compliance with the principles of openness, fairness and impartiality and serves to maintain public confidence in the quality of decisions and the process by which they are reached. Negotiation on alternative proposals is not possible once the application is called in and is thus not an alternative to negotiation before the application; nor can costs be usefully compared.

ESA Payments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the policy of Welsh Water in respect of the clawback of ESA payments made to tenants of farms in Welsh Water's ownership.

Mr. Peter Walker: This is a matter for the board of that authority.

Land (Public Ownership)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what records he maintains of land acquired into public ownership for allotment purposes; and for how long these records have been kept.

Mr. Peter Walker: None. Records on land acquired for allotment purposes are not held centrally.

Football Spectators Bill (Working Party)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many of his working party on the Football Spectators Bill represent non-Football League clubs in Wales;

(2) whether he will list the members of his working party on the Football Spectators Bill, and their status and qualifications.

Mr. Peter Walker: Membership is as follows:

Mr. Richard Wallace (Chairman), Under Secretary, Welsh Office.
Mr. Robin Baker, Superintendent, North Wales Police.
Mr. Haydn Davies, Assistant Chief Constable, South Wales Constabulary.
Mr. Chris Whalley, Community Affairs Officer, The Football League Ltd.
Mr. Alan Evans, Secretary, Football Association of Wales.
Mr. Tony Clemo, Chairman, Cardiff City AFC.
Mr. Tony Rance, General Manager, Wrexham AFC.
Mr. George Taylor, Company Secretary, Swansea City AFC.
Mr. Linford Tatham, Director, Sports Council for Wales.
Mr. David Powell (Secretary), Senior Executive Officer, Welsh Office.

The Football Association of Wales represents the interests of football at all levels, and the Sports Council for Wales is concerned with sport as a whole, including football.

TRANSPORT

Airport Security

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if any categories of person will be exempt from security searches when moving between the air and land sides at Britain's 19 principal airports, when he introduces new security regulations in October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The requirements for certain airports to search personnel working at the airport before they enter restricted areas was promulgated in directions under the Aviation Security Act issued by the Department on 5 April. The search requirements come into force on 1 October. The only people who will be exempt are staff engaged on certain aviation security duties and persons (such as police officers, Customs and immigration officials) acting in the course of statutory duties which give them a right of entry to such areas in order to carry out those duties. The directions require airport managers to endeavour to persuade persons with statutory rights of entry to consent to being searched, and the Department has reached agreement with the police, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and the immigration service on the regime which will apply to their staff.

Transport (Elderly and Disabled People)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre inspectors are reclassifying vehicles used in dial-a-ride and similar schemes for elderly and disabled people in Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish what information he has on the effect of removing vehicle excise duty exemption from ambulance class vehicles used in dial-a-ride schemes for elderly and disabled people.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I will write to the hon. Lady.

Flights (Cancellation)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many flights in and out of United Kingdom airports had to be cancelled as a result of staffing shortages at West Drayton on each day of the week commencing 1 July; and if he will make a statement on the extent of and reasons for the shortages.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall ask the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to write to the hon. Member.

London-Manchester Shuttle

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ask the Director General of Fair Trading to investigate the British Airways shuttle service between Manchester and London to see if they have sufficient staff, planes, equipment and air traffic slots to provide the service as advertised.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. We are not aware of any evidence to suggest that British Airways lacks sufficient staff, aircraft, or equipment to operate the service adequately. Air traffic control slots can be requested only by the operator up to 2¼ hours before take-off, and the timing of the slots allocated depend on the traffic conditions prevailing at the time.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with British Rail in producing a business plan for the Channel tunnel rail link; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have asked British Rail to prepare an outline investment appraisal of its proposals for the Channel tunnel rail link.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice has been given to date by the independent Safety Authority to the Intergovernmental Commission on the Channel tunnel on whether people should remain in their own road vehicles whilst in transit through the Channel tunnel; and what further advice is expected from the commission and on what time scale.

Mr. Portillo: In 1988, the Safety Authority recommended to the Intergovernmental Commission that design work for the Channel tunnel project could continue on the assumption that passengers in private cars would be allowed to remain in their vehicles in shuttle trains. A final decision on this was subject to Eurotunnel producing further evidence about the procedures and arrangements required to ensure the safety of passengers (for example, dealing with emergencies, fire detection and extinction etc.). A substantial amount of further work has been carried out by Eurotunnel, in particular tests on vehicle fires and procedures for the evacuation of passengers in emergencies. The Safety Authority is currently evaluating this and other relevant evidence as a basis for its eventual advice to the Intergovernmental Commission on the principle of the non-segregation of passengers and their vehicles. Decisions are likely to be reached by the commission before the end of the year and will be made public.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the debt outstanding on the Severn bridge for each year since the bridge opened and the toll revenue collected each year since it opened.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figures are as follows:

1966-67	0·33	13·62
1967-68	0·74	14·55
1968-69	0·81	14·97

A1 (Motorway Status)

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects his Department's consideration of converting the whole of the A1 from London to the North East to motorway status to be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 10 July 1989]: We will be commissioning studies by consultants shortly. They will involve a good deal of work. The aim is to complete these and other studies announced in the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" in time for the next regular road programme review.

EMPLOYMENT

Grant Aid

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much in total grant aid has been made available under the following schemes for each of the last five years (a) assistance with fares to work scheme, (b) adaptation to premises and equipment scheme and (c) personal reader service scheme.

Mr. Lee: The information requested on (a) the assistance with fares to work (FTW) scheme, (b) the adaptation to premises and equipment (APE) scheme and (c) the personal reader service (PRS) scheme is as follows:

Special Aids to Employment Scheme

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the approximate cost of the special aids to employment scheme for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: The cost of the special aids to employment scheme for each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	Cost £
1984-85	927,000
1985-86	1,094,000
1986-87	1,700,000
1987-88	2,319,000
1988-89	3,361,000

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the job interview guarantee scheme.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 20 June 1989]: The job interview guarantee will link the assistance already available through jobclubs and the employment service with new measures to enable longer term unemployed people to take job vacancies.

These will include a job preparation course, tailored to meet employers' specific needs and "work trials", which offer short periods of work experience with potential employers to unemployed people while they remain on benefit. Where people need training for the vacancies on offer, training under employment training tailored to the employer's needs may be made available.

In return, employers will enter into agreements with the employment service under which they guarantee to interview unemployed people who have taken one of these options for the vacancies they have available.

The cities in which the job interview guarantee scheme will be piloted have now been chosen. They are:

Dundee
Glasgow
Newcastle
Sunderland
Leeds
Lower Don Valley (Sheffield/Rotherham)
Manchester
Salford
Liverpool
Birmingham
Wolverhampton
Nottingham
Leicester
London—Spitafields
Docklands
Southwark/Lewisham
Bristol
Plymouth (Davenport)
Cardiff
Merthyr Tydfil

The scheme will be targeted on selected disadvantaged areas within these cities.

Preparatory work in these locations is under way, and it is hoped that the first agreements will be made within the next few weeks.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what statistical information he has as to the reasons given to applicants by social fund officers at the local office in Durham City for the nil awards in respect of an application for community care grants.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration the Minister for the Disabled has given to the report from the National Deaf Children's Society entitled "A Good Deal for Deaf Children"; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I have not yet received a copy of the report, but I look forward with interest to reading it.

Private Residential Homes

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the maximum weekly payment made by his Department in Bradford to support elderly people in private residential homes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not available on this basis. Help through income support with the fees of residential care homes in Bradford is subject to the national limits. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the current limits on 27 October 1988 at column 483.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the difference between charges levied by private residential homes in Bradford and the maximum weekly payment made by his Department to support elderly people living in such homes; what is the current minimum and maximum difference in Bradford; how many elderly people have been evicted from residential homes in Bradford in the last 12 months because of inability to pay fees; how many elderly people are now under notice to leave private residential homes because of inability to pay fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Help with fees in an independent residential care home can be available through income support, subject to national limits. The level of a person's charges is a matter for him and the proprietor to agree based on the services to be provided. We have had representations from Bradford and elsewhere about the levels of income support in relation to fees charged by homes. However, it is not our policy to meet all fees, however high, and the levels of income support are enough to meet the fees in the majority of cases. The Department does not collect information on the remaining points.

HEALTH

Cyclotron Machine (St. Thomas's Hospital)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what grounds his Department decided to consult interested parties before making his decision to provide funds for the purchase of a cyclotron machine for St. Thomas's hospital; and if he will list the groups he consulted.

Mr. Freeman: No external advice was received before the decision was taken to contribute to the charitable funds being raised by the Cyclotron Trust.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends to continue to provide 60 per cent. of the funds for the running costs of the cyclotron machine at St. Thomas's hospital in the light of concern over the safety of the machine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have undertaken to meet up to 60 per cent. of the direct running costs of the cyclotron once it begins to operate, in so far as these are not met from other sources. We have given careful consideration to the views that have so far been expressed by the medical profession, but they have not produced any evidence which would cause us to change our views of the proposed project.

Motor Neurone Disease

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the mortality statistics for motor neurone disease for each year from 1959 for which data is available.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table.

Similarly from 1968 to 1978 motor neurone disease was classified to ICD 8th revision ICD code 348 and from 1979 onwards 9th revision ICD code 325.2 was used.
[2]Provisional.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the research projects on motor neurone disease funded by the Department in each year since 1959 for which data are available and the level of funding provided.

Mr. Freeman: At present, the health and personal social services research programme does not include any research specifically into motor neurone disease (MND). However, the Department of Health does fund a number of studies about service delivery where MND sufferers would be among the service users. These studies are as follows:

(a) Research on aspects of physiotherapy provision, carried out by the Centre for Physiotherapy Research at King's college, London.

(b) Research on speech therapy provision, in particular;
a study of Communication Aid Centres being carried out by Dr. Anne Chamberlain at Leeds; a study on speech therapy services (demands and staffing) being undertaken by Dr. Philip Davies at Oxford.

(c) Research on disability generally is relevant to MND. An important example is the OPCS disability survey which, of course, includes MND sufferers.

A full list of earlier research into MND is not readily available. However, the Department's handbook of research and development, published annually, contains information about all directly funded research. Copies are available in the Library.

Disabled People

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has a specific policy on giving financial support to voluntary organisations dealing with disabilities which are run by the disabled.

Mr. Freeman: The major considerations in determining support to voluntary organisations dealing with disabilities are the services they offer to disabled people and the resources available. A number of organisations that we currently support are run by disabled people.

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department intends to review its level of funding to the British Council of Organisations of Disabled People.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is currently considering an application from the British Council of Organisations of Disabled People for funds under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 for the period 1989-90 to 1991-92.

Organ Transplants

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines have been issued by his Department relating to the removal and transplantation of organs from anacephalic infants.

Mr. Freeman: The Chief Medical Officer wrote to regional medical officers on 1 February 1988 (PL/CMO(88)3). This letter drew to their attention a report of the working party, from the conference of medical royal colleges on organ transplantation in neonates. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Expenditure

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cumulative total of his Department's expenditure since May 1979 to date over and above the expenditure level prevailing in May 1979.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 June 1989]: Between 1979-80 and 1989-90 total gross expenditure on the health and personal social services programme in England has increased by nearly 36 per cent. in real terms. The table shows gross expenditure in each year since 1979-80 at 1989-90 prices and the cumulative real terms increases during this period:

HPSS Gross Expenditure 1979-80 to 1989-90 at Current Prices

Compensation Payments

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by regional health authority, the number of compensation payments made exceeding £100,000 paid in each year from 1984-85 to 1987-88.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 3 July 1989]: The number of compensation payments exceeding £100,000 notified to the Department in each year 1984-85 to 1987-88, together with the amounts involved, is as follows:

NATIONAL FINANCE

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lawson: The ECOFIN Council met in Brussels on 10 July. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed the economic situation in the Community and the Commission's second quarterly review; and confirmed the economic policy guidelines set out in the 1988-89 annual economic report adopted last December. The Commission and the presidency explained their plans for implementing the decisions on European monetary union reached at the recent European Council at Madrid.

War Graves (VAT)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in which year and on whose authority value added tax was first imposed on the maintenance of United States war graves in the United Kingdom; when and on whose authority war graves in the United Kingdom and European Economic Community nations were exempted from such value added tax charges; and when he proposes taking action to ensure that the war graves of our American and Commonwealth allies are not less favourably treated than those of our former enemies.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 6 July 1989]: In 1985 Her Majesty's Customs and Excise ruled that suplies in the United Kingdom of goods and services for the American Battle Monuments Commission were chargeable with VAT.

There was an exchange of notes between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States of America in 1952 regarding relief from taxation of United States Government expenditures in the United Kingdom. Information is not presently available on the position in other countries of the European Communities.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is looking into the background to the ruling in 1985 to see whether it was correct then and is appropriate now.

Manufactured Goods (Imports)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he intends to take to increase the volume of information provided by Customs and Excise marketing agents relating to imported manufactured goods; and how he intends to make the information available to British manufacturers.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 10 July 1989]: Customs and Excise is now making available to its approved marketing agents, in addition to traditional United Kingdom trade statistical data, the names and addresses of consignees shown on import declarations, listed against the commodities they import. This new facility has been available since 22 May 1989. The information covers importations from 1 January 1989 and is updated monthly. Commodities are distinguished by an appropriate commodity code; these are published in the Customs and Excise tariff. In most cases information is made available at the more detailed nine-digit level, but in some instances it is provided at a less detailed level where to provide at nine-digit level would lead to disclosure of confidential quantity and value data. Information covers the whole range of imported, including manufactured, goods.

The marketing agents will supply the information in a form and manner which is convenient to their customers, and at an attractive price. British manufacturers who wish to obtain this data should therefore contact a marketing agent. This new service was announced by Customs and Excise in a press notice dated 1 June 1989 in which the names and addresses of the approved agents are listed.

Barclays Bank

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what mention was made in the discussions or negotiations with Barclays bank over the charge to value added tax for the redevelopment of its new headquarters of the bank's co-operation with the Government scheme for top-up loans.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 July 1989]: None.

ESA Payments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the policy of the Crown Estate Commissioners in respect of the clawback of ESA payments made to tenants of farms within the estate.

Mr. Lawson: The only designated environmentally sensitive areas which affect the Crown Estate are in Wales.

The Crown Estate Commissioners are content that either commoners with registered rights or tenants on the Crown Estate within environmentally sensitive areas should, if they so wish, enter the ESA scheme without any payment to the Crown Estate.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Television Licences

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what would be the total cost of allowing pensioner households currently holding a colour television licence to pay only a monochrome licence fee; and what would be the additional cost per licence for non-pensioner licence holders if this additional cost was met through increases in the licence fee.

Mr. Renton: The cost would be about £260 million a year in terms of revenue lost to the BBC, which would mean that other licence holders would have to pay about £22 more for their licences.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of television licences and the number of households; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: It is estimated that there are about 22,150,000 households in the United Kingdom, the Channel islands and the Isle of Man. As at 31 May 1989 there were 19,440,211 television licences in force.

Police National Computer

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the County NatWest report into the future of the police national computer organisation; if he will place a copy in the Library; what assessment he has made of considerations of security, accountability and public confidence which are addressed in the report; and what action he proposes to take on the recommendations contained therein.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The County NatWest report was received on 22 May; a copy of that part relating to the future of the police national computer organisation has been placed in the Library. The Department is now consulting senior management, the trade unions, the local authorities and the police service on its findings, including the issues referred to by the hon. Member. We shall be considering carefully the report's recommendations, together with the results of this consultation process, in due course.

Racial Hatred

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to seek additional powers to control and prevent static rallies likely to stir up racial hatred.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In its White Paper "Review of Public Order Law" (Cmnd 9510, May 1985), the Government concluded that the likelihood of incitement of racial hatred should not be a ground for banning a procession and that there should be no power to ban public assemblies. It is an offence under part III of the Public Order Act 1986 to use threatening, abusive or insulting words or behaviour or to publish or distribute material which is intended or likely to stir up racial hatred.

Broadcasting

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will respond to the speech of the hon. Member for Warwick and Leamington on 13 June, Official Report, columns 871-72, on how hard pornography emanating from an established European television channel can be prevented from being transmitted in the United Kingdom by satellite or other means.

Mr. Renton: I wrote to my hon. Friend on this subject on 6 July. In that letter I said:

"It was to avoid precisely this sort of problem that we were keen to secure agreement on provisions in the Council of Europe convention on transfrontier television which would preserve acceptable standards of taste and decency. I am pleased to say that we were successful in that objective. Article 7 of the convention requires that programmes should not be indecent or contain pornography. This is also reflected in article 22 of the draft directive, which places on broadcasters a responsibility to ensure that they do not transmit programmes which might seriously impair the physical, mental or moral development of minors, in particular those that involve pornography or gratuitous violence."

Immigration

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the flow of people of Indian sub-continent cultural origin into and out of the United Kingdom in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement as to the reasons, where applicable, for the imbalance in the flows.

Mr. Renton: The information is not available in the form requested. "People of Indian sub-continent cultural origin" include British passport holders.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the net inflow of visitors from Hong Kong in each of the last eight weeks; and what was the comparable figure in 1988.

Mr. Renton: It is not possible from the available information to provide the figures requested.

Prison Officers' Houses

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to the answer of 10 July, Official Report, column 358, who purchased the 39 prison officers' houses at Culcheth: why they had remained vacant for between seven and eight years; and at what price he expects to sell the six houses that became vacant during 1988-89.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The 39 prison officers' houses at Culcheth were purchased by Beazer Urban Developments Limited. Properties had remained vacant and surplus to requirements for between seven and eight years for a variety of reasons. These included the need to ascertain whether any would be needed to accommodate staff from the new prison at Thorn Cross, which opened in 1985; the need to clarify the requirements of the local authority as regards upgrading the roads and sewers to make them suitable for adoption; and the need to negotiate an easement for a new rising pumped main through adjoining land. The prices of the six houses that became vacant during 1988-89 have yet to be finally determined by the district valuer, but are likely to be in the region of £45,000 for the five three bedroom semi-detached houses, and £30,000 for the two bedroom semi-detached house.

Mr. K. Hussain

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mr. K. Hussain, whose reference is H4/8/12/88, first applied for British citizenship; and when a decision is to be taken on his application.

Mr. Renton: As the hon. Member knows, we have been unable to trace this application on the reference given. To do so we would need Mr. Hussain's full name and his date and place of birth. I shall write to the hon. Member once we have this information.

DEFENCE

Weapons Displays (Council Bans)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to how many councils have placed a ban on static weapon displays by the armed forces on council property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Five councils have asked that the armed forces should exclude or limit displays of weapons when mounting recruiting or promotional events in their areas.

Independent Schools

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many independent schools in respect of which grants were available to service families have ceased to be eligible for such funds in the last five years; and if he will state the reasons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is nothing I can add to the answer which was given to my hon. Friend on 9 June at column 257.

Army Polo Teams

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that every serving Army officer is made aware of the content of his reply to the hon. Member for Northampton, North on 6 July, Official Report, column 266.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no need to draw the attention of every serving Army officer to the reply of 6 July. In this matter, as in any other, an officer who is in any doubt should consult the regimental adjutant or his commanding officer.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when West Glamorgan county council is to be informed of the nuclear-powered warship safety committee's decision regarding berthing of nuclear submarines at Swansea; to whom it is to be communicated; what form the consultation with the council will take; what issues it will cover; and what powers the council has to stop the use of such a berth at the port.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 13 July 1989]: The Ministry of Defence will be in touch with the chief executive of West Glamorgan county council as soon as the Royal Navy is ready to proceed. A public safety plan will need to be drawn up in consultation with council, fire, police and health officials. The disposition of naval vessels is a matter which affects national security, and as such it must remain the responsibility of central rather than local government. A defence policy can be effective only if applied on a national basis.

SCOTLAND

Voluntary Services

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list those hospitals in which WRVS or other voluntary bodies' facilities for the provision of patients' and or relatives' services have been either removed or reduced;

(2) why facilities made available to the WRVS at Stirling Royal infirmary have been reduced.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Proposals to remove or reduce the facilities used by the WRVS or other voluntary bodies for the provision of services to patients and others are a matter for the health board responsible for the hospital, in consultation with the voluntary body concerned. Information on this is not held centrally, but I am not aware of any case where the health board and the voluntary body have failed to reach an agreement.

Forth Valley health board and the WRVS discussed the future of the WRVS canteen at Stirling Royal infirmary because wards in the immediate vicinity of its site were being relocated. Both parties concluded that the canteen should move to a new site in the maternity-gynaecology block nearby. The new canteen opened during May. WRVS facilities have not been reduced since the existing canteen has also been kept open because not all the wards have yet been relocated. No final decision has been taken about the future of the site.

I have written recently in response to a letter from the Scottish chairman of the WRVS, emphasising my appreciation for the work of such organisations, which is greatly appreciated by health boards and, most important, by patients and their relatives.

Scottish Health Service Advisory Council

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Scottish Health Service Advisory Council will be able to initiate and pursue matters without prior approval by himself; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The remit of the Scottish Health Service Advisory Council is:

"Where requested by or agreed with the Secretary of State to advise him on the exercise of his functions under the National Health Service Acts and to give advice on good practice to Health Boards, other Health Managers and those delivering Health Services."

Lothian Health Board

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the attendance of each of his appointments to Lothian health board together with the possible totals, for each member of the board and its sub-committees for the years (a) 1987-88, (b) 1988-89 and (c) 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Appointments

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many posts in Scottish institutions of higher education funded directly by his Department have been filled without advertisment over the period from 1983 to June 1989.

Mr. Lang: The arrangements for filling staff vacancies in the grant-aided colleges are for the college authorities to determine. The information requested is not collected by the Scottish Education Department.

Transport (Elderly and Disabled People)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish what information he has on the number of dial-a-ride and similar schemes for the elderly and disabled currently operating in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the number of dial-a-ride and similar schemes operating in Scotland is not held centrally.

Dental Education

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what decision he has reached on whether to reduce places for dental education in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The report of the working party to review dental provision in Scotland made recommendations for reductions in places for dental education in Scotland. With the agreement of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science, my right hon. and learned Friend sent the report to the Universities Funding Council and asked the council to consider the working party's advice in reaching decisions on undergraduate dental education.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the proportions of dental school graduates from the three dental schools in Scotland who stayed on to practice in Scotland, giving the information broken down by school and for each year since 1977 for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not held centrally in the form requested, but studies in recent years suggest that under 50 per cent. of the graduates of the Edinburgh school practice in Scotland whereas well over 50 per cent. of the graduates of the Dundee and Glasgow schools do so.

Gaelic Broadcasting

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to back the case for a Gaelic broadcasting council funded on a similar basis to S4C.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 13 July 1989]: The implications of the recent White Paper for Gaelic broadcasting are still under consideration. An announcement will be made in due course.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Eggs

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to define in egg marketing regulations a fresh egg; and whether he intends to make sell-by stickers compulsory.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The egg marketing standards regulations of the European Community define quality standards for "fresh eggs", and require that the date or period of packing should be shown on the pack and provide that a sell-by date may also be added.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to introduce heavier fines for shops found selling bad eggs or other produce; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Eggs (Marketing Standards) Regulations 1985 already prescribe a substantial fine of up to £2,000 for an offence relating to the marketing of substandard eggs. Under the Food Act 1984 it is an offence to sell unfit food. The maximum fine applicable is again £2,000. In each particular case it is for the courts to decide upon the appropriate level of fine within the maximum.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to initiate further spot checks in the United Kingdom to test the quality of eggs; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The egg marketing inspectorate already carries out a systematic schedule of inspection visits to egg packing centres and wholesalers, and provides technical assistance to trading standards officers at retail outlets, to ensure that eggs meet with requirements for quality, weight and labelling as prescribed by the egg marketing standards regulations of the European Community.

Anthrax

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any record of anthrax being confirmed in any wild animals during the last 10 years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Anthrax is not notifiable in animals in the wild and there are no records of cases having occurred in Great Britain.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what steps he is taking to determine the cause of the current outbreak of anthrax in Wales;

(2) whether he has any evidence of contaminated animal feed being the cause of the current outbreak of anthrax in Wales.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Detailed epidemiological investigations have been undertaken including attempts to culture anthrax from food hoppers and environmental supplies. All results have been negative.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the incubation period of anthrax in (a) humans, (b) cattle, (c) sheep and (d) pigs.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The incubation period of anthrax in animals is variable in all species and can range from 24 hours to 14 days. In man, incubation can be up to seven days, and is normally between two and five days.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in the light of the current outbreak of anthrax in Wales, he will now introduce a compulsory slaughter and compensation scheme in respect of this disease.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of anthrax have been recorded in the United Kingdom in each of the farm animal species during each of the last five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is set out as follows:

1988 3 cattle
1987 6 cattle
1986 12 cattle; 2 sheep; 1 horse
1985 6 cattle
1984 9 cattle

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the susceptibility of bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle to other bovine ailments.

Mr. Donald Thompson: BSE-infected cattle are susceptible to all other bovine ailments.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Prisons (Education Services)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the amount of financial assistance given at present by the Inner London education authority towards education services at each London prison.

Mrs. Rumbold: The responsibility for education in Her Majesty's prisons rests with the Home Office. It discharges this responsibility by contracting with the relevant local education authorities to provide an education service to prisons. The Inner London education authority provides this service to Her Majesty's prisons in London. The cost of this provision is met by the Home Office.

Special Needs

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will use his powers under the Education Act 1981 to ensure compliance with the terms of the Act by the seven local education authorities which have failed to offer assessment and statementing procedures for more than 80 per cent. of children in their special schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Department has considered the statements made in the fact sheet written by Mr. Will Swann and published recently by the Centre for Studies on Integration in Education (CSIE), in the light of the latest available statistical returns. A number of local education authorities have been asked for further information about the number of pupils who attend special schools and do not have statements of special educational needs. In the light of their replies the Secretary of State will consider what further action may need to be taken.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he is giving to those local authorities where the proportion of children with special needs segregated in special schools is increasing.

Mr. Butcher: It is for local education authorities to decide how they arrange to make the special educational provision required by pupils for whom they have made a statement of special educational needs. Section 2(2) of the Education Act 1981 places LEAs under a duty to secure that pupils with statements are educated in an ordinary school subject to the conditions described in section 2(3) of that Act. The Department will shortly be issuing a revised circular of guidance regarding the implementation of the 1981 Act.

Community Charge

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether head teachers will be required to notify community charge registration officers of the names and home addresses of all pupils in secondary education over 18 years of age.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. Community charge registration officers are not empowered to demand information other than from precepting or charging authorities or to approach schools directly.

Independent Schools

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many independent schools have been closed following a notice of complaint in the last five years.

Mr. Butcher: Since April 1984, five independent schools have closed following the issue of a notice of complaint.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to introduce an accreditation for independent schools supervised by Her Majesty's inspectorate.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce an accreditation scheme for independent schools.

Dental Education

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the proportion of students admitted to each of the three dental schools in Scotland in October 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983 who graduated on time, and the proportion who failed to graduate in dentistry; and what the corresponding proportions are for dental schools in the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Jackson: Information is not available centrally which directly relates graduate output with entrants to dentistry courses. The numbers of graduates in clinical dentistry in each of the three dental schools in Scotland in the last four years were as follows:

	1985	1986	1987	1988
Dundee	48	n/a	33	44
Edinburgh	45	53	47	36
Glasgow	60	67	63	70
All United Kingdom	830	n/a	731	729

n/a not available.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has asked the Universities Funding Council to reach a decision on the undergraduate education recommendations of the report on dental provision in Scotland.

Mr. Jackson: With the agreement of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has sent the report of the review of dental provision in Scotland to the Universities Funding Council, and asked the council to consider the working party's advice in reaching decisions on undergraduate dental education.

Motor Neurone Disease

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase funding for research into cause and treatment of motor neurone disease, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The main agency through which the Government fund medical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives a grant-in-aid from this Department. The council's grant for 1989-90 is £176 million, an increase of 17 per cent. over its grant for 1988-89 of £150 million. The council itself determines the allocation of the funds at its disposal. The council is always willing to consider soundly-based proposals for new research programmes in competition with other proposals.

Dental Schools (Scotland)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish figures on the average academic attainment in terms of points scores in Scottish certificate of education highers and general certificate of education A-levels for entrants to the three Scottish dental schools and also the number of applicants per place for each school for each of the last nine years.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not collected by the Department.

Grant-maintained Status

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will clarify the role of teacher governors in decisions by school governing bodies on whether to ballot parents on grant-maintained status.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government's intention, as reflected in the provisions of the Education Reform Act, is that teacher governors should play a full part in a decision on whether to ballot parents about grant-maintained status for the school. I am considering what amendments might be made to the School Government Regulations 1987 to ensure they reflect that intention. Revised regulations will be brought into force at the beginning of the next school year.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fermanagh (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when any junior Minister from the Northern Ireland Office last visited either Newtownbutler or Rosslea Royal Ulster Constabulary station in south-east Fermanagh; and what was the cost of the security operation thus entailed.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No Minister has visited Newtownbutler or Rosslea RUC station recently.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa (Nuclear Missile Test)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any information on the Republic of South Africa's plans to test a nuclear capable intermediate-range ballistic missile system developed with the aid of Israel.

Mr. Waldegrave: Although we are aware of recent press reports on this subject, we cannot substantiate them. We have, however, instructed Her Majesty's embassies in Pretoria and Tel Aviv to inquire with the relevant authorities about the validity of the reports.

Tibet

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to monitor the internal situation (a)

in Tibet in general and (b) in Lhasa in particular, with regard to possible human rights abuses by Chinese forces; what representations he has made in 1989 to the Chinese authorities regarding their occupation of Tibet; what steps he is taking to pursue the proposal put forward by the Dalai Lama for a self-governing Tibet under Chinese sovereignty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Although the imposition of martial law has reduced the outward flow of information on Tibet, the British embassy in Peking continues to monitor the situation closely by all available means. We have made clear to the Chinese authorities on many occasions the real concern in this country about human rights in Tibet. While we continue to believe that the most promising solution to the problem of Tibet is through dialogue between the Chinese Government and the Tibetan people, including the Dalai Lama, our immediate concern in recent weeks has been to bring home to the Chinese authorities our sense of shock and outrage at the brutality with which they suppressed those who were demonstrating for democracy in Peking.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he is having with the Government of Cyprus as to threats that Turkish people leaving Bulgaria could be settled in the Turkish-occupied town of Famagusta; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Turkish Cypriot offer to resettle ethnic Turkish refugees from Bulgaria in Varosha, the sector of Famagusta controlled by the Turkish army, was one of a number of topics I discussed with President Vassiliou on 10 July. We agreed that implementation of that offer would adversely affect the prospects for negotiation of a settlement of the Cyprus problem through the current intercommunal talks.

French Revolution

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy not to join in celebrations of Bastille day in France on 14 July or the bicentenary of the French revolution.

Mrs. Chalker: France is a close ally and partner. My right hon. and learned Friend will be in Paris on 14 to 16 July for the ceremonies marking the bicentenary of the French revolution and the declaration of the rights of man, followed by the Economic Summit.

Human Rights

Mr. Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about the denial of human rights in the last five years in Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Eggar: We have made a number of representations about human rights to the Czechoslovakian authorities over the last five years, but the precise information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about denial of human rights in the last five years in Burkina.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about denial of human rights and the use of torture in the last five years in Barbados.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about the denial of human rights in the last five years in Brunei.

Mr. Eggar: None. We expressed concern about certain aspects of human rights in Brunei at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. The Brunei Government are aware of our concern.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about denial of human rights in the last five years in Burundi.

Mr. Eggar: We have made a number of representations to the Burundi authorities about human rights over the last five years. Following the ethnic violence last August we made a demarche to the Government of Burundi in concert with our EC partners. We are pleased to note the recent efforts of the Burundi Government to improve the human rights situation.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about denial of human rights in the last five years in Bhutan.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about denial of human rights in the last five years in Cyprus.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about denial of human rights in the last five years in Kiribati.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has made complaining about denial of human rights in the last five years in the Marshall Islands.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the hours of opening at the following posts (a) New Delhi, (b) Bombay, (c) Dhaka, (d) Islamabad, (e) Karachi, (f) Nairobi and (g) Dar Es-Salaam; and how many staff were employed at each post dealing with entry clearance matters on 1 January and for each of the 10 years before.

Mr. Eggar: This information is not readily available. I will reply to the hon. Member in due course.

Mr. I. A. Alikazi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mr. Irfan Abdul Alikazi, whose date of birth is 13 October 1969, first applied to the post in Bombay to enter the United Kingdom; on what dates he has been interviewed at the post; and when a decision is to be taken on his application.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not readily available. A further reply will be sent to the hon. Member in due course.

Mr. M. Yasin

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mr. Mohd Yasin, who was born in 1962 and whose reference is SN 81140, first applied to the post in Islamabad to enter the United Kingdom; and when a decision is going to be taken on his application.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not readily available. A further reply will be sent to the hon. Member in due course.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

No-fault Compensation

Mr. Hind: To ask the Attorney-General what progress has been made with Recommendation 62 of the Review Body on Civil Justice that consideration should be given to the feasibility of a no-fault scheme for less serious road accidents.

The Solicitor-General: The Government have accepted the recommendation of the report of the review body on civil justice that the Lord Chancellor should consider the feasibility of a no-fault compensation scheme, restricted to less serious road accidents and financed by private insurance.

The review body pointed out that a number of advantages might flow from the introduction of such a scheme. It suggested that it would reduce uncertainty for claimants, avoid the delays and costs associated with litigation and, by removing disputes from the courts, reduce pressure on the court system.

On the other hand, as the review body made clear, one disadvantage of such a scheme is that motor insurance premiums could rise. Such a proposal gives rise to a number of other difficult issues, including the threshold of seriousness that will determine whether an accident falls outside the scheme; whether it should cover accidents where the highway authority is held to have been at fault; and whether certain categories of driver, for example, drinking drivers, should be excluded from the scheme. There is also the danger that such a scheme could undermine efforts of insurance companies to make drivers who cause accidents bear some of the costs through higher premiums. These difficult issues will need to be carefully studied and weighed alongside the possible advantages before any such scheme can be taken forward.

As the review body proposed, consideration of the feasibility of introducing such a scheme will be the subject of consultation with the insurance industry. Other interested parties, including the motoring organisations, will also be invited to submit their views. Since no-fault insurance schemes are already in operation in various other countries, including New Zealand and a number of states in the United States, the study will need to take account of the experience of these countries.

It must be emphasised that this is a feasibility study, and it would therefore be wrong to assume at this stage that it will necessarily result in a change in existing arrangements.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish illustrative figures for 1989-90 in respect of Her Majesty's Government's new system of local government finance so that comparison can be made with current local government taxes.

Mr. Gummer: I hope to publish illustrative figures for 1989-90 community charges later this month.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will tabulate what a typical married couple with two children and one wage-earner living in the London borough of Waltham Forest would pay (a) in community charge and (b) in a system of capital value rates plus local income tax paid in proportions of 80 to 20, respectively, if the wage earner earned (i) £10,000, (ii) £15,000, (iii) £20,000, (iv) £25,000 and (v) £30,000 and lived in (i) rented accommodation, (ii) property owned by that wage earner worth £60,000 and (iv) property owned by that wage earner worth £90,000, making the same assumptions as in his reply to the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) on 22 March at column 626.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is provided in the table.

Illustrative annual liability in Waltham Forest under a system of capital value rates combined with local income tax 1988-89

Earnings £	(i) and (ii) Property value £60,000 owned or rented £	(iii) Property value £90,000 owned or rented £	Illustrative community charge 1988-89 £
(i) 10,000	645	925	269
(ii) 15,000	715	995	269
(iii) 20,000	785	1,070	269
(iv) 25,000	860	1,140	269
(v) 30,000	930	1,210	269

The ability of a person in rented accommodation would be the same as for a person living in property owned by that person of the same value. The figures are based on the illustrative tax rates placed in the Library on 23 June 1988 and are for 1988-89. It is assumed that the family has no entitlement to rebates. Taxable income is taken as earnings less £4,095, the married man's allowance in each case.

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment from his latest information how much local authorities are planning to spend in 1988-89 and 1989-90 on (a) revenue and (b) capital in setting up the community charge; what were the comparable allowances made in the rate support grant settlement and in capital allocations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: On revenue, returns made by authorities in England show a provisional outturn of £33 million for 1988-89 and a budget figure of £203 million for 1989-90. On capital, the provisional outturn figure is £28 million for 1988-89. No figures are yet available for 1989-90. The resources made available to authorities are, on revenue, £110 million in the rate support grant settlement for 1989-90; and on capital, allocations of £25 million for 1988-89 and allocations of £135 million for 1989-90.

Football Matches (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of occasions when he or any of his Ministers visited a football ground or football match within (a) the last 12 months and (b) the last two years; and if he will state the grounds or matches visited.

Mr. Moynihan: I have attended the following football matches since my appointment as Minister for Sport:

Venue			Date
Charlton Athletic	v	Arsenal	3 October 1987
Tottenham Hotspur	v	Wimbledon	31 October 1987
Charlton Athletic	v	Chelsea	20 December 1987

Fulham	v	Bristol City	18 February 1989
Brentford	v	Bury	25 February 1989
Charlton Athletic	v	Manchester United	22 April 1989

I have also attended the FA Cup and Littlewoods Cup finals in 1988 and 1989 as well as attending international matches.

In addition I have visited the grounds of Reading FC, Liverpool FC and Aston Villa FC on non-match days.

I understand that my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning and my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Southampton Itchen (Mr. Chope), have also attended matches.

Shared Ownership Claims

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of shared ownership claims received by local authorities by each region in England and for England as a whole during each year from 1980-81 to 1988-89.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 10 July 1989]: The available information is shown in the table:

Right to buy shared ownership claims received by DOE region

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89

Yorkshire and Humberside	1	1	2	2	—
East Midlands	5	2	5	—	—
Eastern	10	18	7	7	8
London	49	78	29	25	33
South East	35	36	64	100	19

West Midlands	2	1	—	—	8
North West (including Cumbria)	14	6	—	—	—
England	122	150	111	136	70

Playgrounds

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the regulations covering the construction of children's playgrounds.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 13 July 1989]: The construction of childrens' playgrounds is not subject to regulation. However, British Standard BS 5696 recommends specifications for construction and performance of play equipment intended for permanent installation out of doors, and a code of practice for its installation and maintenance. The code of practice is currently under revision. Furthermore, a new British Standard BS 7188, which will specify methods of test for impact-absorbing playground surfaces, is to be published later this year.

Bristol Channel (Beaches)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will pay an official visit to the beaches along the English side of the Bristol channel, to observe the degree of pollution apparent both on the beach and in the sea.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 13 July 1989]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit the Bristol channel. He receives regular reports from the Wessex and South West water authorities on the quality of bathing waters along the English side of the Bristol channel, and local authorities are responsible for dealing with the pollution of beaches. Water authorities have been asked to draw up improvement programmes with the aim of bringing all bathing waters identified under the EEC bathing water directive into compliance by the mid-1990s.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take in the light of the findings of the Warren Spring laboratories on the problems associated with the United Kingdom chlorofluorocarbon bank contained in refrigeration equipment and plastic foam estimated to comprise 100,000 tonnes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 13 July 1989]: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced on 10 May that he was commissioning an independent study of the impact of business of the existing and envisaged control on emissions of ozone-depleting substances. The consultants engaged should deliver their report to him late this summer. The commissioning of a second phase at an early date is under consideration. It would study the technology-practical arrangements and economics of the recovery, recycling or destruction of such substances from products and industrial processes: this would cover the question of the CFC bank referred to by my hon. Friend.

National Rivers Authority

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many additional posts have been created in (a) the water authorities and (b) the National Rivers Authority as a result of the split of regulatory functions for each water authority region.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 13 July 1989]: The establishment of the National Rivers Authority as a separate regulatory body has been undertaken on the basis that the NRA must have the staff it needs to carry out its statutory functions. It is recognised that this may require some additional staff in the areas of pollution control, water resources and support services, but it is not possible to assess how many additional posts in either the water authorities or the NRA are specifically attributable to the separation of the regulatory functions beyond the 55 to 60 new posts at the NRA's central policy unit.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people will be employed by the National Rivers Authority for each regional unit on 1 September.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 13 July 1989]: The best estimate of the numbers of staff who will be employed in the regional units of the National Rivers Authority on 1 September is as follows:

	Number
Anglian	1,015
Northumbrian	130
North West	762
Severn Trent	784
Southern	543
South West	379
Thames	1,290
Welsh	664
Wessex	371
Yorkshire	531

These figures may be subject to minor changes between now and vesting day. In addition, there will be some 55 to 60 staff in the central policy unit in London.

K Formulae

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends (a) to issue and (b) to make public the K formulae for each water authority and each statutory water company.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 13 July 1989]: I intend if possible to issue decisions on K formulae to the water authorities and to announce those decisions within the next month. Ks for the statutory water companies will be finalised and announced later in the year.

EC Competition Policy

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has recently had discussions with the European Commissioner for Competition on the implications for European competition policy of water privatisation.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 13 July 1989]: I have had no recent discussions with the Commissioner, Sir Leon Brittan, who issued a statement on 7 February saying that the Commission had not found anything in the Government's water privatisation proposals which would raise problems as far as Community law is concerned in the fields of competition or company capital structure.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 156

SESSION 1988–89

3rd July–14th July 1989

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
